THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 3, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE LOUIS P. GÉLINAS

TRIBUTES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, it is good to see so many honourable senators back here, apparently in good health and rested, ready to resume their duties and responsibilities.

However, all of us were saddened to learn of the death in Montreal on New Year's Day of the Honourable Louis-Philippe Gélinas. Senator Gélinas, who was in failing health, had resigned his place in the Senate on December 10 last, as honourable senators are aware, but word of his resignation did not reach us until after the adjournment on December 20.

Senator Gélinas was one of the most distinguished and esteemed members of this chamber. He was born, educated and lived all his life in Montreal, the city he loved. He was a leading figure in the realm of finance, business and public life. Endowed with remarkable financial acumen and business motivation, he was the sole Canadian to sit as a director of the First National City Trust of New York. He was a gentleman of the old school, with great personal charm and a wide circle of friends. A humanitarian, he involved himself in a great number of charitable campaigns of which he was the moving spirit.

Senator Gélinas was a philanthropist interested in all worthy causes. He was a governor of the Montreal General Hospital and l'Hôpital Notre Dame, as well as of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra and the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts.

During World War II, Wing Commander Gélinas served with the Royal Canadian Air Force in Canada and overseas. He was awarded the decoration of Member of the British Empire. He also held the Czechoslovakia Medal of Merit. He was a man for all seasons, a gentle man, kind of heart and noble of spirit. He served his community, his province and his country faithfully and well.

To his wife, his son and the members of his family we extend our deepest and most heartfelt sympathy.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, it is superfluous for me to say that I share the sorrows expressed by the Leader of the Government on the occasion of the death of our colleague, Louis Philippe Gélinas. Indeed you all know that for him I had admiration, friendship and respect.

In Senator Gélinas I admired that type of gentleman which we used to meet more often in the past and which seems to be rarer nowadays, possibly because of the coming of the "new society" the Prime Minister promises us.

Always well dressed, always reserved, he really reminded us of the good old days when private enterprise was honourable and personal success in business never gave rise to suspicion.

I met him a very long time ago, but it is only since he came to the Senate that I really had the opportunity to appreciate him. We always shared a deep friendship.

I also had much respect for that really quite modest man. He understood the necessity for more or less partisan and political debates, but he could never get used to being involved in them. It was mainly when he sat on our committees that he felt at ease. The Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce more particularly benefited from his knowledge of economy and finance. Moreover, his advice in that field was sought and appreciated as shown by the various administrative boards to which he was appointed.

Our colleague served his country very well, not only as a financier and politician but also in the Canadian Air Force during the Second World War and as an active member of charitable organizations and art societies.

In expressing my regret on the death of a greatly esteemed colleague, I am acting as spokesman for the Opposition. He had only friends among us as in the entire house.

To his widow, a childhood friend for whom I have a high regard, and to all his family I convey our deep sympathy.

● (2010)

[English]

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, we have just heard two beautiful tributes to Senator Gélinas. When he came to this house about a dozen years ago, Senator Gélinas brought to us an extensive expertise in commercial and financial matters of great importance to this country. For a long time before coming here he had been sought out by leaders of the private sector for his advice and help, and, as both leaders here tonight have said, he had served on many boards of directors of significant companies both in this country and abroad.

Perhaps we should remind ourselves as well that his experience in commerce, finance, taxation and industry was of utmost help to the Senate, particularly in the deliberations of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce as that committee dealt with legislation touching upon these matters. Not only did Senator Gélinas have a fine background in the private sector of our economy, but he had an innate common sense and superbly developed sense of judgment.

Senator Gélinas was a shy man; he was a modest man; he was a retiring man; he did not shout his opinions from the roof tops. Speech in public, speech in this chamber, was a difficulty for him, but in committee and in private conversation concerning the work of the chamber he made a notable contribution.

As most senators are aware, Senator Gélinas had a deep capacity for friendship and a wonderful sense of humour which endeared him to his colleagues here.

To his wife and to the other members of his family we all extend our deep sympathy. We will miss him very much.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, unlike many members of this chamber, I never had any political association with the late Senator Gélinas. I was never a member of his party, and neither was I a member of the party opposed to his.

Strangely enough, in the business world, where both of us have been occupied for many years, I found that in most cases he was associated with companies or undertakings which very frequently were in opposition to those with which I was associated. Having said that, I would just like to add that Louis Gélinas was an exceptional man, a very human person, and a very dear friend of mine. He will be greatly missed in his community of Montreal, where he did so much; he will be greatly missed in the province of Quebec; he will be missed in Canada; and certainly he will be greatly missed by all his associates in the Senate. All of us have lost a fellow senator; I—in fact, most of us—have lost a wonderful friend.

I would like to add my message of condolence to those already extended to his wife and the members of his family.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES—VOLUME I OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table, on behalf of Senator van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, a committee report entitled "Canada-United States Relations—Volume I—The Institutional Framework for the Relationship."

This report was published and distributed on Tuesday last, January 27, during the adjournment of the Senate, pursuant to an order of the Senate of December 18, 1975, to enable Canadian members of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, travelling to the United States on January 29 to attend meetings of the group, to take with them copies of the report to be given to their American counterparts.

Honourable senators, before I move that the report be taken into consideration, may I simply say that the report has attracted a great deal of very favourable attention across Canada and in the United States. I think that once again it points up the excellent work being done by committees of the Senate. This conscientious work by many members, representing a diversity of viewpoints, is manifested in the quality of Volume I of this report on Canada-United States relations. The chairman, the vice-chairman and those who make up this committee deserve the commendation not only of the members of the Senate but of all Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator van Roggen, I move that the report be taken into consideration on Wednesday, February 11, 1976.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Cook be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne) on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Perrault.]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I inquire of the Leader of the Government as to the program for the Senate during this and next week?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, an attempt will be made to provide information later this day.

CRIMINAL CODE

PARTIAL ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—EXPIRATION OF TRIAL PERIOD—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on December 18, 1975, Senator Greene and Senator Neiman asked questions in the Senate relating to the expiry date for the trial period for partial abolition of capital punishment.

The present legislation does not expire until December 31, 1977.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on Saturday, December 20, Senator Forsey asked a question with respect to the anti-inflation program. He asked whether I had any indication of "the precise means by which the freeze, the temporary freeze in the family allowance payments will be carried out."

Senator Flynn: So-called.

Senator Perrault: I have been informed that the average per child monthly allowance will remain at $22.08. The anticipated January 1, 1976, increase will not take place as previously scheduled.

EFFECT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE CUTBACKS ON NOVA SCOTIA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, also on December 20 last, a question was asked by Senator Macdonald relating to alleged or reported cutbacks in expenditures of the Department of National Defence in Nova Scotia. I have been informed that discussions are going on at the present time regarding the consolidation or closure of bases, but no decision has been made as yet.

[Later:]

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, before Orders of the Day are called I should like to draw the attention of the Leader of the Government to the fact that whoever read my question on the subject of the freeze on Family Allowances cannot have read it very carefully, because what I asked was the means by which the government proposed to impose this, and all I got back, in effect, was that it had been imposed.

I understand, from information I received from the minister privately, that it was a matter of an order in council, an order in council which simply wasn't passed. Had I been less ignorant than I was I should not have asked the question because I should have known that already.

I apologize, therefore, to the chamber, the minister and the Leader of the Government, but I should like to suggest that in future whoever drafts the answers to questions which the honourable Leader of the Government gives us in this house might read some of the questions rather more carefully, and not go off at a tangent answering something which hasn't in fact been asked.

Senator Perrault: I assure Senator Forsey that no apology is necessary, and that if the answer is incomplete for any reason an effort will be made to provide one that is complete in the very near future.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to review briefly the work done by the Senate during the period from October 21 last, when we resumed sittings after the summer adjournment, to December 20, when we adjourned for the Christmas recess. Honourable senators will recall that on October 21 I gave a brief résumé of what had been accomplished by the Senate from the opening of this, the First Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, until we adjourned on July 30, 1975. I said at that time that some 59 bills had come to us from the House of Commons, of which 50 were government bills, eight public bills by private members and one a private bill. All these bills were passed by the Senate and received royal assent before the summer adjournment. In addition, 27 bills—18 government, four public by private members and five private bills—were introduced in the Senate during that period. Before we adjourned on December 20, a further 16 bills had come to us from the Commons and were passed by this house. In addition, two private bills were initiated in the Senate, passed and sent to the Commons.

Possibly the most serious matter facing Parliament this session has been inflation. Ten days after the Prime Minister announced the government's proposals for the control of inflation in October, I opened an inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the White Paper entitled Attack on Inflation—A Program of National Action. The ensuing debate thereon was both challenging and constructive. Many senators on both sides of the house took part in this debate, and their contributions were invaluable. The debate continued until the anti-inflation bill was introduced in the House of Commons, and the Senate on November 18 authorized the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to examine the bill in advance of its reaching the Senate.

The widespread discussion during the debate on the White Paper and the advance study of the anti-inflation bill enabled the Senate to expedite, through morning, afternoon and evening sittings, the passage of this very urgent and important piece of legislation.

Of course, as over the years, the work of the Senate committees continues to be of the highest calibre both in volume and quality, and members of this chamber continue to make invaluable contributions as members of the various joint committees of both houses. The joint committee work has been particularly heavy this session, with the special joint committees on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, the National Capital Region, and Immigration Policy, and the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments sitting concurrently.

May I say that I feel confident that the Senate will continue, both in this chamber and in its committees, to deal with the same devotion and dedication with whatever tasks may face us during the balance of this session. Present indications are that the work will be heavy and challenging. At this time I want to thank all honourable senators, wherever they may sit, for their spendid and unselfish contributions to the work of the Senate so far this session. I cannot let this opportunity pass without special mention of the chairmen of the various committees who have worked throughout this session with such vigour and dedication, and commendation also to members of the loyal Opposition who have cooperated so well in order to expedite and help the business of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has expressed it very well. It is quite obvious that the driving force in the Senate has been the Opposition.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

HALIFAX RELIEF COMMISSION PENSION CONTINUATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Margaret Norrie moved the second reading of Bill C-78, to repeal an act respecting the Halifax Relief Commission and to authorize the continuation of pensions, grants or allowances paid by the Halifax Relief Commission.

She said: Honourable senators, the subject matter of Bill C-78, which is called the Halifax Relief Commission Pension Continuation Bill, will bring back memories to many persons across Canada who suffered, or whose relatives and friends suffered, bereavement, injury or damage to their property as a result of the devastating explosion which occurred in Halifax harbour on the morning of December 6, 1917. In addition to some 1,635 persons killed, approximately 10,000 cases of injury were originally reported.

As soon as the extent of the explosion was appreciated, assistance in various forms was sent to the stricken area from other parts of Canada and from the United States. Apart from this immediate assistance, substantial donations of funds were made by individuals and governments to provide financial assistance on a long-term basis to the victims of the explosion and their dependants, as well as to assist in the rehabilitation of the Halifax-Dartmouth area which had been damaged by the explosion.

After a temporary committee had looked after immediate relief, the Halifax Relief Commission was created by an order in council in January 1918. Later that year, this commission was more formally established under an unusual combination of federal and provincial legislation whereby the federal government, which had donated almost two-thirds of the funds made available to the commission, was given the responsibility, through the Governor in Council, for operational matters such as the appointment of the commissioners.

The main purpose of the commission, and its most important trust, was the administration of the system of allowances granted to the widows of those who were killed and to those suffering from disabilities caused by the explosion. While some 3,000 of the original 10,000 injuries were classified as serious, most were not of a permanent nature. This is evidenced by the fact that in 1920 there were 1,028 survivor and disability pensions being paid by the commission. That total has gradually decreased over the years to the point where only 65 were in pay for the month of December 1975.

The normal procedure over the years has been for the commission to make its various reports and submissions to the Governor in Council through the Minister of Finance, from whom it also receives such ministerial guidance as has been given. Over the last 25 years this guidance has been directed towards the winding up of the affairs of the commission, as the passage of time reduced the extent of its responsibilities to the point where the federal and provincial governments have agreed that the continuation of a separate establishment is not warranted, and that the transfer of the responsibility for the payment of the pensions to another, and more permanent governmental body should be made.

I should like to emphasize that this is a transfer of the responsibility. The commission is not being abolished. Its responsibility is being transferred to another governmental body.

As a result of consultation between the federal government and the Government of Nova Scotia, complementary federal and provincial legislation has been prepared towards this end. The two governments have agreed that the Canadian Pension Commission, which has the responsibility for administering the Pension Act under which, among other things or matters, war disability pensions are paid, would be the appropriate body to which the responsibilities of the Halifax Relief Commission should be transferred.

It should be noted at this point that the pensions paid by the Halifax Relief Commission since January 1918 have been increased from time to time in accordance with the consumer price index, in exactly the same manner as war disability pensions have been increased. On January 1, 1976, as a result of this indexing, the pensions were increased by 11.3 per cent, which is comparable to the increments given public servants.

The intent of the bill before us is to establish a special interest bearing account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund into which will be paid the proceeds of the assets of the commission, which amount to $1.44 million, apart from the reserve set aside for its staff superannuation plan in the amount of $160,000, which has been approved by the Governor in Council. That reserve will be transferred to the federal superannuation account, from which the pensions under the superannuation plan will be paid. The explosion survivor and disability pensions will be paid from the special account, which stood at $1,130,000 on January 1, 1976. Its final balance of $150,000, which is not required for the benefit of pensioners, is to be used for the continued rehabilitation of that area of Halifax which was damaged in the 1917 explosion.

● (2040)

The bill provides for the coming into force of this legislation on a day to be proclaimed by the Governor in Council. The various transfers which I have mentioned will take place at a time that is mutually acceptable to the various parties concerned after legislation has been passed by the provincial legislature.

If honourable senators have any questions, I shall be happy to try to answer them.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I would like an opportunity to say a few words about this bill, the second reading of which has been so eloquently moved by the honourable senator from Colchester-Cumberland (Senator Norrie). I hope it meets the wishes of the house if that is done at the next sitting.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF SENATORS

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon the privileges and immunities that apply to members of the Senate within the precincts of the Senate, and the powers of the Speaker in respect thereof.—(Honourable Senator Croll).

Senator Petten: This order stands until Tuesday, March 2.

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator Petten: Senator Croll has asked me to do this.

Senator Flynn: If Senator Croll is not here to explain why he wants to delay the debate for a month, I think it should stand until the next sitting.

Senator Petten: I am agreeable to its standing until the next sitting.

Order stands.

SCIENCE POLICY

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MEETING

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, Senator Lamontagne has asked me to announce tonight that the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy will meet tomorrow, Wednesday, February 4, when the Senate rises, to discuss industrial research and development. The witness will be the Honourable C. M. Drury, Minister of State for Science and Technology. The notices for this meeting have, of course, already been sent to honourable senators.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, earlier this evening the Leader of the Opposition asked about the business of the Senate for the remainder of the week. The information now available is rather incomplete. However, tomorrow we will be dealing with Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof. On Thursday we will be dealing with Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act. Consideration of these bills should occupy a good deal of the Senate's time for the remainder of the week.

Senator Flynn: May I ask what is the intention of the government with respect to the present session? What are the bills the government would like Parliament to pass before a new session is started, remembering that this one began about a year and a half ago?

Senator Perrault: All I can say is that the inscrutable legislative pattern will be unfolding shortly.

Senator Flynn: Like the rest.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 4, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of text of Joint Communiqué issued by President Echeverria and Prime Minister Trudeau on January 25, 1976, in Mexico City.

Copies of text of Joint Communiqué signed by Prime Minister Castro and Prime Minister Trudeau in Havana, January 29, 1976.

Copies of Joint Communiqué issued by President Pérez and Prime Minister Trudeau following the visit by the Prime Minister of Canada to Venezuela, January 29 to February 2, 1976.

Senator Flynn: How do the communiqués compare?

Senator Perrault: They are all excellent documents.

RULES OF THE SENATE

COMMENCEMENT DATE OF AMENDMENTS—ORDER OF THE SENATE OF DECEMBER 8, 1975 RESCINDED AND NEW DATE AUTHORIZED

Senator Molson, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 47(2), moved:

That the Order of the Senate of December 8, 1975, that the amendments to the Rules of the Senate contained in the Report of the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, dated October 29, 1975, and adopted by the Senate on November 26, 1975, shall come into force on the first day of the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, be rescinded; and

That the said amendments shall come into force on March 1, 1976.

He said: Honourable senators, if I may, I will give a brief word of explanation. I think we all remember that in December when the original motion was passed we thought that Parliament would reassemble in January, then prorogue and that a new session would probably start right away, which would have been before now. I believe that was the generally accepted rumour, shall I say, of the times.

It now seems not impossible that this session will continue until late in this spring or summer, in which case it is possible that the amended rules might not become effective until next September or October. For that reason it seemed to be reasonable, and perhaps wise, to suggest that the new rules, which have already gone to the printers, should become effective on March 1.

Motion agreed to.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

STORM DAMAGE—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL AID—QUESTION

• (1410)

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, as most of you are aware, the Atlantic Provinces were struck at about noon on Monday by a hurricane which caused a great deal of damage to public and private property. The city of Saint John, which I represent, was completely blacked out, completely isolated. There was no power and no communication except by ham radio. The most frightening aspect of the storm was that families were without heat and cooking facilities for upwards of 24 hours. In some areas these conditions still existed at noon today. Large sections of the city are still without power and heat.

I am told that damage to property in New Brunswick has been estimated at about $20 million, but that has not been confirmed. The damage in Saint John alone may run to $5 million or $6 million. During the storm, roofs were lifted or torn off, walls collapsed, windows were blown out, steel girders in new construction were twisted, ships broke their moorings, and in all areas commercial establishments had to shut down. All businesses were completely unable to function on Monday and Tuesday, though many are starting to get back to normal today.

I understand that yesterday the Premier of New Brunswick, accompanied by the Director of the Emergency Measures Organization, visited Saint John. I do not know whether the area has been declared a disaster area, but I am informed that the New Brunswick cabinet met this morning and discussed the matter.

My question to the Leader of the Government is this: Has the Government of New Brunswick declared this particular area, and possibly other areas within the province, a disaster area? If so, has the Government of New Brunswick informed the Government of Canada of its decision so that the latter may also make assessments of damage to businesses and individuals for the purpose of providing relief to those affected? As I understand it, every individual in the city and surrounding areas has been affected.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as the honourable senator has observed, it is a requirement, before federal intervention by way of assistance in matters of this kind may take place, that the provincial government declare the emergency to be beyond its resources, at which time a formal request for assistance is directed by that province to the federal government.

I think we all appreciate the graphic description given us by Senator Riley of the very serious effects of the storm which caused so much damage, particularly in the Maritime Provinces. I have no information as yet that any official request for assistance has been received, but I have no doubt that should such a request for assistance arrive, sympathetic attention will be given to it.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF SENATORS

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—QUESTION

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I am not sure if this is the appropriate time to ask this question, or whether I should wait until Order No. 4 is called.

Senator Croll was not in the chamber yesterday when a question was raised by the Leader of the Opposition about this order when Senator Petten asked that it stand until March 2. In my view my question is a very important one, and I prefer to raise it now. At what time may we expect further consideration of Order No. 4? This was a motion brought forward by the Honourable Senator Perrault, the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My reason for asking the question is very simple. I regard this as a very important motion.

Senator Perrault: I yield to our distinguished colleague, Senator Croll.

Senator Croll: As a matter of fact, if the honourable senator is ready to proceed, we can proceed with it today.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to refer to supplementary remarks by one of our distinguished colleagues, Senator Forsey, last night relating to his original question of December 20, 1975. I hope that this may conclude the dialogue, which has been rather interesting.

His question was as to the means by which family allowance payments would be kept at the present level, and I should like to take this opportunity to provide some further information.

I am informed that the Family Allowances Act (1973) provides for a mandatory indexing of family allowance payments "as prescribed." The indexing is prescribed through regulations pursuant to the act, and regulations currently in effect say that the increase in family allowance payments to match the cost of living increase during the preceding year was to be effective January 1, 1976. Therefore, there is now in existence a regulation providing for the cost of living increase to the family allowances.

However, in a practical sense, Mr. Chrétien, the President of Treasury Board, in his remarks of December 18, 1975, to the House of Commons regarding budget cuts indicated that the Family Allowances Act would be amended in the resumed session to reflect a suspension for one year of the indexing of family allowance payments and that such legislation would have a retroactive effect. It is in the interests of recipients of family allowances to have a clear understanding of the amounts of the payment they would receive over the year. Therefore, rather than make an overpayment during the first months of 1976, before the Family Allowances Act was amended, and then have the government hold back sufficient funds after the legislation was passed to collect the overpayment, it was thought wiser to give recipients the assurance of the 12 equal monthly payments of family allowance.

I hope that the foregoing information has dealt fully with Senator Forsey's question when he asked about the "precise" legislative or other means that would be employed to suspend the indexing of family allowance payments.

Senator Flynn: A very interesting answer.

SCIENCE POLICY

COMMITTEE MEETING CANCELLED

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to announce that the meeting of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy which was to have taken place this afternoon has been cancelled due to unforeseen circumstances.

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Norrie for the second reading of Bill C-78, to repeal an act respecting the Halifax Relief Commission and to authorize the continuation of pensions, grants or allowances paid by the Halifax Relief Commission.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, as I intimated briefly last evening, I wish to make some comments in respect of this bill, but I want to make it very clear from the beginning that I support the bill. Therefore I do not rise for the purpose of asking anyone to oppose it. The suggestions I have to make are for future consideration, or for present consideration and future action, as the case may be.

I thought I might give the house a few more facts about the matter, not in any way to contradict what was said by the honourable senator from Colchester-Cumberland (Senator Norrie) last evening, but rather as an amplification thereof.

As the honourable senator said, those involved in receiving benefits from this fund in December 1975 numbered 65. The ages of these 65 people, in groups, are as follows: seven are in their fifties, 25 in their sixties, 23 in their seventies, and 10 in their eighties. As to categories of people, one is a dependant of a person killed in the explosion; five are widows of persons killed; nine are suffering from general disability due to injuries received in the explosion; 11 are blind; and 39 are partially blind, many having lost completely the sight of one eye.

Perhaps in passing it is worth noting that this high proportion of people who have had their eyesight affected reflects some indication of what happened on December 6, 1917. There was such a terrific explosion that the glass in windows of buildings and residences was not only broken but was flung or thrown in such a vigorous manner as to cause many of the casualties, including some of the fatalities and cases of blindness.

This fund was established, as was said last evening, as a result of the compassion and generosity of governments, including those of Canada, Nova Scotia and other provinces, private persons in all parts of Canada and the United States and, particularly, the New England States. Payments have been made ever since the fund was established during the year after the explosion, and much of the money was expended on the rehabilitation of the very badly damaged area of Halifax. I am informed by the authorities of the Halifax Relief Commission that, effective January 1, 1976, the rates being paid are as follows: the one dependant I mentioned receives $119.44 per month; the five widows each receive $199.44; and the nine suffering from general disability receive a monthly payment of from $40 to $290, depending upon the degree or percentage of disability assessed in the individual cases. The 11 blind persons receive payments in the range of $265 to $422 per month, depending upon their circumstances. The 39 who are partially blind each receive $99.02 per month.

Honourable senators, I am informed, although I cannot confirm it from my own first-hand knowledge, that these rates are generally below those paid to pensionable persons in similar circumstances in connection with service in the armed forces in time of war. One of the submissions which I propose to make is that this inequality should no longer be permitted to exist.

Consider for a moment how these deaths and injuries came about. When the explosion occurred, Canada and Canadians had then been heavily involved for something over three years in the greatest cataclysm of battle the world had ever known. Halifax was the main Canadian port through which Canadian men and women and munitions and supplies left Canada to become part of this country's great war effort overseas. Munitions of all kinds were stored in the area in great quantities, not only for shipment overseas but for many other uses. From the early days of the war until its end, the citizens of the Halifax-Dartmouth area were continuously exposed, 24 hours a day, to the danger which became a terrible reality on December 6, 1917.

In the morning of that day two ocean-going ships, both connected with the war effort, were moving toward each other in that part of Halifax harbour known as The Narrows. One of the ships was laden with a cargo of dangerous and volatile high explosives. Through an error in navigation, which I believe has never been completely explained, the two ships collided and, despite the gallant efforts of many people to prevent it, the munitions cargo exploded shortly after 9 o'clock in the morning. The force of the blast is generally acknowledged to have been far greater than any other blast resulting from the act of man until the explosion of the atomic bombs near the end of the Second World War.

The great majority of the casualties—last night the figures of 10,000 injured and 1,635 killed were given—occurred in a matter of a few seconds, much more quickly, I believe, than I can say "occurred in a matter of a few seconds." I doubt whether so many casualties have ever occurred in such a short time in the bloodiest battles of any war until the atomic bomb explosions to which I have already referred.

Honourable senators, having given a brief and inadequate outline of the facts and surrounding circumstances, I should like to draw your attention to two provisions of the bill now under consideration.

Clause 5(4) provides:

No payment shall be paid out... in excess of the amount of the balance to the credit of the Account.

That is, to the credit of the account established in the accounts of the Canadian government when this fund is transferred to it, which means that it is necessary that the pensions be kept within the amount of the fund and within the individual amounts which can be calculated actuarially to bring about that situation.

Clause 6 of the bill provides that when no further amounts will be required for payment out of the fund, the Government of Canada, in consultation with the Government of Nova Scotia, may transfer any balance remaining in the account to a provincial or municipal body in Nova Scotia for the continued rehabilitation of the area of Halifax that was damaged by the explosion.

There are two points that I wish to emphasize and bring to the attention of the Governments of Canada and Nova Scotia for consideration in the future. I have said that of the 65 people now eligible for benefits, 11 are blind and 39 are partially blind. That means that 50 out of a total of 65 persons are receiving benefits because of injury to their sight, or nearly 78 per cent of the total.

There is in Halifax a school for the blind which is devoted entirely to helping those whose sight is seriously deficient and which never has more money than it requires to carry on this very necessary and beneficial work. If there should, at the last, be a balance remaining in the fund, it would appear to me to be in harmony with the general objects of the fund to provide that any such balance be transferred to the school for the blind, or its successors, to assist in carrying on its work.

My second point is that those casualties were suffered in the course of a war in which Canada and her allies participated, just as casualties were suffered by members of the armed forces. Now, as those casualties, and the dependants of those who were killed, move on into the senior years of their lives, I submit that this fact should be recognized by raising the benefits to the level received by war veterans and their dependants.

Such an increase may, of course, exhaust the fund while there are still persons entitled to receive benefits, and this would require some money from the Consolidated Revenue Fund outside the account itself; but surely, in the ordinary course of events, it would seem likely that any such requirement from the Consolidated Revenue Fund would be relatively insignificant.

Therefore, I respectfully urge the federal government and the Government of Nova Scotia to examine carefully these two suggestions which, I believe, are in harmony with the spirit of the fund, in harmony with the spirit of fairness, and not inconsistent with any generally accepted principle of law. I respectfully suggest that in their consideration they contemplate the possibility of amending this legislation, and any legislation that may be passed in the Province of Nova Scotia relative to the matter, to take into account these two points.

In the meantime, as I indicated earlier, I intend to vote for this bill and I urge all honourable senators to do the same.

Senator Croll: May I ask the honourable senator a question? What is the history of the augmenting of the fund from time to time? Have the original allowances been increased and, if so, by how much?

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is my recollection that the fund was built up over a period of a relatively short number of years after 1917, and that there has been no augmenting of the fund except, of course, such as could be obtained from interest or capital appreciation of investments.

Senator Croll: I am referring to the augmenting of the individual allowances provided by the fund.

Senator Smith (Colchester): As Senator Norrie pointed out last evening, there was an increase of 11.3 per cent, effective on January 1 of this year, to take into account the rise in the consumer price index which had occurred in 1975, and I believe that over the years there have been occasional adjustments in that respect.

Senator Norrie: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Norrie speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Norrie: Honourable senators, there are no further comments I wish to make on this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Norrie moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-41 has been before Parliament for some considerable time. It was originally introduced and given first reading in the other place on December 4, 1974. Since that time, it has been considerably modified, and only now reaches this chamber.

Prior to the bill's reaching the Senate, the Agriculture Committee of the other place spent considerable time discussing it, and also in travelling across that part of Canada which will be affected by it. It is my view that the measure before us today is much improved as a result of the travels of the House of Commons Agriculture Committee and their having heard representations from those people who will be most directly affected by it, namely, the farmers.

Bill C-41 provides a program to deal with the historical fact that income from grains and oilseeds on the Prairies has alternately zoomed to high levels for short periods of time, and then plummeted to very low levels for, in most cases, extended periods of time.

If one were to produce a chart of the income from cereal grains produced on the Prairies, it would be found to be pretty consistent throughout the history of cereal grain production. It would show sharp peaks from time to time and then drop off rapidly to very low levels, which, as I said a moment ago, extended over a considerably longer period of time.

This instability of income has meant a long history—as a matter of fact, it is the complete history—of the boom-and-bust cycle on the Prairies. This not only affected the farmers but, as their incomes rose sharply and then dropped drastically, the business community of the prairie region was also affected. The rural communities, the municipalities, and the prairie economy generally, have suffered because of this.

Even the revenues of provinces like Saskatchewan have been drastically affected by this boom-and-bust cycle in the economy of the prairie farmers. I suggest that it has even affected the revenues of the Government of Canada. It has affected the Government of Canada in that sales of cereal grains play a large part in our foreign trade, and over the years have been a major item in our trade balances.

For these reasons, in my view at least, Bill C-41 is of major interest and concern not only to prairie farmers, but to prairie people and I suggest, to the people of Canada generally.

This instability in agricultural income was identified by the Western Economic Opportunity Conference, which was held in Calgary in 1973, as the central problem in Western Canada. The Western Grain Stabilization Bill is designed to stabilize grain income on the Prairies by eliminating the sudden and sharp income declines that have so often characterized grain sales in the past. The sudden income slumps of the past resulted, in the main, from declining grain prices or the constriction on markets, chiefly export markets, or both. Rising production costs contributed to the tight economic position as prices and markets fell. Grain production is, in many cases, influenced by this cycle, and I suggest that this is not a healthy situation, when plantings of cereal crops are sometimes hindered because of price patterns over a recent period of time.

The basic concept of the plan under Bill C-41 is to create a fund, made up of contributions by producers and the federal government, to be used to maintain the net cash flow to prairie grain producers from grain sales at the level of the average of the previous five-year period. Prairie grain producers will contribute to the western grain stabilization account two per cent of their gross receipts, up to a maximum of $25,000, from six major grains and oilseeds produced on the Prairies, namely, wheat, barley, oats, rye, flax and rapeseed. The maximum producer payment into the fund would be $500 per year, which is two per cent of the eligible sales of $25,000. The federal government will put into the western grain stabilization account $2 for every $1 contributed by the producers.

Contributions by producers are tax deductible as a farming expense, as far as income purposes are concerned, and they are to be deducted at the country elevator at the time of delivery. The Canadian Wheat Board will automatically make remittances on interim and final payments up to the maximum level of contributions. In other words, if a farmer has not delivered sufficient to make his maximum contribution of $500, then deductions will be made from the final payments which are made by the Canadian Wheat Board to the farmers. Participating producers may, in authorized circumstances, remit levies on sales to feed lots and the seed trade, and also on crop insurance claims.

Contributions to the account by producers can be credited to their estates, a trust or, in the case of a sale of the farm, to a new owner. I will deal with that point more fully a little later on.

As soon as the producer has contributed his maximum of $500, he will receive an endorsement on his permit book so that no further deductions will be made. Included in a producer's book of gross cash receipts are the following: all cash receipts from sales to the Canadian Wheat Board; all cash receipts for sales of wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed to authorized elevators, feed mills and feed lots; all crop insurance payments and other specified payments received by the producer; and all sales of seed grain through commercial outlets.

Final payments, being the difference between the initial payment made by the Canadian Wheat Board and the final realized price that the Canadian Wheat Board receives on the sale of grain, are included as cash receipts for the first full calendar year following the crop year for which payment is made.

I shall deal now with the method by which payments will be made out of the fund. Whenever the eligible net cash flow to prairie producers from grain sales falls below the previous five-year average, payments will be made directly to producers in proportion to their contributions. The net cash flow, for any given year, is the difference between the total gross receipts from the sale of prairie grain for that year and the total cash costs to the producers. The eligible receipts are all those grain receipts under the $25,000 maximum from those participating in the plan. The eligible net cash flow is the net cash flow multiplied by the ratio of eligible gross cash receipts to the total cash receipts.

For example, if, in any calendar year, the total gross sales of these six prairie grain products amounted to $2.5 billion, and the total cash costs of production for that calendar year was set at $1 billion, this would mean that the net cash flow for the calendar year would be $1.5 billion. The eligible net cash flow for that calendar year is estimated at $1.2 billion. If this eligible net cash flow is higher than the average for the previous five years, no payment is made out of the fund. On the other hand, if the eligible net cash flow is less, by one per cent or more, than the previous five-year average, a payout is made to producers from the fund. The total amount paid out of the fund will be the difference between the year's eligible net cash flow and the average eligible net cash flow for the previous five years.

Included in calculating the cash costs of production will be such expenses as property taxes, tools and equipment, fuel, tires, tubes, anti-freeze, licences, insurance, and spare parts; cash outlays for fertilizer, seed, pesticides, herbicides, et cetera; farm building maintenance, hydro and telephone, insurance premiums, custom work and hired labour.

Whenever this net cash flow from grain sales drops below the previous five-year average, the fund will trigger a payment large enough to keep the total flow to the Prairies of net cash from grain sales at the five-year average.

Each producer will share in the payment, in the ratio of his contributions in the current three-year period—that is, the current year plus the previous two—to the total contributions of all other participating producers.

No farmer will be forced to participate in the plan. A farmer who does not wish to participate in the plan may choose to remain out of it in the initial three-year period. Producers will have three years from the time it becomes effective—that is, to January 1, 1979—to elect not to participate in the program, if they so choose.

Should a producer elect to enter the plan at any time after having opted out, he may do so, as a conditional participant for three years—an option that is available only once. In the event of a payout under the program, conditional participants will be subject to a 10 per cent penalty.

Any new producer, who begins farming at some time in the future, will have the same opportunity for a three-year period from the year in which he begins to farm.

Where a producer decides not to participate in the plan in the first of the three optional years available to him, all levies paid by him into the fund will be returned and he will not be eligible to share in any payouts. If a producer opts out in the second or third year of these optional years, all levies paid in the year in which he opted out would be refunded to him, but he would retain an interest in the fund for the other year or years, and would share in any payout to the extent of his contributions still remaining in the plan.

When a farmer decides to retire or wishes to sell his operation, he has two alternative options which he may exercise at his choice in connection with the equity he has built up in the fund.

On the one hand, he may decide to sell his interest in the fund as an asset of his farming enterprise. Fully paid-up participation in the fund will clearly be an item of value, and under the plan this interest will be assignable in law to the new purchaser of the farm. On the other hand, the farmer upon retirement or sale may wish to retain full interest in the fund for himself. If he does so, he will be entitled to share proportionately in any payout which may be made in the last year in which he contributed levies or in the two succeeding years. After this latter time, however, his interest will have expired.

ration must establish to the satisfaction of the government that more than 50 per cent of its shares are owned by persons who are Canadian citizens or landed immigrants.

The bill provides for the creation of a five-member advisory committee of farmers or their representatives, to advise on the administration of the plan. The costs of administering the plan will be borne entirely by the federal government. No administrative costs will be deducted from the fund. The federal treasury guarantees the solvency of the western grain stabilization fund. If, in the event of continuous heavy draws, the fund becomes exhausted, the federal government will lend it whatever sums are required. The federal government will pay interest on the fund at all times it is in a surplus position. Similarly, interest will be charged to the fund if it is ever in a deficit position.

The plan is not really a guaranteed income scheme. It is designed to protect grain producers from sudden slumps that have characterized the past. The plan will protect grain farmers from drops in grain prices, slumps in markets, widespread Prairie crop failure and rising costs of production, or any combination of these. It will stabilize grain incomes on the Prairies, and contribute significantly to the stability of Prairie economies.

I want to repeat what I said a moment ago, that this western grain stabilization plan will be administered at the sole expense of the federal government. The federal government will contribute $2 for every $1 that is contributed by the producer. The plan represents a major commitment by the federal government to Prairie agriculture and to the economy of all the western provinces.

Lengthy consultations have taken place over several months—as a matter of fact over a year—with farm organizations, the grain trade and provincial governments. Many suggestions from these consultations have been incorporated into this program to ensure that it is the best possible program, and that it truly reflects the interests of grain producers who are the mainstay and strength of Prairie economic stability.

Honourable senators, I have dealt only with the principle of the bill. I hope that the bill will receive second reading in due course. If it does, it is my intention to move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, at which time its details can be discussed thoroughly. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture and officials of his department will be present at that time to answer any questions concerning contributions to the fund and the manner in which the fund is built up, and the manner in which payments can be made out of the fund.

It is my belief that the bill is a step in the right direction—that of bringing some stability to the grain producers of western Canada and to every one who lives in western Canada. Moreover, as I said earlier, it affects not only the Prairie region but Canada generally, especially in respect of the important role which sales of wheat and other cereal grains play in terms of ameliorating the balance of payments problems we so often have to face in our external trade.

I commend the bill to your favourable consideration.

Senator Bell: Would the honourable senator permit a question which, I am afraid, I ask out of ignorance? How will the grain producers share in the fund? Is this to be vested in the producer, or in the land? For instance, if a farmer, who was growing wheat in Saskatchewan and had shares in the fund, decided to sell that particular property and raise a different type of grain crop in the Peace River district, would his share remain with him, or would it remain with the land that he sold to another farmer who was growing the same type of crop?

Senator McDonald: There are two options open to him under the bill. He could sell the equity he had built up in the fund as an asset to whoever purchases the particular holding on which he was producing wheat in Saskatchewan. In this case, the money he had paid into the fund would be an asset which could be sold along with the farm. Alternatively, he could retain that interest for himself, in which case he would sell the farm less the fund asset he had built up. If he goes to another area in the Prairie region and begins to produce another crop, he is able to carry that asset with him. Then, in the event that a payment is made in the next few years, he would be able to draw out that payment, regardless of whether he is still on the old farm or a new one.

Senator Yuzyk: Would Senator McDonald permit another question? Would he kindly explain why this act is to be administered by the Canadian Wheat Board? As this appears to be an income insurance scheme, it would appear more logical for it to be administered by the Department of Agriculture.

Senator McDonald: I cannot speak for the Canadian Wheat Board or for the Department of Agriculture, but perhaps the reason it is being administered by the Canadian Wheat Board is that the vast majority of sales of Prairie grains are made through the Canadian Wheat Board and it, to a large extent, would be the collecting agency. Whether that is the reason or not, I do not know. As I said earlier, I expect the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board will be present when the committee considers this bill, and I suggest you ask him that question.

Senator Sparrow: Is there not a western grain stabilization administration that handles the administration? I think the Canadian Wheat Board will be concerned only with the fund. As I understand it, there is a separate administration which will handle the plan.

Senator McDonald: I think you are right. As I said earlier, the Canadian Wheat Board is involved because it is the major collecting agency owing to the fact that the vast majority of cereal grains goes through its hands. But, as I have said, the minister is more able to answer that particular question than I, and I suggest that Senator Yuzyk pose it to him.

Senator Buckwold: Would the honourable senator answer a further question? Is the money which a farmer may receive from the fund subject to income tax?

Senator McDonald: Are you referring to a payment from the fund?

Senator Buckwold: Yes.

Senator McDonald: Yes, such payments are subject to income tax.

Senator Buckwold: So the federal government would be getting a fair share of its money back through income tax.

Senator McDonald: I suppose that would depend on the individual farmer and his tax bracket. But, payments out of the fund are certainly taxable, in just the same way that contributions to the fund are deductible in the year they are made.

On motion of Senator Yuzyk, debate adjourned.

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon the privileges and immunities that apply to members of the Senate within the precincts of the Senate, and the powers of the Speaker in respect thereof.—(Honourable Senator Croll).

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, when I last spoke to this motion, which did not originate with me, I said that I thought it would be inappropriate to proceed with it. Despite the fact that it is an important motion, I still think it is inappropriate to proceed with it. Nevertheless, I will yield to any member of the Senate who wishes to speak at this time.

Senator Flynn: In that case let the question be put.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, do you wish the question put?

Senator Flynn: If Senator Croll does not intend to speak to the motion, and if no one else wishes to speak, then let the question be put.

Senator Croll: I believe Senator Rowe intimated earlier today that he wished to proceed with this matter.

Senator Flynn: Are you then asking that the order stand in the name of Senator Rowe?

Senator Croll: No. I said I would let it stand in my name.

Senator Flynn: But apparently you have nothing else to say on the matter.

Senator Croll: But someone else may have.

Senator Flynn: If someone else has something to say, then let him adjourn the debate.

Senator Croll: I wish to adjourn this debate at this time on the understanding that it is open for any honourable senator to continue.

Senator Flynn: Very good. Is there anyone else?

Senator Croll: There may be.

Senator Flynn: If we do not know, then the question should be put.

Senator Croll: There may be tomorrow.

[Senator McDonald.]

Senator Langlois: It is quite possible that some senators who are not present at this moment may wish to speak to this motion tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: Then let the Whip on the other side adjourn the debate, but if no one else wants to speak, then the question should be put.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Flynn: Will that be an advancement of the situation in any way?

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL SESSION, COPENHAGEN, DENMARK— DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, December 4, 1975, the debate on the inquiry of Senator McDonald calling the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-first Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Copenhagen, Denmark, from 21st to 26th September, 1975, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Session and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, owing to the long lapse of time, the question of the Twenty-first Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly would seem a trifle stale. For that reason, I intend to suggest, if no one else wishes to speak on the subject, that it be dropped from the Order Paper. Before doing that, however, I should like to make just a few observations.

First of all, I should like to congratulate, for their useful, interesting and informative contributions to this debate, my colleagues who attended that Session—Senator A. H. McDonald and Senator Paul Yuzyk. I could pick up again a number of arguments I made last year, but I do not think it is necessary to do so at this time.

Senator McDonald's intervention touched on our contribution to NATO defence. Of course, we must keep in mind at all times that NATO was brought into being to accomplish some of the things that the United Nations at that time could not accomplish, and possibly cannot accomplish even now. Since the inception of NATO it has been thought—and this was brought forward by Canada—that probably much more should be done in the field of political and economic cooperation. Of course, with the accession to the European Economic Community of a few more NATO countries, the majority of the members of that organization feel, and perhaps rightly so, that their contribution to greater political and economic stability in this world can be accomplished more effectively through the European Economic Community than through NATO. So, for the next little while, at least, we will probably have to give more attention to the defence aspects of that organization. I would like to come back to that in a moment, if I may.

I am grateful to Senator Yuzyk for putting on record the full text of the recommendations and resolutions adopted by the Assembly. I particularly want to direct the attention of honourable senators to that part of the resolutions and recommendations emanating from the Scientific Committee, to which I was assigned last fall. This is one of the aspects of the NATO operation which is not by any means secret, and which provides excellent public relations on a worldwide basis for NATO.

Focusing on one particular point, and without going into detail, I would like to refer to the subcommittee of the Scientific Committee, which is called the Subcommittee on the Major Concerns of Modern Society, where quite a bit of research on a variety of those concerns is being carried out by teams of countries. At the moment there are 18 such teams conducting research on energy, geo-thermal activity, conservation, pollution, and so on. Eighteen different subjects are being dealt with, Canada being directly involved in six of them. I refer honourable senators to what has already been put on record.

Also for the record I would like to mention at this point the fact that the Secretary General of NATO, Mr. Joseph Luns, was in Ottawa last evening, the guest at a dinner given by the Canadian members of the North Atlantic Assembly. We had, as we are wont to say, a full and frank exchange of views. The Secretary General was good enough to field questions, to which he replied very candidly, and we got the feeling that his views on Canada's contribution to the defence aspects of NATO are much less acerbic than they were six months or so ago.

Senator Flynn: Thank God.

Senator Lafond: Thank God, and, to some extent, thank the government also, because the views of the government have changed considerably in the last six months.

Senator Flynn: That is exactly what I was referring to.

Senator Lafond: The approach and the views of the government with regard to this country's defence contributions to NATO, with regard to the acquisition of material, and with regard to the development of new defence policies respecting not only NATO but other defence commitments of this country, have evolved considerably over the last six months.

Senator Flynn: Bravo.

Senator Lafond: It seems to me that we are learning of this from statements by the Minister of National Defence, and other spokesmen speaking on behalf of the government of Canada, that have been made abroad. Hardly any such statements have been made in Parliament, but some have been. Those that were made in Parliament, I submit, were made in the other house. It is my contention that in this house, representing the generation that we do, there is a great reservoir of experience, knowledge and interest in the field of matters military. On both sides and in every corner of the house I see a good number of people who were senior officers, and who, though against their wish, waged war, knew what it was, is, and is going to be, and it seems to me that we do not have enough opportunity to be informed about, or to be in a position to discuss, defence policy with our government, whatever its political appellation may be.

I suggest, therefore, honourable senators, that through discussions between the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, and the chairman of our Foreign Affairs Committee, some means should be devised by which the Minister of National Defence could appear periodically before that committee, either in public or in camera, so that we may have briefings, and full and frank discussions, on what our defence situation is, where we are going in this regard, and how we are going to get there.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not want to delay the conclusion of this debate. I would merely like to commend Senator Lafond for having said that the government has changed its attitude towards NATO in recent months.

From the time the present Prime Minister came to office in 1968 up until only recently, Canada's attitude towards NATO was, to say the least, unenthusiastic. I remember well a 1968 meeting of the parliamentarians from NATO countries where the climate was one of uncertainty as to what the Canadian position would be towards NATO.

I congratulate Senator Lafond also on his suggestion that the minister be asked to appear before the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. We have reason to take a vital interest in this alliance, since the Senate has more time to do this than the other place has, and I think it is up to us to look into the role Canada plays in NATO.

With regard to the government's recent change in attitude concerning NATO, I wonder if Senator McDonald would agree that this might have come about as a reaction to the tactics of the U.S.S.R. and its allies, willing or unwilling, who, for the past year or so, have been trying to win diplomatic victories by aligning themselves with the Third World on all possible occasions. I am thinking, for example, of the resolutions adopted in London by the IPU with reference to the Middle East, and the resolution adopted at the United Nations with regard to Zionism, and other incidents of the same kind, in which the countries of the Warsaw Pact have consistently used the tension in the Middle East, and the attitudes of the Third World, to try to isolate the western nations, and especially those belonging to NATO. This trend, which to me is quite obvious, suggests that the NATO alliance is more than ever needed for the purpose of defending Canada; in fact, for defending civilization, because there will be no winner of a third world war.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate very much, as I think we all do, the contribution to the discussion on foreign affairs made by the Leader of the Opposition. Canadian foreign policy, since 1968, has been one of prudence and diligence in pursuit of peaceful initiatives around the world. This has been consistent, I think, with the record of Canadian governments for many, many years—

Senator Flynn: Not everybody thinks that.

Senator Perrault: —including that period when the present Leader of the Opposition in this chamber served with distinction in an earlier government.

The increase in Canadian support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization does not mark a radical departure from the pattern established by the government in the past and by preceding governments.

The Leader of the Opposition has alleged certain efforts by members of the "Warsaw Bloc" to exploit situations around the world. I think the government's position is that, while we must be on guard for our community of interests, we should at the same time proceed in the spirit of détente to open new initiatives with many countries of the world. It should be remembered that in the 1950s, when the Leader of the Opposition served with another government, relations were established with the new Government of Cuba, for example, and the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker was very active in the pursuit of new initiatives with the new Cuban government and Premier Fidel Castro. Down through the years, despite our ideological differences with various countries of the world, successive

Canadian governments have engaged in constructive efforts toward détente with many types of philosophies and many types of governments while at the same time maintaining the paramount importance of Canadian interests.

Senator Flynn: Not NATO.

The Hon. the Speaker: Since no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

Debate concluded.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 5, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended April 30, 1975, pursuant to section 33 of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, Chapter F-13, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of contracts between the Government of Canada and the Municipalities of Parkdale and Sherwood, Prince Edward Island, for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970. (English text)

PRIVILEGES OF PARLIAMENT

COMMERCIAL USE OF PICTURE OF PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I rise on what I think may perhaps constitute a question of privilege, although I am not altogether sure of that. I was handed this afternoon by a member of the press some advertising matter sent out by something called "The Publishers Clearing House", which I understand is an American based firm, and which is using as a considerable part of its advertising literature a picture of the parliamentary library. I cannot help wondering whether this is altogether a proper thing, and whether it is, to some extent, an invasion of the privileges of Parliament.

Here, particularly, for example, is this card in the form of something that looks almost like a large dollar bill, headed "Beat Deadline Inside", and which then states "Three Promptness Awards". There is a splendid cut of the parliamentary library, then there is a long sort of coupon thing, looking like a government bond, and on each of the coupons there appears again this cut of the parliamentary library.

Remembering the amount of dust created a few years ago when the Holiday Inn undertook to call itself "Parliament Hill Inn", or something of that sort, I wonder whether perhaps a similar point might arise here.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the honourable senator may have a perfectly valid point. Certainly inquiries will be made to determine whether or not there has been a breach of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 10, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put, I should like, as usual, to give a brief summary of what we can expect for the next week.

First, the committees. On Tuesday, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 2.30 p.m. to continue its study of Canada-United States Relations. On Wednesday, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will sit at 9.30 a.m. to commence its examination of Canadian textile problems, and the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet in the afternoon when the Senate rises.

In the Senate on Tuesday evening we will continue with the second reading debate on Bills C-41 and C-71, and Senator Desruisseaux will call the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.

The Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, entitled: "Canada-United States Relations—Volume I—The Institutional Framework of the Relationship," will be taken into consideration by the Senate on Wednesday. Also on Wednesday, Senator Michaud will call the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.

As far as I have been able to ascertain, the only bill likely to come to us from the House of Commons next week is Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act. This is also known at the Time and Reader's Digest bill.

Senator Flynn: Wishful thinking!

Motion agreed to.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

STORM DAMAGE—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL AID—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, yesterday during the Question Period Senator Riley asked, in connection with the devastating storm which caused so much damage in New Brunswick and other areas of the Maritimes a few days ago, whether the Government of New Brunswick had informed the Government of Canada of its decision to declare or not to declare the area as a disaster area so that the federal government might make assessments of damage to businesses and individuals for the purpose of providing relief to those affected. I now have some supplementary information to provide.

I am informed that the Saint John area and the Bay of Fundy shore area have been declared disaster areas by the Government of the Province of New Brunswick. At this time federal government representatives, through the Emergency Measures Organization, are in contact with New Brunswick government officials in order to expedite assessment as to the damage to personal and real property in the aforementioned area.

The procedure that is followed in these cases is that the Premier of New Brunswick will ask the Prime Minister to provide federal government assistance, once an assessment is made of the damage in the province to both public and private properties. I understand that financial assistance is provided for uninsured risks in New Brunswick on the following basis:

1. The Government of the Province of New Brunswick must assume the responsibility for the first dollar per capita of damage in New Brunswick, and this amounts to $680,000.
2. For the next two dollars per capita of damage, the cost of compensation is shared 50 per cent provincial and 50 per cent federal.
3. The next two dollars per capita of compensation is shared 25 per cent provincial and 75 per cent federal.
4. Anything above that, the provincial government pays 10 per cent and the federal government 90 per cent.

That is the formula, honourable senators, for cases of this kind.

HALIFAX RELIEF COMMISSION PENSION CONTINUATION BILL

THIRD READING

Senator Norrie moved third reading of Bill C-78, to repeal an act respecting the Halifax Relief Commission and to authorize the continuation of pensions, grants or allowances paid by the Halifax Relief Commission.

Motion agreed and bill read third time and passed.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator McDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne), for the second reading of the Bill C-41, intitled: "An Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof". (Honourable Senator Yuzyk).

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I am not prepared at this time to proceed with the debate because certain materials that I have sought have reached me only now, and I am not prepared to incorporate them into my speech. Therefore, with leave, I request that this order stand, although I am prepared to yield to any senator who may wish to speak to Bill C-41 at this time.

Order stands.

[Senator Perrault.]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1975

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

He said: Honourable senators, those of us who have been here a little while will recall that every few years we are asked to consider amendments to the Criminal Code. These amendments are usually either procedural in nature or intended to cure defects in drafting. Sometimes a substantive amendment either creates a new crime or redefines existing criminal acts. These amendments are always important and necessary. Indeed, anything dealing with the criminal law of Canada is important but, in my view, these measures that are introduced and passed every few years can be regarded as housekeeping measures, generally speaking. Some of the amendments which we have been asked to consider today fall in this later category. Others go much further.

It is no secret that we will shortly be asked to consider further measures designed to provide a climate of peace and security throughout our land. The totality of these measures will go a long way to achieving that precious objective. Indeed, the government is committed to a review of all aspects of criminal law, substantive, procedural and evidentiary, to ensure that the law and those closely connected with it serve the needs of our ever-changing Canadian society. As parliamentarians, we have a duty to protect the members of our society from all threats to their well-being, whether the threats be physical or economic. It is our duty to respond quickly and firmly to any development which threatens the ability of Canadians to enjoy a sense of safety in public places and to have no fear whatsoever for the well-being of their children, whether in school or at play. It is our duty to see that our policemen receive the support necessary for the performance of their already difficult tasks. I believe that these amendments are in fulfillment of that duty. I know that all members of this chamber—and not only those of the legal profession—realize the need for some changes in Canadian criminal law. After considering these amendments, I believe that most will conclude, as I have, that these changes will satisfy the expectations of informed Canadians as to what Canadian criminal law should be.

Honourable senators, permit me to outline briefly the import and object of the most important of these objectives, which affect criminal law, both substantively and procedurally. Under these amendments it will become an offence to threaten to commit murder or to assault or to threaten to kidnap where the intended victim is a diplomat or other internationally protected person. I refer you to clauses 2(1), 3, 33 and 34 of the bill.

It will also become an offence to attack the residence or offices of internationally protected persons. The need for such an amendment is obvious considering recent events throughout the world. Canada has assumed certain obligations in this respect under the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, and these amendments will facilitate the discharge of our international responsibilities.

With regard to drinking and driving, one feature of the amendments will allow police to conduct roadside screening and to take the drinking driver off the road before he causes an accident. Here I refer you to clauses 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 72, 85 and 102 of the bill. While the amendments provide for heavier maximum fines and longer maximum periods of detention than previously, there is also provision for the judge to grant a conditional discharge to allow the accused driver to undergo treatment and undertake a program for alcohol abuse.

Other amendments deal with bookmaking and operating a messenger service to place bets. I refer honourable senators to clauses 11 and 12 of the bill.

There is provision allowing interprovincial sale of cards or tickets of lottery schemes where authorized by agreements among provincial governments.

The practice of using telecommunication facilities in a way that avoids the charge for the use thereof has become more prevalent, and an amendment is proposed to deal with those who possess, manufacture or distribute the so-called "blackbox" which enables the user to avoid the usual attendant charge.

Amendments are proposed to provide greater protection to the victim, the complainant, where the charge is rape or related sexual offences. As we all know, in most cases such trials are an ordeal for the innocent victim. The amendments would prevent defence counsel from cross examining the victim as to her previous sexual conduct with other than the accused, unless defence counsel were able to convince the presiding judge that the interest of justice would be better served by allowing this line of questioning. Another measure designed to save the victim from embarrassment would allow the judge to exclude the public from the trial or any of the proceedings. A judge would be required to state his reasons if he did not exclude the public. Along the same lines, on request a judge shall make an order prohibiting the publication of the identity of the complainant.

A further amendment would require the judge to give reasons in writing for not granting a motion to change the place of trial. The victim in a rape trial or the trial of some other sexual offence deserves these simple protections, which, of course, in no way affect the presumption of innocence or any other possible defence.

At this time a judge presiding over a rape trial, or a trial in relation to any other sexual offence, must, in conformity with section 142 of the Criminal Code, warn or instruct the jury that it is not safe to find the accused guilty on the uncorroborated evidence of the complainant. Bill C-41 proposes that section 142 be repealed and that trials in relation to such charges be conducted on exactly the same basis as any other offence under the Criminal Code.

Numerous representations have been made in support of the proposed amendment, as well as some supporting the present state of the law. This amendment is proposed because it is felt that the warning is no longer necessary to ensure a fair trial for the accused. The test of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt applies to all other offences without technical legal requirements. The amendment is introduced because it is felt that our criminal justice system and our citizenry, from among whom juries are chosen, have reached a level of maturity and sophistication whereby evidence can properly be assessed without this warning.

Even without the corroboration requirement, evidence of a corroborative nature will usually be presented at a rape trial just as it is now presented in the trials of other criminal offences. It is rare, indeed, that any criminal case will proceed to trial solely on the basis of the complainant's testimony against that of the accused. But just as this possibility is not excluded in other criminal trials, nor should it be excluded in a rape trial.

The mandatory warning section presently goes on to say that in any case the jury is entitled to convict if it is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the evidence of the victim is true. All juries are charged or instructed in these words, and it is this principle that affords the greatest protection for an accused, regardless of the charge or the method of trial he has chosen.

Because criminals use the borders of Canada and other countries to their advantage, because they employ international borders to protect themselves against the efforts of law enforcement agencies to put an end to their criminal activities, two measures are proposed in this bill to cover various fact situations. Here I refer to clause 29 of the bill. Firstly, it is proposed to make it an offence to knowingly possess the converted proceeds of an illegal act, whether committed in Canada or not. This amendment is directed at stopping the prevailing practice of committing a crime in one city or country and "laundering," so to speak, the proceeds of that crime by passing them through various front companies and even legitimate institutions, and perhaps converting them to some form of holding in another city or country. The proceeds of crimes are often traceable, but because they have been converted into some other form, no prosecution is presently possible.

The other provision, directed at deterring the activities of terrorist organizations and/or organized crime, is the proposal to make it an offence to conspire in Canada to commit an offence in any other country or to conspire outside Canada to commit an offence in this country. In this respect I refer to clause 36 of the bill. The need for these proposals has been shown time and again over the last few years with regard to the activities of large, foreign-based, so-called investment corporations that suddenly collapse, leaving the directors wealthy men while defrauding well-meaning Canadians of their investments. Similarly, the planning operations of various terrorist groups outside the country will be covered by this law if they direct their activities towards this country.

As a result of certain abuses which occurred with regard to the law concerning judicial interim release, commonly known as bail, this bill proposes a change in the principle presently applying, and here I refer to clause 47(1), (3), (4), (5) and (8), as well as to clauses 51, 52 and 53, of the bill.

At the present time a person accused of having committed a criminal offence must be released, either conditionally or unconditionally, unless the Crown establishes on a balance of probabilities that his detention is justified in the public interest. This bill sets out four situations where the onus is on the accused to satisfy the court that he should be released pending his trial.

First, a non-resident or foreign accused will bear the onus of establishing that he is a fit candidate for release pending trial. The present law with regard to foreign accused persons provides that a court may require the accused to deposit cash or some other valuable security to ensure his appearance at trial. If accused persons, in cases where this type of deposit is required, are prepared to lose that deposit—and may have done exactly that—the result is that those accused are never brought to trial. This proposed amendment in no way affects the presumption of innocence in the trial process. The principle of consistent and equal application of the law designed to ensure that all accused, Canadian and foreign, are brought to trial requires this change.

The second situation where the accused person has the onus of establishing that he should be released pending trial occurs where that person is awaiting trial on a previous indictable offence. I am certain that each senator has been made aware of some outrageous situations that have developed where a person awaiting trial on two, three or four charges has been granted bail after a subsequent charge has been laid against him. This provision does not remove all possibility of release, but would place upon the accused the responsibility for showing that the public interest will not suffer if release is granted. This situation has developed because the courts have placed undue emphasis on the primary grounds for retaining an accused in custody, which is to ensure his appearance at the trial, to the detriment oftentimes of the secondary ground, which deals with the public interest and the protection of the public.

The third situation concerns an accused who had previously breached the release provisions which he had undertaken to obey. The ordinary lesson of human experience tells us that this person must now demonstrate that he is a suitable candidate for release pending trial. We are already asking too much of our police officers if we expect them to apprehend someone for having committed an offence, and then to apprehend him again so that he may be made to appear at his trial. The present law is that the police may have to go through this exercise time and time again with regard to the same accused. This amendment would have them do it once and at that point the accused bears the onus of convincing a court that he may be released pending his trial.

The fourth situation which shifts the onus to the accused occurs when the offence with which he is charged is one of the following: murder, conspiracy to commit murder, trafficking in or importing narcotics, and conspiracy to traffic in or import narcotics. The obvious seriousness of these offences dictates this deviation from the general principle.

In a further effort to bring the interests of society and those of accused persons in balance, this bill proposes that the words "involving serious harm" be deleted from the paragraph dealing with the secondary ground.

Here, honourable senators, I refer to clause 57 of the bill, amending section 47(7)(b) of the code. This measure does not affect the usual onus which remains with the Crown. It does lighten the burden so that if the Crown establishes a substantial likelihood of the commission of a criminal offence, as opposed to the present test of a "criminal offence involving serious harm," the courts would detain the accused. In effect, this proposal would have the law state "any criminal offence resulting in serious harm" rather than leaving the courts to make a highly questionable and subjective distinction.

The amendment which I want to discuss at this time is one which deals with appeals from decisions on summary conviction charges. Here, honourable senators, I refer to clauses 89, 94 and 95 of the bill. At present, one method of appeal is by way of trial de novo before a judge of a county or district court, or, in the province of Quebec, a judge of the superior court. This method is a relic from the days when most summary conviction matters were heard by lay magistrates—magistrates with no legal training—and it was then considered proper to provide for a means of placing that same evidence before a judge with a proper legal background.

The original proposal of the government was to abolish appeals by way of trial de novo altogether. This was amended in the committee of the other place to grant such appeals with the permission of the judge of the court that would hear the trial de novo. This amendment retains the general principle of original proposal and yet gives it a sophistication and flexibility which is also desirable.

These are the aspects of this bill which are considered the most important.

There is, of course, another matter which I should mention because it is a rather new occurrence, and one which has been the subject of a great deal of publicity. The amendment has been called the Morgentaler amendment. This amendment has the effect of preventing our courts of appeal from changing an acquittal verdict given by a jury in a lower court. Honourable senators will recall that important trial which received a great deal of publicity when an appeal court reversed the "not guilty" verdict of the jury to a "guilty" verdict, and ordered the judge of the lower court to pass sentence.

It was stated in the judgment handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada, especially in the remarks of the Honourable Mr. Justice Louis-Philippe Pigeon, that this was without precedent in Canadian jurisprudence. Everyone became aware of the consequence of this judgment when the Minister of Justice ordered a new trial for Dr. Morgentaler.

The present law is amended to prevent repetition of such an occurrence in the future.

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator Langlois: I believe the reason is quite evident.

Senator Flynn: I don't think so.

Senator Langlois: As the former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, said in the other place, it leads to the destruction of the jury system.

Senator Flynn: Not so.

Senator Langlois: I am only repeating what he said in the other place.

Senator Flynn: Don't be a mere repeater.

Senator Langlois: He was your former leader.

Senator Flynn: That doesn't matter. I always think for myself.

Senator Langlois: However, this is a reason with which I am in accord.

Senator Flynn: If you have no better reason than that—

Senator Langlois: I do not deny my honourable friend the right to disagree with his former leader or with me.

Senator Flynn: I am surprised that you have no better reason than that.

Senator Langlois: It is a very good and valid reason, and my honourable friend knows that.

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): It is a good answer.

Senator Langlois: Many other subject matters are dealt with in this bill which, to my mind, warrant our serious consideration and support. I commend these amendments to honourable senators.

Before resuming my seat I would state that it is presently my intention, if this bill receives second reading in this chamber, to move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

● (1440)

Senator Flynn: I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Perrault: What is there left to say?

Senator Connolly: Honourable senators, if I may, I should like to put a question to the sponsor of the bill. I did not quite follow what he said about the position of the court in cases of serious crimes such as murder, conspiracy to commit murder, trafficking in narcotics and the importation of narcotics, where the problem of detention before trial arises. Did I understand the proposal of the bill to be that detention is mandatory in such cases, or is it discretionary when the accused is arraigned?

Senator Langlois: I assume the honourable senator is referring to the shifting of the onus from the Crown to the accused in cases of crimes of this nature. Because of the seriousness of the offences of murder, conspiracy to commit murder, trafficking in or importing narcotics and conspiracy to traffic in or import narcotics, the onus is shifted, and it becomes mandatory for the accused to convince the court that he should be released pending trial.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL CODE (COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCE)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER DISCHARGED AND BILL WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion, in amendment, of the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Norrie, to the motion of the Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Eudes, for the second reading of the Bill S-21, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code (commutation of death sentence)".—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, this item has stood for some time. I should like to say two things: First, that I am in sympathy with the objective of the sponsor of the bill, but, like many other senators, I am not too sure about the method the bill would have us adopt; second, that this bill was likely introduced to force the government into making a decision of some kind, and since it appears that this is about to be done there does not now seem to be any particular reason for continuing the item on the Order Paper. Unless someone else wishes to speak, I would have no objection to the sponsor's withdrawing the bill, if that is what he wishes to do. If he prefers that the question be put, I would not disagree with that either.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, this bill has been on the Order Paper for quite some time. I believe all honourable senators knew something was going on in the other place by way of amending the Criminal Code so that eventually we would have something to work on. The debate which has taken place on Bill S-21 has, in my opinion, been worthwhile in many respects. It has enabled us to receive the opinions of highly qualified and knowledgeable members of this house on a matter of national interest, namely, capital punishment. I shall not speak about capital punishment today except to say that it is a matter of personal conscience: one either believes in it or does not believe in it, and that is all there is to it. I doubt that we can change that.

The debate which has taken place here has been useful. Those senators who participated in it have given the people of Canada their opinions and feelings on capital punishment. I think that is sufficient, and that we need not debate it any further.

In my opinion, we should drop this item from the Orders of the Day now. With the consent of the seconder, Senator Eudes, I move that the bill be withdrawn. Possibly at some time in the future it can be reintroduced, if that is considered appropriate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF SENATORS

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—ORDER DISCHARGED AND MOTION WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon the privileges and immunities that apply to members of the Senate within the precincts of the Senate, and the powers of the Speaker in respect thereof. (Honourable Senator Petten).

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I defer to my leader.

Senator Flynn: As usual. What else is new?

An Hon. Senator: How sweet it is!

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is not my intention now to make a major speech on this particular motion. I merely wish to say that because certain matters related to the privileges and immunities of members of the Senate have come before the courts recently, it is not, in my view, appropriate at this time to proceed with this motion.

In light of this situation, and in accordance with the view expressed by a number of other senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the order be discharged and the motion withdrawn.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I have no objection to the suggestion of the Leader of the Government, but I should like to say that I cannot associate myself with the reason he gives, namely, that there are matters before the courts affecting this problem. I cannot agree with that at all. The only matter before the courts is an action taken by Sky Shops against a member of the other place in respect of matters which are not related at all to this motion. I cannot agree with the leader, therefore.

The matter which gave rise to the incident which led to this motion did concern a member of this house, but that matter was not at all what we were asking the committee to investigate. We wanted them to look into the privileges and immunities of senators to ascertain what they were, if indeed we had any. If the Leader of the Government is worried that some people might conclude that this committee was being struck because of, or to look into, the Sky Shops business, then I would agree that that is perhaps a legitimate source of concern. But I would have preferred that he give that as the reason for withdrawing his motion.

Naturally, I reserve the right to raise this question again—perhaps at a more appropriate time. Certainly, I think the question, and our going into it in depth, is important.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that is certainly an allied reason for my suggesting that the motion be withdrawn at this time.

● (1450)

In past weeks there has been comment in the media, as honourable senators have noted, suggesting that this proposal for a special committee is really designed to preserve certain rights for the Senate which are not available to other members of the public. I think our intent has been misconstrued by at least some observers in this country, and I know that all honourable senators believe this to be a totally incorrect construction of the purpose of this proposal.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that it may be more appropriate to bring this matter back for further consideration by the Senate at some future time. There is no doubt but that it is an important question. In moving the motion, I made some comments on this particular subject. I stand by those comments. I know that the Leader of the Opposition also stands by the comments he made at that time. I agree with him, however, that for a number of reasons this is not the most appropriate time for the Senate to proceed with this examination.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I am very glad to hear the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition say what they have about the possibility of raising this matter again at some other time, because it seems to me that the discussion which took place on this subject earlier revealed a considerable degree of uncertainty about exactly what the privileges of senators were in circumstances of this kind, and I think it may be important that at some suitable time—and perhaps this is not a suitable time—this thing should be cleared up. Otherwise, another incident of the sort might occur and we shall be plunged again into the twilight zone in which we found ourselves on the earlier occasion and would not know exactly what was what or who was who or who could give the necessary permission, if permission can be given, and what the proper steps are to take. I think in the long run it is a matter of considerable importance to the Senate, and should not be allowed simply to go by default. I hope we have not got to the stage where years will pass, and I shall be long gone from this chamber, and the thing will come up again in a fresh crisis.

Senator Perrault: It may be very appropriate at some point in the future to refer the whole matter to one of the standing committees. I agree with the honourable senator that it is an important question, but I agree as well with the thought that has been expressed by the Leader of the Opposition that this may not be the most appropriate time. As I say, it is an important question that must be dealt with, but perhaps there will be a better time for it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 10, at 8 p.m.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 4, the debate on the motion of Senator McDonald for second reading of Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, the sponsor of Bill C-41, Senator McDonald, presented a good, lucid explanation of the main features of the Western Grain Stabilization Bill, which reached this chamber last week. It made my second reading of the 51 clauses, encompassing 44 pages in the two official languages, more understandable, especially if I remind honourable senators that my background had little to do with agriculture, except indirectly when I was a teacher in my early years in farming districts in Saskatchewan. Senator McDonald's comprehension of farming and the problems of agriculture is much greater than mine. However, I believe that I have some idea of the general problems in agriculture and a genuine interest in helping to improve the lot of the farmer. We are all aware that a healthy agricultural economy contributes enormously to a sound general economy of the country.

We know that the success of agriculture depends on weather and markets. There are years of high prices and years of low prices, years of abundant crops and years of crop failure, in many cases for extended periods of time. These frequent drastic fluctuations in the incomes of the producers, with their boom-and-bust cycles, have had harmful effects on agriculture, causing many prairie farmers to go bankrupt and to abandon the industry which is so vital to our country.

The instability of grain farming has been of concern to government and the political parties, no doubt from the time when Manitoba and later Saskatchewan and Alberta became provinces in Confederation. All parties, I believe, have in the past several decades favoured schemes to eliminate the instability factors and establish stabilization plans. Therefore, the idea of western grain stabilization is not new. What is different in this piece of legislation is that it comes to us with more specific and concrete features.

Bill C-41 has its roots in Bill C-244, which was initiated in the other house by the Honourable Otto Lang in 1969, after the establishment of the Grains Administration of the Government of Canada, composed of representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Ministry of Transport, and several special advisers. This administrative structure of government agencies involved in the grains industry was an attempt to coordinate their efforts in this field, and resulted in the presentation of Bill C-244.

A heated debate took place, particularly over the compulsory feature of the plan and the fact that the cost of production had not been taken into consideration. The opposition parties, led by Progressive Conservatives, who had the largest number of seats in the three Prairie provinces, and with the support of farm organizations and farmers in general, severely criticized the bill. Many amendments were presented, but Mr. Lang was not in the mood at that time to accept what appeared to him to be drastic changes, and so Bill C-244 was withdrawn with a commitment by the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to come back to Parliament with a new proposal that would take into consideration the views, feelings, needs and demands of the farm organizations and farmers.

The basic principles of Bill C-41 are generally similar to the principles of the earlier piece of legislation which had been withdrawn. The mechanics of the western grain stabilization fund have been fully and adequately explained by Senator McDonald. It will not be necessary, therefore, for me to repeat these details, except to emphasize that the Government of Canada will guarantee the solvency of this fund.

The plan takes the cost of production factors directly into consideration, which previously had been a point of contention. In order to appeal to the farmers, the compulsory aspect of the previous legislation has now been modified.

Although it is described as a voluntary plan, in the initial stage every producer will be included in the plan. However, each farmer will have the option in the first three years to make his decision whether or not he wishes to continue participation. In other words, in the three-year period he has the opportunity to opt out of the plan by a simple notification. He still has one more opportunity to re-enter the plan, but as a conditional participant. A 10 per cent penalty will be imposed on any payments that will be made from the stabilization fund to such a farmer in the first three years of his renewed participation, and there will be adjustments of interest. After that he becomes a full participant once more.

The provisions of this plan, as outlined in Bill C-41, have been endorsed in general by farmers through many of their institutions and organizations. Among these are the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

The Western Agricultural Conference, which held its annual meeting in Regina on January 15 this year, adopted the following policy:

That the grains stabilization legislation be adopted at an early date and certainly prior to the completion of the current session of Parliament.

The participating members of this conference were the Alberta Unifarm, the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture, the Manitoba Farm Bureau, and the United Grain Growers, representative of the Prairie provinces. It is obviously apparent that this piece of legislation has the support of the majority of the grain producers.

I believe that some clauses of this bill require more explanation and elaboration. Knowing that the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and departmental officials from the Department of Agriculture will be present when the committee will be considering this bill, I should like to raise some questions for clarification. Perhaps the sponsor of the bill in the Senate will want to deal with some of these questions when he is closing the debate on second reading.

The other day I did raise the question of why this proposed act is to be administered by the Canadian Wheat Board. Since this legislation is a form of income protection and an incomes scheme similar to insurance, it would appear more logical to have it administered by the Department of Agriculture, which is responsible for the implementation of agricultural policy. Since this is a gigantic plan, quite complicated and complex, it would appear that it would require a large bureaucracy scattered throughout the Prairies to administer it. How large a bureaucracy is anticipated and where will the headquarters be situated?

The Canadian Wheat Board will be in charge of the administration. I am therefore assuming that the main office will be in Winnipeg. Will there be branch offices and, if so, where will they be located?

The cost of the administration of the western grain stabilization plan throughout the vast territory would appear to be enormous, if not astronomical. I should like to receive a calculated estimate of the operational expenses of this plan in its initial stages, as well as on an annual basis after it is fully established.

There are crop insurance plans in operation in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Will the grain stabilization plan be related in any way to these crop insurance programs, which also cover farmers who experience crop failures and disasters? The grain stabilization plan, as presented in Bill C-41, is designed to operate on a vast territorial prairie basis throughout Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and, possibly, other provinces and territories where grain farming is carried on. Some thought must have been given that it might be more efficient or practical to break down the administration into smaller regions which would have similar conditions and problems. How does the government regard the practicality of regionalization, and what are the facts and arguments which are used to reject this method of administration?

I am aware that there are persons who suggest that the stabilization plan would have a greater appeal to farmers were it set up on an individual basis, similar to individual insurance policies. Farmers could have individual accounts upon which to draw. What are the arguments against an individual plan for each individual grain producer?

There is the important question of the cost of production. The legislation does itemize some of these costs, such as property taxes, seed, fertilizers, pesticides, operation of machinery, hired labour, and so forth, which are termed "cash costs." We know that the Income Tax Act allows for depreciation in calculating the value of buildings, equipment, machinery and instruments required for certain kinds of work and operations. Why has depreciation not been included as an item of the cost of production?

I am also wondering about the effectiveness of the grain stabilization benefits to producers during several successive years of hard times. What if the grain markets were depressed for a period of over five years—that is, for six, seven or eight years—and the prices of grain during this extended period continued to drop and stay low? The pay-out at the end of such a bad cycle would be minimal, and perhaps not even forthcoming. What meaning would income stabilization have then?

I am also thinking about the lot of the farmer in certain areas of the country which for several years, due to adverse weather conditions or acts of God, suffer crop failures and inadequate farmers' income. Yet throughout the vast prairie region the great majority of farmers could be experiencing a boom and the averaging of the farm income would not necessitate general pay-outs for several successive years. Is there any provision made under such circumstances for the grain stabilization fund to come to the assistance of farmers in areas that were stricken with misfortune during the general boom cycle?

These are some of the questions that require attention before the bill is passed in this chamber. There are senators who have a good knowledge of farming operations and economics. They should participate in this debate and in the discussions of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture this week, when the operation of the grain stabilization fund will be fully analyzed to make sure that the farmer is given a square deal.

We in the Opposition regard Bill C-41 as a much improved piece of legislation and therefore endorse it in principle. After further study in committee, where we shall seek satisfactory answers to questions and perhaps some alterations to make the bill more effective, we intend to support its passage on third reading. Our hope is that grain stabilization will help to improve the lot of the farmer and his contribution to the economy of Canada, and a better life for all Canadians.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator McDonald speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, I shall attempt to answer some of the questions posed by Senator Yuzyk. In those areas where I am not able to give an adequate answer I am sure his questions will be put to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture when this bill reaches it.

He first asked how this program was to be administered. It is my understanding that there is a western grain stabilization administration which will administer the bill. The connection that the Canadian Wheat Board will have is, of course, in the fact that it is the main selling agent for prairie grains. They will, therefore, be doing the collecting at the country elevator points of delivery, and if the total of $500, which is the maximum, is not collected there, they will make deductions from the final payments and so on. The individual farmer will make his maximum contribution of $500, not only through the immediate day-to-day or month-to-month deliveries to the country elevator system, but also through any final or interim payment that may be made.

Therefore, we can see that the administration will not be by the Canadian Wheat Board, but by the western grain stabilization administration.

The senator asked where the headquarters will be. I do not know.

He went further to ask if there will be branch offices. I cannot see the need for any branch offices, but this is my own personal opinion. The reason I say that is that this particular act makes provision for the calculation of total sales from the prairie region, that region where the act applies, and from those total sales the cost of production is deducted. Using those items that the senator referred to, a figure is arrived at which is the net income to the farmers in this total region. If the income is below the five-year average, then there will be a payment made out of the fund. There is no need for branch offices.

This bill is not designed to take care of a crop failure in a particular area. As Senator Yuzyk mentioned, today most of the provinces of Canada have a crop insurance program. I believe all provinces affected by this particular piece of legislation have crop insurance. This is not a crop insurance program; it is a means of stabilizing income from the sale of grain over a period of years. When there is a crop failure in a particular area, then crop insurance, which is a shared cost program between the provinces and the federal government, comes into play.

This is the reason, in my view, why it is not necessary to have branch offices. This is the reason, in my view, why it is not necessary for this plan to be based on an individual producer's production and costs. In that case crop insurance is going to take care of his problems. This bill is designed to take care of a problem that concerns the whole Prairie region, where the vast majority of cereal grains are produced in Canada.

We are looking at two different problems, and there are two different pieces of legislation to deal with them. This one is to deal with low sales, low prices, drought or some other catastrophe that covers a large area. It is not meant to deal with a hailstorm, grasshoppers or drought in a confined area. Crop insurance is designed to take care of those particular problems.

With reference to the costs involved in the administration of the plan, I do not know what they will be and I cannot give an estimate, although I think they would be very small.

It is not very difficult to arrive at the total sales of cereal grain and the amount of money involved, and it is not very difficult to subtract from that total sum the cost of production.

The reason why depreciation is not included under the cost of production is that, when you are talking about cost, the only item taken into consideration is cash outlays. Depreciation on buildings and equipment is not a cash outlay in a given year, but all of those costs such as fuel, taxes, insurance, repairs, tires, tubes, anti-freeze, et cetera, represent cash that the farmer had to pay out of his pocket in order to produce a crop that he either did not sell because of restricted markets, or sold at a very low price, and consequently his income was not up to the five-year average.

Senator Yuzyk mentioned that this program may get into difficulties, or may not provide the benefits that we hope it will. If we get into an extended period of either very small sales or a combination of small sales and low prices and drought, then I agree there is that possibility. Under those circumstances, this program might not meet the needs of the day. I hope such circumstances never prevail, but if they do, then my own personal view is that certain amendments will have to be made to the legislation. If we find ourselves in circumstances similar to those of the thirties, this legislation would not be particularly meaningful since there would be virtually no payments under it if the period of drought and decreased prices were to extend over such a long time.

I think Senator Yuzyk will agree with me that farming practices in the Prairies have changed a good deal since the 1930s. I doubt very much that the producers of cereal grains will see another period such as was experienced in the 1930s. There are many built-in factors to prevent a recurrence of that. Moreover, world conditions are much different today from what they were then.

It is my hope that such conditions will not occur again, but anything is possible so I suppose they could. But, I repeat that if that were to happen then, in my view, it would be necessary to amend this legislation in order to make it do the job it is designed to do. Obviously, only the future will tell. If we find ourselves in such conditions I will be one of the first to complain.

I think I have answered the main questions the honourable senator asked. If my answers are not satisfactory, I hope he will put the same questions to those people who will be present when the bill is before the committee.

Honourable senators, if the bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McDonald moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

FREE TRADE

AN ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION FOR CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.

He said:

[Translation]

Honourable senators, total free trade, as recommended by some economists and recently envisaged by the Economic Council of Canada to help expand our foreign trade, deserves serious consideration.

We now know that Keynes' theories were adopted because of their palatable ability to indefinitely postpone our debt problems at all levels, and thereby stimulate the economy through indebtedness. But they now confront us with huge and constantly increasing obligations, the meeting of which would truly impoverish us. With all its benefits, Keynes' policy has been very costly indeed. We succeeded in building up a national debt of astronomical proportions, and the payment of interest absorbs a growing part of all government revenues. The money we have been keeping in our pocket does not in fact belong to us.

And because of our obligations we will leave behind an embarrassing deficit and a heavy debt burden for our children and future generations to pay, for which history will hold us responsible and may even condemn us.

● (2030)

This is one of the reasons why I constantly emphasize the importance of carefully choosing an economic policy which entails no instability, especially since we are now reviewing our economic guidelines and rethinking our means of developing international trade with industrialized and underdeveloped countries.

It has become a fashion for some well-known economists to favour for Canada an absolute trading policy, which, in my opinion, is far from rational.

I believe that to be effective, free trade must occur in some areas of our economy and under specific conditions which do not involve any element which could create a significant deficit in our economic balance. It remains difficult for the practical man to understand how there can exist a country like ours, which has a high standard of living and strong safeguards against high unemployment, where families spend more because of extreme temperatures, but obtain from the state medical aid, a retirement pension and a minimum guaranteed income in case of unemployment, while the state endeavours to obtain the necessary funds or to assume debts which will eventually become payable.

It is under such conditions that our Canadian manufacturers must produce. This is why the cost of export products can double or triple when they deal with other countries which do not have to face major marginal requirements.

There are more people in Canada, and especially in Quebec and in the provinces, who count on secondary industries for their economic survival. The damage caused again recently to important sectors of secondary industries by a simple relaxation of tariff protection in certain areas, without compensating advantages in our exports, can only forecast other disasters which will result for our economy and our secondary industries from the careless and purist implementation of a totally free trade policy in Canada.

[English]

The secondary manufacturing industries, which would be greatly affected by absolute free trade, have been, are still and must continue to be the mainstay of Canada's economy. Their constant development is important for Canada. They are as indispensable in our economic system here as in any good system elsewhere. Without them, Canada would not be able to survive as one of the major industrial nations. William Loughheed's surveys, along with many other surveys by recognized reliable economists, support these economic views.

One does not have to be an economic scholar to affirm that, with regard to our national economy, in order to increase the growth of our gross national product, secondary manufacturing will have to be nurtured with a view to playing a much stronger role in our economic life. Realistic economic policies for long-term application will have to be agreed on, first with our provinces, then with foreign traders. These economic policies will have to be reliable, uniform and stable. They will have to be carried out with the avowed object of putting our Canadian economy on an assured long-term line of favourable trade balances so as to make up the recent losses in our international trade balances. There is no place for adventure in good economic policies. I believe the adoption of a purist free trade policy will not provide the needed good results in Canada. Indeed, it would make these quite impossible to attain.

Along with many others, I do not believe that secondary industry can develop freely enough and in the most effective direction if it has to exist, as has been said, only as an extension of the economy of the nineteenth century or as a mere adjunct to our primary industry or as an appendage of our newer, expanding, but less-developed service industry. We must be fully assured that no free trade arrangements will tend to lead to the destruction of some of our secondary industries, especially in certain highly vulnerable sectors; indeed, we must see to it that this does not happen.

The secondary manufacturing industries, when producing at high capacity, create important economic values with only modest material resources. They nevertheless make an important contribution to the growth of the GNP and the nation's productivity, which make the nation competitive and progressive. It must be acknowledged that it also contributes to the higher standard of living of its citizens.

Canada, young as it is in its development and beset as it is by a highly competitive world, cannot, in my opinion, afford far-reaching overt risks, or consequential adventurous chances of economic stagnancy or curtailments of the country's production, which provides our real growth and true employment. In the last two years we have witnessed the results of a relaxation of import controls, and what that has really accomplished for us. I repeat again that in my own province this general relaxation of import control has killed the glove industry, mortally wounded the shoe industry, caused the closing or the stagnation of many segments of the textile industry and the glass industry, and caused considerable instability and insecurity to occur in some of our other secondary manufacturing industries. It has made import licensees out of many of our manufacturers, generally reduced employment and helped create industrial instability.

Total free trade is now being promoted here in the hope of assuring a beneficial expansion of our international trade. There is much caution to be exercised when it means, as it does, the endangering or the disappearance of a number of our staple industries which have given us a considerable percentage of our employment and our gross national product. There is much caution to be used when there is an uneven situation between, on the one hand, Canada, which has a high standard of living—even though it has fallen from third to seventh place among the nations—maintains some of the most socialized protective policies in the world for its people, and bears a high cost in fighting extreme climatic conditions for a good part of the year, and, on the other hand, those nations with which we are trading. Those nations generally have a much lower standard of living, no social tax drain on their economies, and no need to assume the costs imposed by weather extremes. They can provide their industries with an abundance of cheap labour that does not require to be paid for leisure time, does not need full protection and fringe benefits, and is content with less than average purchasing power because its immediate needs are not great.

We are not really playing the same kind of ball game with these countries as they are playing with us. I am stunned by the recommendation of absolute free trade for Canada. Only disadvantage to Canada can come out of it. In my opinion, there is no practical possibility of advantageous absolute free trade for Canada under present circumstances. It would cost Canada many of its industries which give employment to hundreds of thousands of its people. It would quickly drain our economy for the benefit of the countries with which we are dealing. The final results for Canada would be somewhat uneven and disadvantageous to Canada because of the economic inequality of the nations with which we deal. Indeed, we would simply export much less than we would import.

I agree, however, that it would not be the same if real reciprocity were arranged only in chosen favourable sectors of the economy, and if there were reciprocity within a bloc of nations which would deal more evenly because of their respective balanced purchasing powers, and where arrangements for exchange could be made in areas where a nation was at a greater disadvantage, or where a particular industry would suffer unfavourably.

In its trading and dealing with other nations, Canada must of necessity assume the position of helping its industry—its greatest employer—whenever it is necessary to avoid domestic economic stagnation, instead of applying the absolute free trade rule. In my opinion, honourable senators, we would be better served by aiding the expansion of our foreign trade with intelligent treaties of true reciprocity in the non-sensitive areas, where mutual reciprocal advantages exist and where possibilities of trade damage remain minimal. Imperfect as they have been—and except in a few known areas affecting some of our secondary industries—GATT arrangements have otherwise generally served Canada quite advantageously. We should not sacrifice or injure whole sectors of our secondary industry for some passing, questionable or risky trade advantages. These, as we have learned, never pay off as they should, and only help to worsen our unfavourable trade balances.

You may infer that I am not in agreement with the reasoning of the Economic Council of Canada as to the good which total free trade would do for Canada. There is no proof, no assurance, that it will be good for Canada. I find there are only theoretical unproven affirmations in that regard, which should not be tested by Canada.

A few months ago, Ronald McPherson, a Toronto consultant on business economics, said that "free trade could create more problems for Canada's economy than it could solve."

This was proven through history whenever and wherever the free trade formula was tried. Total free trade would place Canada's secondary industry in the worst possible economic position, from where it would be hard to recover at a time when four or five of its important sectors are having major difficulties because of Canada's generous import allowances.

Mr. McPherson called simplistic and naïve the recent recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada for the gradual elimination of tariff barriers between Canada and the United States, where we are already incurring a yearly trade deficit. The costs of manufacturing in Canada are certainly greater than in countries we now trade with, and because of that, he said, Canada's chances of improving her competitive position in the near future are very limited indeed.

The economist advocated a policy of protection to those industries with prices closest to world levels. He said:

This scheme would give consumers the price restraints needed under today's conditions and would give management a fighting chance to recapture lost domestic markets. It would improve profit prospects from which the government greatly benefits. It would also help to stop the drainage of money that is much needed in the Canadian economy.

On the other end, widening our export trade by the means of absolute free trade would be extremely costly to Canada, basically and economically questionable and would be conducive to an immediate weaker economical position for Canada.

At this time I would like to plead again for what was strongly advocated in 1962 by one of our valuable colleagues, Senator Maurice Lamontagne—the expansion of our trade in an Atlantic economic community, promoting gradual reciprocal trade as a mutual beneficial long-term objective.

Its first concrete goal had been embodied in one of the articles of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, but there was really no implementation of it. There was at that time not enough recognition that everyone had become interdependent in the economic field as well as the military field.

Since 70 per cent of Canadian export trade is with the United States, I believe that it is wrong to accept or promote the idea of a "third option," providing for free trade with any group that would exclude the United States. This, however, does not rule out free trade with the United States alone, which is the largest importer of our products, bearing in mind that we have recently been in trade balance deficits with that country—last year to the extent of some $750 million.

The Economic Council has said that the basic argument against any policy to demolish trade barriers is, amazingly, that the only Canadian activity to be so threatened would be our secondary manufacturing. Well, these economists surprisingly, at least to me, discounted the employment provided by the secondary manufacturing industry. It is now 22 per cent of the labour force and is of major importance in our secondary manufacturing industry. Such an attitude is unreasonable and unacceptable. Can the unfavourable consequences be overlooked or put aside?

The electors—the workers in the steel, shoe, clothing, textile and chemical industries—could hardly be counted on to support the giving up of their industries to some foreign countries because production there would cost less because we choose to give our workers protective social and economic security that is costly. Our workers would not give up without strong resistance the right to work at their own trade, in which they have acquired a high level of skill over the years, to seek a different form of employment which might be hard for them to master. I am of the opinion that for the betterment of our present economy it would be quite possible instead to put into action other known political mechanisms capable of improving and developing further our international economy.

Total free trade faces the arguments that restrictive trade measures may be recommended to better advantage when the survival and the stability of certain social groups—the farmers or textile workers, for instance—are threatened by massive importations, and when more generally it is necessary to compensate various economic inequalities such as those that result from differences in levels of salaries or fiscal systems.

Someone, as a requisite, would have to be prepared to grant credits to countries because their trade cannot be balanced. This would require the establishment of special, uneven rules of cooperation, and would necessitate a major improvement of international credit and money convertibility.

So far, there has been an oversimplification of our problems relating to any total free trade goals for Canada. A great deal of clarification is needed before its consideration here. It would create the need to promote special harmonization, indeed political integration policies, which would presuppose the loss to the country of some of its local sovereignty to a supranational organization. I do not believe such a policy would be either acceptable or advantageous at this time for Canada. The inequality of the countries requires some adequate but special concession from Canada, which would be difficult to obtain.

The system of GATT arrangements, made intelligently under the reciprocity concept in non-sensitive areas and, in equalized values of imports and exports, appears to me more effective, less cumbersome and more practical than any form of the advocated total free trade policy for Canada's immediate and long-term expansion in the area of international trade. I believe the best interests of Canada would be served if the total free trade recommendations of the Economic Council were analyzed in respect of their real consequences rather than accepting, without debate, their predicted effects.

Senator Molgat: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Desruisseaux: Certainly.

Senator Molgat: During the course of your excellent speech you expressed the view that Canada was not ready for free trade at this time. When do you feel Canada could consider free trade as a viable policy?

Senator Desruisseaux: I do not want to speak like Marx, the great philosopher, who was totally in favour of free trade. Given the Third World as it exists, and with which we would have to deal, we would be at a great disadvantage. In addition, we would be at the mercy of the larger nations through supranational organizations. That is the situation as I see it.

Given the small population of Canada and the fact that many of our industries are presently struggling for survival al, we could not afford to take a chance on the future by having total free trade. Because of our highly paid labour force and our high standard of living, we do not compare favourably with other nations with respect to cost of production. In spite of the fact that we have the second lowest inflation rate in the world, other nations, because of cheap labour, can produce the same quality merchandise for much less.

To cite just one example, when some of the tariff barriers in relation to textiles were removed, some of our department stores sent their representatives to other countries with garment patterns, particularly shirt patterns, and in each and every instance, according to the reports I have received, they were able to obtain the garments at less cost abroad. This happened to the extent that our manufacturers became importers.

I hope that answers your question.

Senator van Roggen: May I be permitted a question? I quite understand your concern about total free trade if by the word "total" you mean free trade by Canada with all nations of the world, because the wage scales in the Third World, as you quite properly pointed out, would make it impossible for the textile industry, for one, to exist in Canada. I did not read the report of the Economic Council as suggesting we should have worldwide free trade. It recommended a series of possibilities relative to Europe and Japan, and a third possibility of Canada-United States free trade.

Do you equally reject the idea of a phased free trade arrangement with the United States, which has wage scales and cost factors equivalent to Canada's, when the argument of the Economic Council is that this would give us the economies of scale to enable our industrial sector to grow to the size that would enable it to be competitive in the world's markets?

Senator Desruisseaux: If I may deal, first of all, with the report of the Economic Council, unless I have misinterpreted it I think it does recommend Canada's going to free trade. The Economic Council did not say it wanted the subject opened up for study. I think what the chairman said in relation to it indicates that he is in favour of it. That is not to say that he is really fighting for it. He wants it debated, and I believe a debate on the pros and cons of total free trade would be good for Canada.

In 1911, Sir Wilfrid Laurier introduced the subject of reciprocal trade treaties with the United States as a solution, and he was defeated because of it. Those were not free trade treaties; they were reciprocal trade treaties, which meant that both countries would allow certain commodities to cross the border free of tariffs. The fear at that time, of course, was that Canada's industries would be unprotected. Personally, I advocate such treaties as a solution, provided they do not adversely affect individual industries of either country. I think such a solution would be good for Canada because of its comparatively smaller market.

I hope I have answered all aspects of your question.

Senator van Roggen: You certainly have answered my question in part. I will not pursue the balance of it at this point.

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): If the honourable senator will permit me a comment, what he said in relation to the defeat of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1911 was no doubt the case in the English-speaking provinces. The Tories there were pleading, "No trade with the Yankees." In Quebec they were preaching something else, about dreadnoughts and the war; they were exploiting the nationalists, the feeling of the French-Canadians in Quebec. In the other house they were talking against the Americans, and in Quebec they were talking in favour of the Americans. That was the policy of the Tories during all that time, and we have to watch them even today.

Senator Desruisseaux: I am wondering if I am being asked a question. I should like to correct a view that has been expressed.

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): It was just a remark; it was not a question.

Senator Desruisseaux: May I make an observation on this point?

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): Of course.

Senator Desruisseaux: Senator Fournier mentioned Sir Wilfrid Laurier's policy at that time. I do not want to go into that in any depth, because I do not believe the problem was understood in Canada. Many books have been written on it. It is agreed that the different views should have been explored at greater length, but no answer is given.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 11, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

MR. ELKADI KW KUSSAI OF IRAQ

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on your behalf I would like to welcome a distinguished visitor from Iraq, Mr. Elkadi Kw Kussai, who is visiting our country.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1) (i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Riley be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Robichaud on the list of senators serving on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1975

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 5, the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, first of all I should like to say to Senator Langlois that even though I interrupted him when he was explaining Bill C-71, I nonetheless admire the manner in which he explained it, except perhaps on this particular point: this is an omnibus bill; that is, a bill containing a great number of amendments to the Criminal Code which are not necessarily interrelated. We may very well fully agree with some of the amendments while having some misgivings about others and even oppose a few.

It is never very easy for a legislature to come to a decision about this type of legislation on second reading, because one has to approve in principle a bill dealing with several things with which one may not entirely agree.

Nevertheless, I do not think this bill raises very serious difficulties in this regard. But in other circumstances it might happen and when such bills are before us that we should consider the possibility of putting every question; in other words, of dividing the subject matter so that the views of the Senate may be accurately recorded on every question before us.

As far as I am concerned, I intend to deal only with clause 75 of the bill today. Other honourable senators on this side of the house, and probably on the other side, will deal with the other amendments provided in this piece of legislation.

[English]

Honourable senators, I will restrict my remarks today to the amendment provided by clause 75 of this bill, which was referred to by the sponsor of the bill, Senator Langlois, as the Morgentaler case.

Senator Langlois: Amendment.

Senator Flynn: Yes, the Morgentaler amendment.

• (1410)

This case, since it is before the courts, is sub judice. I shall, therefore, try valiantly to restrict my remarks simply to the principle embodied in the legislation. But that may not be easy because it is very difficult to discuss this kind of legislation without referring to some of the facts which have given rise to the amendment proposed by the government.

As honourable senators know, this amendment follows a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada rendered last year in the case of Morgentaler vs. the Queen, where—

Senator Connolly: What was the case?

Senator Flynn: Morgentaler. Am I pronouncing it incorrectly?

An Hon. Senator: It is pronounced "taller."

Senator Flynn: It is "taller" than I thought. In any event, this was a case where the accused was acquitted by a jury. The Appeal Court of Quebec found that the instructions of the judge to the jury had been wrong in law, and decided it would apply the present provision of the Criminal Code in this respect. Since the facts were admitted and since the defence offered in law was unacceptable, the appeal court decided that the verdict of the jury should be changed to one of guilty. It could have ordered a new trial but, since the facts were all admitted, it apparently saw no need.

This decision of the Appeal Court of Quebec was brought before the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court, in a judgment of five to four, upheld the decision. Following the judgment of the Supreme Court there was an outcry all across Canada to the effect that this should not be allowed to take place. There was quite a public debate on the question.

As my honourable friend Senator Langlois mentioned the other night, an outspoken critic of the judgment was the Right Honourable John Diefenbaker, who said that the law was wrong and should be changed. He did not criticize the Supreme Court, but others did.

I tried to have my honourable friend Senator Langlois explain the amendment last week, but he replied only with an argument based on authority—that is, the viewpoint of Mr. Diefenbaker. I respect, of course, Mr. Diefenbaker's opinion, because of his great experience before the criminal courts and in Parliament, but I must point out that Mr. Diefenbaker, as well as most defence counsel, have a tendency to support any verdict of a jury when it is a verdict of acquittal.

Senator Asselin: Because these defence counsel are and were good lawyers.

Senator Flynn: My friend Senator Asselin could not resist interjecting. I respect his view. There is no doubt but that a lawyer is always very sentimental when it comes to provisions of the law which have helped him in given circumstances to win a case. And why not? It is only natural. Also, there is certainly a popular sentimental attachment to the jury system as we know it. There is no doubt about that. The general criticism, if not of the decision, at least of the provisions of the law which brought about the decision in the Morgentaler case, was not entirely unanimous. However, those who oppose, generally speaking, receive better press than those who sustain. Although I may not be able to convince honourable senators, I feel it is my duty to argue the other side. I think it is the duty of the Senate to consider both sides of a question.

In reading the debate in the other place and the committee proceedings of the other place, I was unable to find any dissenting view, notwithstanding that the amendment which is before us was only very reluctantly introduced by the Honourable Mr. Lang, the then Minister of Justice. It was only under the pressure of public opinion that this amendment was finally submitted to Parliament.

I repeat, the criticism of the judgment, or of the provisions of the law on which the judgment was based, was never unanimous. One individual who sustained the decision was none other than the Immediate Past President of the Canadian Bar Association, Mr. M. L. N. Somerville. He did not seek to support the provisions of the law, but he did support the decision. In a letter he wrote to the Globe and Mail, he made reference to a previous speech of his, and I quote:

It is a perfectly tenable position that the only remedy available to the Crown from an improper acquittal by a jury should be a new trial.

This is what is proposed under this amendment. Continuing:

But that is not now the law... Those people who espouse this proposition risk a profound disservice to the stability and security of this society for all members of it by mounting a furious propaganda war against a result in a specific case not to their liking, by directing a campaign of abuse and ridicule against those members of our judiciary who, in good faith and upon reasonable grounds, are attempting to uphold the rule of law in an unpopular instance.

That is, to support the decision of the court and not the provisions of the law. Dealing more particularly with what has become an amendment suggested in this legislation, Bill C-71, he went on to say:

The province of a jury does not extend to the repeal or amendment of an Act of Parliament... Were we to admit the justification of some higher morality which operates to dispense with compliance with the laws of our land, we would be on the short, steep, slippery slope of chaos.

That comment, I believe, directs itself to the problem at hand and not to the decision of the court.

I think I had better explain the present system. When there is a verdict of guilty by a jury, if there is an appeal the appeal court can decide that the jury was wrong in fact and enter a verdict of not guilty. As far as the facts are concerned, the accused has all the chances in the world. There is no doubt about that. However, if the verdict is one of acquittal, the appeal court cannot intervene except on a question of law, because the general principles are simply that the jury is master of the facts but the courts are masters of the law.

Generally, when there is a conviction, the appeal court, if it finds that the verdict was not reasonable, can acquit the accused. This it can do where the jury has made an obvious mistake in fact or in law. Also, it can order a new trial. If there is a verdict of acquittal by a jury, the court of appeal will not intervene unless there was misdirection of the jury by the judge.

There presently exists this provision, and we are here invited to change it, which says that the court of appeal may in cases where a jury acquits:

(i) enter a verdict of guilty—

Instead of a verdict of acquittal; this is the case of Morgentaler.

—with respect to the offence of which, in its opinion, the accused should have been found guilty but for the error in law, and pass a sentence that is warranted in law, or

(ii) order a new trial.

It has a choice between the two.

In the present instance, the finding of the majority of the Supreme Court was that they should apply the provision enabling them to change the verdict of acquittal to a verdict of guilty. I should like to quote the comment of the majority on the present provision of the law which we are invited to change. This is a résumé of the decision. I will not quote all the notes of the majority because it would take too long. However, I think this gives the clear opinion of the majority on the appreciation of the present legislation. They say:

This power, of course, should be used with great circumspection, but it is particularly appropriate in this case, since the accused admitted the facts but denied his guilt only on the basis of defences in law held unavailable by the appeal courts.

In other words, in this particular case the problem was only a question of law and not one of fact.

It seems to me that we should not seek to change or adjust the law because we don't like the ultimate effect its application had in a particular case. I think it is a very bad principle to legislate because of only one case, especially one in which the majority of the Supreme Court says that the terms of the existing law are most appropriate.

It has been said by my good friend Senator Langlois that it leads to the destruction of the jury system, and he refers to Mr. Diefenbaker and others as having made similar remarks. I would say that all lawyers specializing in the defence of criminal cases would agree. As far as I am concerned, I went before a jury on a criminal case only once, and I lost. I suppose I could be prejudiced because of that particular incident, but I doubt it.

Senator Langlois: I never did.

Senator Flynn: I have never acted on behalf of the Crown, and therefore I am certainly not prejudiced in its favour.

It has frequently been argued that the Supreme Court decision in the Morgentaler case weakened our jury system. We should take a look at this, and the Department of Justice should have a close look at all the problems relating to the jury system and not limit itself to solving a problem in one particular case by removing the right of the appeal court to apply the law, when only a question of law is involved.

I am not taking sides on the question of abortion. I do not care about what happens to Dr. Morgentaler. I am concerned with the ultimate consequences of this amendment, if nothing else is done. I do not say that it is bad in itself. I say we are going in the wrong direction. I would have gone in the opposite direction in trying to cure this particular problem.

A journalist, after the Morgentaler case was heard, put it this way: Should a jury always have the last word? Remember, juries don't always acquit. Sometimes, they convict. Sometimes they too can make mistakes. Should a court of appeal be powerless to do anything about it? Does a reversal of a jury verdict tend to destroy the jury system?

These are some of the questions people have been asking since the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. I would say that the role of the jury, its usefulness, its possible reform, its continued existence or its abolition is probably one of the most discussed subjects of judicial procedure. Generally speaking, however, people favour the retention of the jury system. I want to make it clear that I also am in favour of the jury system, but like any other human institution it has to be checked.

In Quebec, a couple of years ago, two out of every three people felt that the jury could be relied upon for a correct judgment. In the United States only 50 per cent of the people had that kind of confidence in "12 good men and women and true."

You will recall that juries originated with England's early Norman kings. The system was set up for political reasons: the distrust of a judiciary that was dependent upon government, and the desire to democratize the administration of justice. For centuries juries resisted enormous pressures by kings, parliaments and judiciaries.

[Senator Flynn.]

They brought in verdicts against the demands of each of these and all of them together.

The system survives today not only because of tradition, but also because of its inherent qualities. The jury system provides a vehicle which permits the average citizen to come to grips with the legal system and see that justice is done. It forces lawyers and judges to make the law intelligible to laymen, and it gives the common man the opportunity to assess the demeanour as well as the testimony of witnesses in coming to a verdict.

● (1430)

In North America the concept of the jury is still very much linked with the fundamental principles of democracy, liberty and justice; yet the need for a jury to protect against the outrages of an uncontrolled monarchy or other similar forms of government no longer exists.

The great French magistrate, Casamayor, once wrote: "Why are criminals judged by laymen, while those guilty of less serious infractions are judged by specialists in the law?" It is a strange paradox, one which should force us to reflect upon the effectiveness of juries.

The jury system provides many safeguards for our basic liberties, safeguards of which I would not want to see us deprived. But the jury system, like any other human institution, is not infallible. It is argued by the proponents of the Morgentaler amendment that the decision of a jury to acquit should not be allowed to be reversed by a court of appeal. The reasoning is that juries, unlike courts of appeal, reflect the popular feelings of the times; that they give expression to changing and living jurisdiction as influenced by feeling contemporary peers rather than remote and aloof authorities.

So far as that argument is concerned, may I just mention that if we expect and want juries to give expression to popular feelings, we should bear in mind that popular feelings vary from one day to the next and from one region to another. If that were the only argument in its favour, I doubt that the jury would be retained. These same people would likely favour the contemporary tendency away from strict interpretation of the law; they would favour interpretations of the law being adapted to popular tendencies and moral convictions in matters where there is no obvious consensus.

This, of course, is the case so far as abortion is concerned, but I am not discussing that and I am not expressing any opinion on it. But I do suggest, if we have to accept these arguments, that it is a very risky business.

I would ask you to recall some of the American trials of not so long ago, where if the accused were black or Indian he was guilty, and if the victim were black or Indian his white assailant was invariably acquitted, even though there was no evidence to support a rational decision to acquit.

Those juries, too, were reflecting the popular feelings of the times and places in which they lived. Those juries, too, were giving expression to changing and living jurisdiction as influenced by feeling contemporary peers rather than remote and aloof authorities. Do not be too quick to reason that such things could not happen in contemporary, enlightened Canada. I will not try to give you any other indication of that affirmation than those facts which you know—whether they be about abortion or other problems.

At no time have we ever been more rapidly and completely inundated by the communications media. At no time in the past have the opinions of the people been so heavily influenced by professional opinion makers and purveyors of mass hysteria. Here I might say, not from personal experience but from what I know of juries second hand, that it takes only one or two members of a jury really to orient a decision in one direction or the other. There is no doubt about that today. It may not have been the case years ago, but today it is different.

I have lately been following the experience of some of my friends who have been members of juries. With regard to one of them, I knew how he felt, I knew he would influence the jury, and he did in fact influence the jury, and it brought down the verdict that he thought it should. It would be incredibly arrogant and naive to presume that Canadians are immune from such influences and that our juries would always, unfailingly, guarantee justice that would be recognizable as such, not only today but also in the future.

The jury system, as I have said, provides valuable checks and safeguards, but it is by no means foolproof. If justice is to be done, we must not leave the jury system unprovided with the necessary checks and safeguards against abuse.

Using abortion as an example, supposing a case came to court in which all the evidence clearly indicated the guilt of the accused. Suppose further that the evidence were uncontested, and that the judge made no mistake in admitting evidence or in charging the jury. I repeat: the evidence is clear and uncontested; it points to the guilt of the accused, and no error in law is made by the judge. Yet let us suppose the jury comes in with a verdict of acquittal. According to current jurisprudence, though this verdict is unreasonable and is unsupported by the evidence, it does not constitute an error in law, and the court of appeal will not hear an appeal against it. This worries me.

The question I want to put before you, and I think it is probably the main question, is, where does the jurisdiction of a jury that has mastered the facts end, and where does the question of law commence? According to the jurisprudence up to now—and this is what I disagree with—a jury cannot make an error in law. I say, however, that it can. I say that in a case where the facts are admitted, where the defence is based only on arguments in law, and where there is no error on the part of the judge in instructing the jury, if the jury finds the man not guilty, it means one of two things: either the jury did not understand the law or it did not want to apply it. In my thinking there is an error in law in both cases.

This particular problem, I suggest, should not be corrected by depriving the court of appeal of the right to substitute a verdict of guilty in the case of an acquittal when an error in law has been made by the judge; but I would allow an appeal to a higher court, and would uphold the power of the court to change even a verdict of acquittal, where there has been no error in law on the part of the judge but where the error in law is really one that has been made by the jury. I do not object to the idea of ordering a new trial every time. A new trial will prevent the problem from recurring, but if that point arrives at which it will be impossible, in the opinion of the court, to find a jury that will uphold the law, that will observe the law, and will restrict itself to its role, which is simply to weigh the evidence, I say to you that we should give the power to a court of appeal to intervene. I would say this not only as in the present case where there is an error in law made by the judge, but also where there is an error in law made by the jury, in the sense that I have just outlined. Otherwise, the enforcement of the law will be an unpredictable thing. In one region of the country someone may be found guilty on the basis of certain facts, and, on the basis of the same facts, in another part of the country another person may be acquitted. I think it is precisely the role of the courts, particularly of the courts of appeal, to intervene and to bring about uniformity in the enforcement of the law all across the country.

I shall not at this time enter into examples or hypotheses since you can all find such examples and hypotheses as readily as I can. In this particular case what I regret is that the decision of the government, or of the Minister of Justice, was made only because of pressure brought to bear by a certain element of public opinion—and a relatively small element at that, I suggest. They did not go into or consider the basic problems posed by the Morgentaler case.

Let me at this stage point out that whether this particular case turns out one way or the other does not really concern me, but I do think that it should have given rise to a thorough study of our jury system. I do not have the slightest objection to giving the utmost protection to the accused, but at the same time I do not want to put the law into the hands of the jury. The jury system is based on giving to the jury jurisdiction only in matters of fact, and where a court of appeal finds that the jury has gone beyond its jurisdiction, then it should be able to intervene.

I should like this problem to be thoroughly discussed in committee, because in my view this amendment goes only in one direction. And while it might solve the problem in one particular case, it would still leave the main problem, the most important problem, unresolved. If that problem is not resolved, then I would rather see the law remain as it is because if we give way on this, then we will never be able to come back and correct the main problem which I have outlined to you, and which should be given serious attention, particularly in the Senate. This is particularly our role, honourable senators.

The other day I was dining with Madam Speaker when she received a Mexican delegation. She distributed to us a little paper setting out the meaning of the mural inscriptions in the Speaker's chamber. They are all in Latin, but I should like to quote one which is translated into English and French. While you might have difficulty understanding my English translation, you certainly would not understand the inscription if I were to read it to you in Latin.

Senator Lamontagne: I am sure we would.

Senator Flynn: Well, let Senator Lamontagne try this:

Plus apud nos vera ratio valeat quam vulgi opinio.

Anyone who wants to translate it is welcome. At any rate I shall give you the official translation. It is a quotation from Cicero, and it says: "Let reason prevail with me more than popular opinion."

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, before Senator Flynn terminates his discussion I wonder if I might be permitted to ask two questions. In doing so may I say that I have listened with intense interest to his comments on this extremely important matter.

He stated, and I think most of us know, that the Quebec Court of Appeal had two choices open to it—either to reverse the verdict of the jury and declare the accused guilty, or to order a new trial.

Now, this is not a rhetorical question. I do not know the answer and I would like to know the answer. Did the Quebec Court of Appeal state whether or not it considered the possibility of a new trial, and is there any evidence as to why the court of appeal did not order a new trial rather than take the highly controversial decision—as it now happens to be—to reverse the verdict?

I should know the answer to my second question, and I apologize for not knowing it. If this amendment is adopted by Parliament and becomes law, will any court in Canada in future have the right to order a new trial after a jury has given its verdict?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the answer to the second question is that the amendment would only permit the ordering of a new trial. There would be no power in the courts of appeal to substitute a verdict of guilty in the case of an acquittal. That would be the effect of the law.

Insofar as the first question is concerned, as I think I tried to explain, it was because of the provision that says, "If, in the opinion of the court, the accused should have been found guilty but for the error in law..." and the majority of the Supreme Court, in the part I read from the summary of the decision, said that this power, of course, should be used with great circumspection, but that it was particularly appropriate in this case since the accused admitted the facts but denied his guilt only on the basis of defences in law held to be unavailable by the appeal courts. In other words, what the existing law says is that if the defence is a defence in law, and that defence is not available, then the appeal court should say, "Well, another trial before a jury would bring in the same facts, and therefore the verdict should be one of guilty," and should substitute that verdict. In most cases where there was any appreciation of the facts by the jury, and where this was properly done, the court never used this section. It just said, "You will have a new trial, since there was an error in law made by the judge instructing the jury."

Senator Burchill: Honourable senators, as a layman I venture to ask Senator Flynn a question. I must say at the outset that I think he made a very able presentation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Burchill: He referred to the law in Canada and he referred to the law in the United States, but what about the law in Britain? Are there any references to the practice in the United Kingdom?

Senator Flynn: I would hesitate to give an opinion on that, but from what I have read I think that in Britain there is no right in the court of appeal to substitute a verdict of guilty for a verdict of acquittal. I am not sure about that. However, in Great Britain the problem may not be exactly the same as it is here.

Senator Buckwold: Would the distinguished senator answer another question from a layman? Was the minority report of the Supreme Court published? If so, and since it was a very close decision, five to four, perhaps he could enlighten his fellow senators as to the reasons for the minority report. I think this would be interesting since he has put a fair amount of emphasis on the majority report.

Senator Flynn: I have no objection to that, but if I did not quote from the judgment of the minority, it was because it is not relevant to the question here; it is relevant to the case proper. The summary of the opinion of Chief Justice Laskin, Mr. Justice Judson and Mr. Justice Spence reads as follows:

● (1450)

Where the jury has acquitted, it must be an unusual case indeed in which an appellate Court, which has not seen the witnesses, or observed their demeanour, should essay to pass on the sufficiency of the evidence, and substitute its opinion for the jury's and enter a conviction, rather than ordering a new trial. In any event, since the two defences were properly left to the jury, the appeal should be allowed and the accused's acquittal restored.

The defence was rested on section 45 of the Criminal Code, which was judged by the majority as not applicable in the case of abortion. As it may be useful for the record, I will read that section:

Every one is protected from criminal responsibility for performing a surgical operation upon any person for the benefit of that person if

- (a) the operation is performed with reasonable care and skill, and
- (b) it is reasonable to perform the operation, having regard to the state of health of the person at the time the operation is performed and to all the circumstances of the case.

Honourable senators know that abortion may not be performed under the law without a committee of a hospital deciding it to be necessary for the health of the person concerned. The majority of the Supreme Court said that were section 45 to be applied with regard to provisions concerning abortion, the intent and application of the rules which provide that no one shall perform an operation of that kind without a committee having first examined the case would be completely destroyed. In other words, it should not be left to a single doctor or surgeon to decide that he should operate. The question of necessity, of course, can arise very often, but I suggest that such questions should not always arise in one particular doctor's practice.

Senator Croll: Senator Flynn has stated that the matter raised by him today was not raised in the House of Commons, and in that I believe him to be quite correct. However, if I recall the early stages of the debate correctly, the reason for its not being raised was because in this particular instance the judges had set themselves up to be both judges of law and judges of fact, and it was for that reason that the amendment was introduced.

Senator Flynn: I would not accept that statement, because there was no debate in the House of Commons. In fact, in that house they followed the trend of opinion expressed in the press, and that was all. No one dared in one way or another, as is the picture we have very frequently of the House of Commons, to express an opinion contrary to, let us say, the weight of opinion expressed in the press. It is much easier, as I said before, to support something which appears to be liberal with a small "I"—

Senator Croll: Oh, a big "L" for Liberal!

Senator Flynn:—than to sustain a system which has its merits and its defects, but which should be corrected in another manner than that which is now suggested.

Senator Laird: Was this bill considered in committee of the other place?

Senator Flynn: Yes, it was considered in committee, but no recommendations were made. Of course, the opinion of the former Prime Minister has a lot of weight, as is obvious from the fact that it was the main argument used by the sponsor of the bill.

Senator Langlois: You are the only one not to be impressed by it.

On motion of Senator Asselin, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES— CONSIDERATION OF VOLUME 1 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, entitled "Canada-United States Relations—Volume 1—The Institutional Framework for the Relationship," which was tabled on Tuesday, February 3.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I should like, first, to thank the government leader in the Senate, Senator Perrault, for tabling the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on Tuesday of last week in my absence.

I would also like to remind honourable senators that the reason for the publication of the report prior to the Senate's reconvening after the Christmas recess was that we wished to be in a position to take it with us to the meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group in the United States, which commenced on January 29. Honourable senators will recall that permission for this prior publication was granted by way of a motion I moved on December 18 last.

The order of reference under which this study is taking place was first made by the Senate on a motion of Senator Aird, the then chairman of the committee, on March 26, 1974. The motion was that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon Canadian relations with the United States. Upon my motion of November 5, 1974, this authority was renewed. I might just take one moment to quote from Senator Aird's remarks at the time he sought that order in 1974. According to page 175 of Debates of the Senate of the 1974 session, he said:

Honourable senators, in the most simple language, your committee is asking for authorization to examine and report upon Canadian relations with the United States. I happen to believe that very often simple words cover a most complicated subject, and this was never more true than in this particular instance.

For me, two questions immediately arise: First, is the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs a proper forum, and capable of performing such a formidable and challenging task? Secondly, if it is capable, and if it is an appropriate forum, how does your committee propose to go about programming such an encyclopedic undertaking?

If the answer to my first question is in the affirmative, and I believe it is, then the answer to the second question has to be: Constructively and very carefully.

During the meetings of the committee at that time—I then being a member of the committee—we did give very careful thought as to how we would go about a study of such an immense subject. By attempting such a study in one bite, we would be in danger of descending into a morass of evidence and facts from which it would be almost impossible to emerge with a coherent report having any form or shape. The committee therefore agreed that it would proceed in stages, and it seemed logical to us that the first stage would concern itself with the mechanisms by which the relationship between these two countries is conducted.

Honourable senators will see that the cover of Volume 1 of the study, which has now been tabled, refers to "The Institutional Framework for the Relationship." The report, therefore, confines itself to these mechanisms, with the possible exception of some opening observations of a general nature in Part I, where we reiterate some facts that are known to most Canadians. We thought it well to reiterate them to refresh our memory on the range and scope of the relationship, because there is no question that the interface between these two nations is greater in every respect than the interface between any other two nations on the face of the globe.

The report, in its opening pages, says:

For Canada, this means a market for over two-thirds of its exports, representing over one-third of all goods produced in Canada. For the United States, Canada constitutes one-fifth of its export market but this involves only two percent of all American-produced goods. The United States supplies two-thirds of all goods imported into Canada and Canada supplies one-quarter of all imports into the United States. . .

The scale of the trading relationship can best be appreciated by comparing United States trade with other countries. Japan, which is the United States second largest partner, does about one half the trade with the United States that Canada does. American trade with all nine countries of the European Community, a group encompassing a population 10 times that of Canada, amounted in 1974 to slightly less than its trade with Canada alone.

We concluded that part of the review of the extent of the relationship with these words:

It is not a relationship of equals. The United States has 10 times the population and over 10 times the gross national product of Canada. In military terms it is a superpower, in economic terms a giant. Because of this disparity, Canada is more dependent, more sensitive and more vulnerable to the state of the relationship than is the United States. For Canada, it is by far the most important of all its external relationships.

The report goes on to deal with the changing concept of the relationship.

Honourable senators will recall that in recent months and years there has been a good deal of discussion about the special relationship between Canada and the United States, and a good deal of discussion on what is meant by "special relationship." The committee's report, in dealing with this matter, and after examining it in some detail over several pages, concludes with this paragraph:

How, the Committee asks, in the light of the geographic ties, the affinities and interchange of the two peoples, the ease of communications, the similar institutions, and the extent of trade, cultural and other links can the relationship be considered anything but a "unique" one? Canada no longer seeks a "special treatment", but it cannot deny a "special relationship" does exist with its southern neighbour.

We then deal with current problems. I wish to emphasize that the list of problem areas, if I might use that term, is not meant to be exhaustive. It is by way of example only, and is not meant to be a precisely balanced list. The report lists two or three pages of typical irritants that exist at the moment. Those irritants are changing from month to month, as some are solved, others go away by themselves, and others we learn to live with.

We thought we should set forth some examples to give an indication of how extensive are the irritants; understandably they apply between two nations which carry on an extensive relationship, and the irritants or problems should be kept in the perspective of the immensity of that overall relationship.

I might comment here that some people like to say that our relationship with the United States is worsening. I prefer to say that it is becoming much more complex. It was comparatively automatic for many years, but during the last 10 or 15 years it has become infinitely more complex with the emergence in the world of problems relating to energy, shortage of resources, exhaustion of fish stocks, pollution, and so on.

All of these things have given rise to problems between our two countries, and the report therefore deals with the mechanisms for dealing with these problems, and makes a number of recommendations as to how these mechanisms can be improved—as they need to be improved—to deal with a heavier workload in this area than we have had to deal with in the past.

At the end of the report, reference is made to the fact that the committee will now proceed with the second phase of its study—which will be the subject of the second volume, of its report—in these words:

The next phase of the study will deal with Canadian Trade Relations with the United States.

I might take a moment to deal with that part of the study. As I have said, to the press and others, this study is of the total picture of the exchange of goods and services between our two countries.

I stress that because there is a tendency, when one speaks of trade with the United States, to think immediately of trade in manufactured goods, tariffs, free trade, and things of that sort. There is no question but that the report of the Economic Council of Canada, which was made public last July, will play a very significant part in our study of trade between the two countries. It will not be the whole subject. In fact, it will represent only a comparatively small, although very important, part of it.

I might say to Senator Desruisseaux, who spoke last night on this subject, that Dr. Raynauld, the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, has already appeared before the committee, and undoubtedly will appear again.

The study, however, will go well beyond that. We speak in terms of trade with the United States, so far as exports are concerned, as being 50 per cent in manufactured goods. The auto pact accounts for approximately two-thirds of that, leaving approximately only one-sixth of the total in manufactured goods outside the auto industry. Therefore, a very important part of our study will have to concern itself with trade in unprocessed goods, both renewable and non-renewable resources; semi-processed goods, manufactured goods, tourism, invisibles, capital flows, and so on. All those items have been looked at individually on several occasions in different studies, but ours may be the first study to endeavour to put all of those exchanges of goods and services in one perspective.

It will be a large task, but we shall do our best, following our first volume, to deal with this subject in our second volume.

I shall not take the time of honourable senators to review Volume 1 of the report in detail. I trust that many of them will take the time to read it. It is not overly long, but we feel it is reasonably meaty and will make interesting reading. It contains a number of important recommendations, which have not caught the eye of the press, relative to such things as the operation of the International Joint Commission, the establishment of provincial departments of intergovernmental affairs, the resolution of our salt water boundaries with the United States, and so forth.

Two recommendations which seem to have attracted the attention of the press in particular—and which, I agree, are certainly among the most important—include the point we make on the importance of the government and the Department of External Affairs to recognize more fully the manner in which the pendulum of power in Washington has swung from the Executive to the Congress.

If I may, I will read the first paragraph on page 80, under the heading, "Legislative Channels":

For a variety of reasons, the Canadian government has been reticent in developing an active programme of liaison with influential Congressional figures. The Committee learned that other major countries' governments feel much less constrained than Canada by the fact that their ambassadors are accredited to the Executive Branch. Canada may be overestimating the importance of this factor while underestimating the significance of the U.S. constitutional division of powers with the consequential strong role of Congress. Or it may consider that the U.S. State Department is always able and willing to interpret the Canadian position effectively to Congress, an assessment with which the committee cannot agree. Whatever the reason, American witnesses before the committee consider that the Canadian Embassy could develop a far more active programme of contacts with Congress in order to ensure that the Canadian point of view is understood.

I should emphasize at this point that we are not simply recommending a slick PR campaign on the Hill. What we are recommending is a program that would require highly skilled, professional men, knowledgeable in the affairs of various fields in Canada, who could deal with members of both the House of Representatives and the Senate, as well as committee chairmen and others, on a one-to-one basis in relation to problems that exist between our two countries. The world commitments of the United States, as well as its size, are such that unless border problems between our two countries are brought to the attention of members of the government, they simply are unaware of them.

I might say, during the meetings two weeks ago of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group we encountered one situation where a powerful senator, a chairman of a subcommittee appropriating funds for certain developments, along with other congressmen, was taken over the Garrison Dam area of North Dakota by the senator from that state, to show them why the appropriation should be continued for another year, which request was passed by the subcommittee in question. During our meetings on Canada-U.S. relations, that same senator was astonished to find that this was an irritant, or even known about in Canada. He did not know that the very project he was flying over was the source of a problem between our two countries. Situations of this type have to be corrected, and we certainly have to take it upon ourselves to correct them. We cannot expect U.S. officials to do so.

Still dealing with the same subject, the report goes on to say:

Recently Congress attained significant new powers particularly in the economic field. It is asserting a vigorously independent attitude in foreign and trade policy matters. At the same time, American witnesses told the Committee that there is a great lack of awareness in Congress of the extent and depth of Canadian-American economic ties. Almost inadvertently, congressional unawareness or misunderstanding of the Canadian position could cause severe economic or trade dislocations in Canada.

The Committee has concluded that Canada's contracts with Congress have been neglected for too long. The Committee urges the government to provide the embassy as soon as possible with the instructions and the means for a greatly expanded congressional relations programme.

I might say, I received only yesterday a letter from a senior official of the Department of External Affairs thanking me for a copy of the report, and saying:

We have the plans, most of the people required, and a great desire to succeed. The extent to which we will do so depends now on the amount of program funds we are permitted to apply to operations in the United States.

The second recommendation the press commented on at length, which I will deal with in a moment, is in relation to the general information program which Canada should mount in the United States. As some honourable senators may have already observed from reading the report, we used some statistical comparisons. I will not read them all, but on the figures we were able to obtain from European countries—and, I might say, they are comparable in relation to Japan and Russia—European countries spend, related to their gross trade, on a worldwide basis, $1 for every $230 worth of trade, whereas Canada spends $1 for every $4,800 worth of trade. As far as the United States is concerned, European countries spend $1 for every $200 worth of trade—almost the same as worldwide—whereas Canada spends $1 for every $18,000 worth of trade. This is a relationship that both sides, I think, have taken for granted, and now that it has become more complex it requires more attention.

We concluded the recommendation in that particular section with the following words:

The Committee realizes fully that it is recommending very substantial increased government expenditures at a time of fiscal restraint, but it is here dealing in priorities not total expenditures. Surely no other country has as much at stake as Canada in protecting its relationship with the United States. As we have already pointed out Canada-United States trade both ways amounts to over $42,000,000,000.00 annually. Even a small portion of this must not be placed in jeopardy for want of proper attention particularly now when Canada faces a balance of payments deficit approaching $5,000,000,000.00 per year on a world basis. To repeat an old military maxim we must reinforce strength not weakness and reallocate federal government resources as productively as possible in this area.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to give the highest possible priority to its information, cultural and academic relations programmes in the United States. In order to implement this proposal the Committee recommends that a departmental task force be set up to assess the financial requirements and to decide how best to strengthen the programmes.

In addition to those two recommendations which have caught the public eye, there is a third one which I should like, as a personal note, to touch on, and that is the recommendation relative to the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group meetings:

The Committee considers that no other inter-parliamentary link is nearly as important to Canada as the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. The Committee strongly urges the selection of delegates to the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group meetings who are carefully chosen as to individual areas of expertise and adequately briefed in order to put Canada's case in the most effective possible manner to American legislators.

I would be remiss if I did not take a moment at this point to congratulate Senator Macnaughton and Mr. Martin

O'Connell, the Canadian co-chairmen, who, along with their American co-chairmen, have taken strenuous and effective steps over the last two or three years to greatly strengthen and improve the nature of the meetings of the Inter-Parliamentary Group, so that they are now, without question, most productive.

● (1520)

I can only hope that the government will give effect to some, if not all, of the recommendations in the report. There are sceptics who would say that it will only gather dust, as has happened, regretfully, too often to other reports. However, I am encouraged that this will not be the case with this report, particularly in view of the success of the report of this same committee, under the chairmanship of Senator John Aird, with respect to its study of Canadian Relations with the European Community. You will recall that all of the four major recommendations made in that report were eventually adopted by the government. As a matter of fact, the last one is coming to fruition on Thursday of next week, when the President of the Community is coming here to open the office of the Community, in Ottawa, and also to make a formal announcement about the commencement of negotiations for a contractual link between Canada and the Community. Hopefully, our present report will gain the same attention from the government as that one.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I wish to pay particular tribute to several people: first, to former Senator John Aird, who, as chairman of the committee, launched it on this inquiry. It took courage to do so, and we on the committee all hope we will do him justice.

Secondly, I wish to pay tribute to my deputy chairman, Senator Allister Grosart, who unfortunately cannot be here today as he is on official business in Athens. I would like simply to offer my thanks to him for his invaluable assistance, not only to the committee but to me personally, and for all his counsel and wisdom.

To all members of the committee, and in particular the members of the steering committee, I owe a debt of gratitude, the other members of the steering committee being Senators Cameron, Lafond and McElman. I would particularly like to thank Senator Lafond, not only for his attention and activity throughout the study as a member of the committee, but for his assistance in ensuring that the excellent translation made by the Translation Bureau properly reflected the nuances of the committee's report. This he did single-handedly, at the cost of a great amount of time and dedication.

I would not want to end my remarks without also thanking the witnesses who gave of their time and expertise in appearing before the committee, several of them coming from distant parts of the continent without recompense for their time.

Last but not least, I thank all members of the staff and the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Affairs and Foreign Trade under the direction of Mr. Peter Dobell, who provided our principal staff support; and in particular, Mrs. Carol Seaborn of the Parliamentary Centre, without whose dedication throughout the whole period of preparation it would not have been possible to produce the report.

[Senator van Roggen.]

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in this debate, this order is considered as having been debated.

FINAL ACT OF HELSINKI CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.—(Honourable Senator Yuzyk).

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, there are two committee meetings this afternoon, one starting at 3.30 and the other immediately after the Senate rises. Since my speech will take approximately half an hour, I think it would be more appropriate at this time if this order were to stand.

Order stands.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Hervé J. Michaud rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, the Canadian government is constantly looking for new measures, new formulas to stimulate Canada's less privileged areas. Its efforts will have to be increased to correct certain economic problems still prevalent in New Brunswick.

Although the serious difficulties affecting the province's northeast area have long been known, they were dramatized in October 1975 when the Roman Catholic clergy in the province's northeast openly declared in support of the area's citizens. Man's life was at stake, they said. Such was the message included in a letter to the Premier of New Brunswick, the Hon. Richard Hatfield. Copies of that letter were sent to Canada's Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mr. Trudeau, to all members of Parliament, members of the provincial legislature and senators from the area, farm groups, development agencies, and media in the province and elsewhere. The letter stressed the deep paradox of the area's unlimited physical and human resources on the one hand, and the extremely high unemployment rate and low standard of living on the other. How was it possible to be so rich and so poor at one and the same time, the letter asked.

In support of the clergy of northeastern New Brunswick, Archbishop Donat Chiasson of Moncton stated

... he had had strong hopes at the start of the sixties that the area would be chosen as a key development area.

Archbishop Chiasson added:

When and how will these special development plans, that have been promised since the early sixties, reach the average citizen?

The clergy of northeastern New Brunswick also met with massive support from the local people in its efforts, and also with the special support of the Anglican Synod of the Fredericton diocese. The clergy's letter also seriously warned that:

We hope our voice will be heard before it is too late—and added, concerning the high unemployment rate in the area:

Relevant statistics are such as to scare anyone who takes the time to think.

● (1530)

Six recommendations were made by the clergy of northeastern New Brunswick to deal with that situation. Each one of these recommendations could give rise to a long speech, but I wish to underline the following recommendation:

Within a concerted development effort, to aim at a more rational use of the many first quality farmlands which are practically left uncultivated.

The eastern New Brunswick agricultural situation has been getting special attention from the Senate Committee on Agriculture since its creation. In fact, immediately after its creation in March 1973 the committee undertook its first important inquiry under the following terms of reference:

To study the problem of marginal, sub marginal and abandoned farmland in eastern Canada, particularly the situation in Kent County, New Brunswick, and to make recommendations to insure and maintain viable rural communities and a prosperous farm population.

To get more familiar with local conditions, the attitudes of rural people and farmers as well as with the outlook, objectives and programs of the provincial government and other organizations and institutions, the committee held two days of hearings in Moncton on June 13 and 14, 1973. During those public hearings—there were six of them—the committee heard evidence from provincial and federal government representatives, academic and research institutions, local associations and individuals.

Members of the committee found these official and non-official exchanges with the witnesses very stimulating.

During these exchanges, we have been able to see the many possibilities that exist concerning the farming future of the region. We have also been aware of the feelings of deep frustration and alienation of the farmers of eastern New Brunswick over their neglect by either the federal or the provincial government. Even though certain statements were made with often total and sometimes brutal honesty, we must admit that all these statements were sincere. In summary, we have no hesitation in saying that all the statements collected during the hearings held in Moncton in June 1973 constitute the most comprehensive and impressive record possible on the true state of farming in Kent county, and therefore in the whole northeastern area of New Brunswick. It would be useless to look elsewhere to find the true feelings of the local people or to discover the elements of the solutions that we must apply to solve the many farming problems of the area.

In Kent county, as well as in the northeastern part of New Brunswick, most farms are small and are therefore included in the category of farming businesses known as family farms. Therefore, during the hearings in Moncton, there was a lot of talk about the Small Farms Development Program launched through legislation in 1971.

Because of the many developments since these hearings, it is important today to examine very closely some aspects of the farming problem which now affects agricultural areas, particularly in New Brunswick. When this program was announced in December 1971, it rekindled the hopes of all the people who are concerned with the problems of small or marginal farming businesses in Canada. On December 6, 1971, the Hon. H. A. Olson, Minister of Agriculture, said the following on this subject:

Unless we develop new concrete programs, many Canadian operators and, in fact, the whole rural community will be threatened... According to economic studies and practical experience, the family farm is the best kind of farming business, and it is with this in mind that we have developed a vast program designed to help the small farms of Canada to become profitable family businesses.

The Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre E. Trudeau, emphasized the importance given by the federal government to this initiative in a speech made before the Coopérative fédérée de Québec on February 2, 1972, when he said:

I would add that the program now under consideration is our last chance. It must succeed, otherwise everything (the rural society) will collapse. We put all our hopes in this program and we will never give it too much attention.

And when Mr. Eugene Whelan appeared before our Senate committee he said something along the same line:

I still believe that the Small Farms Development Program has a lot to offer, particularly in areas such as Kent County and similar regions in Canada.

Certainly, nobody thought at the time that the program was a magic wand which the federal and provincial governments would use to turn poverty into prosperity. But, on the other hand, nobody anticipated that it would prove such a failure in the very areas where expectations were the highest.

Only a few transactions have been completed up to now in eastern New Brunswick under this legislation. If this program has not worked out well in that area, it means that the roots of the agricultural problem go much deeper, that the problem is much more basic than we thought originally. Because it was neglected for too long, our agriculture has lost whatever credibility it might have among those who should take over.

What is most needed in order to bring about the recovery of agriculture in that area is a more positive leadership, both at the level of the farmers themselves and of the agriculture departments at the two higher levels of government, as well as a better understanding on both sides of the complexity of the problem. As regards farmers, until fairly recently the French-speaking agricultural community of New Brunswick had every reason to consider themselves fortunate in the group of agronomists who worked among them. With the support of a clergy steeped in a similar ideal, these 20 odd agronomists had succeeded over a period of some 40 years to keep agriculture alive in our rural communities, in spite of every obstacle. It is only proper, that we should, in this Chamber, give them all full credit for their achievement. Many of these bold pioneers are no longer alive. The others have all reached retirement age. Nowadays, they have been replaced by at most 7 or 8 French-speaking agronomists, who find it difficult, in spite of their well-known dedication, to fulfill an ever increasing task.

Why are so few young people willing to carry on the farming business in French New Brunswick? The answer to that question is again found in the evidence given before the Senate Committee on Agriculture. A witness said in that respect:

It must be realized that when young people consider agronomy as a profession and go to university, like others they have certain aspirations about joining the public service.

In New Brunswick French-speaking or bilingual people have yet to be given responsible positions within the Department of Agriculture—I mean something other than routine jobs. A few bilingual secretaries here and there, and that is all.

In accordance with the aspirations of everyone I would suggest again that we should do more than promote the agronomic profession in New Brunswick.

We should find attractive options so young people can look for management and responsible positions within the government."

Following that evidence a member of the audience wanted to point out to committee members that it is the structure of the system in New Brunswick that makes it possible for such situations to exist. To the advantage of everyone, could not consideration be given to making those structures more flexible little by little, if I may put it that way. Greater representation of the French-speaking element would be required within the Department of Agriculture to guarantee greater participation of French-speaking agricultural officials in the province in the operation of the department as well as the elaboration of agricultural policies which chiefly affect French-speaking farmers. The same must be said for officials in Agriculture Canada who are under the same roof as their provincial counterparts in Fredericton. In brief, out of about 20 division heads in the federal department and out of the same number in the provincial department, how many can speak French? One or two at the most, at each level. That is an unjustifiable situation in the province of New Brunswick.

Experience shows that it is in such organizations where they can more easily assume an individuality, find themselves as a cultural and social entity, that Acadians enjoy the most noteworthy success. For example, let us see what the Toronto Globe and Mail had to say in this regard in its issue of April 18, 1974. The article was entitled:

[English]

"N.B. Credit Unions Show Different Approach of French and English." It reads:

[Senator Michaud.]

As in the case with many aspects of life in New Brunswick, where approximately 38 per cent of the population is Acadian, the credit union movement provides an example of differences in sociological and philosophical approaches between people of English and French background.

The credit union movement in the province is divided into two sections, both under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, with the Acadian section by far the more active.

The New Brunswick Credit Union Act was passed in 1936. In 1947, passage of the Credit Unions Federations Act permitted the establishment of federations or leagues of credit unions.

The single body, that had embraced both credit unions and caisses populaires, established a committee that subsequently recommended that the interests of the whole movement would best be served by division into English and French federations.

La Fédération des Caisses Populaires is far more active—and the reason seems to be rooted in the socio-economic status of Acadians over the years.

Mr. Léger—it's Director—

That is, Mr. Martin Leger.

—says the higher level of activity is because "French-speaking New Brunswickers are more closely knitted together through their church and parochial organizations."

"Practically every caisse populaire in the Franco-phone region of New Brunswick was organized with the co-operation of the parish priest."

Today, says Mr. Léger, the organizations are strong enough "to do their own homework", consequently the clergy no longer feels the necessity of providing such close co-operation.

Mr. Léger says the fact that Acadians lived in areas where social and economic conditions were quite bad gave impetus to the co-operative movement as a way to better their lives.

● (1550)

[Translation]

No doubt a prosperous agricultural industry in eastern New Brunswick would be profitable to both English-speaking and French-speaking farmers in the area, even if the latter are more numerous. It must be said, however, that the example set by the cooperative movement in the New Brunswick credit unions is an example to follow in the French-speaking farming communities in the province. If we really want to restart farming in the so-called French regions of New Brunswick, it is important to provide the farmers in those regions with the means to provide themselves with organizations whose operations will fit their customs and turns of mind.

In this regard, I would advocate the development of a training centre at the Memramcook Institute for the benefit of Eastern New Brunswick farmers. All required facilities already exist for such an important centre: the institute itself with its many facilities, a school of agriculture that is still vacant, and above all a model dairy farm with all the needed fields. Located only 15 miles from Moncton, this training centre would be readily accessible to the university students at the University of Moncton who are interested in agriculture and to those who intend to take up agronomy.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture however, understood the need for French-speaking farmers in New Brunswick to have access to the services of agronomists of their own culture in order to establish a freer and more complete relation with them.

For that reason, after the Moncton hearings the committee convened a special meeting here in Ottawa on December 4, 1973, attended by representatives of the University of Moncton, Laval University and the College of Agriculture of Nova Scotia, for the purpose of studying the question of agricultural science teaching in the Maritimes, and particularly in the French-speaking regions of New Brunswick.

Let us note that the results of that meeting were most satisfactory since an agreement was made later on between the representatives of Laval University, namely, Dean Victorin Lavoie of the Faculté des sciences de l'agriculture et de l'alimentation, and Registrar Yves Chartier, on the one hand; and, on the other hand, the representative of the University of Moncton, Dean Roland Cloutier of the Department of Sciences. Under this agreement, about twenty students of the University of Moncton, recipients of bursaries from the Secretary of State, were able to register for agronomy courses at Laval as early as September 1974. Their agronomist studies once completed, upon their return to the farming areas of New Brunswick, they can then render indispensable services by becoming the life and soul of their milieus. Each year other students will join the group already in the field, thus ensuring the continued training of Francophone agronomists to carry on in New Brunswick.

At that meeting of December 4, 1974, the committee also had the privilege of very pertinent information from Dr. H. F. McRae, head of the Nova Scotia College of Agriculture. Allow me to quote you what Dr. McRae said:

It might be of interest to note that of all the students who took our technical courses in 1973, 33 per cent went to work on farms as managers or to perform similar tasks. Since the inception of the program, that is surely the highest percentage of people who went back to live and work on the farm.

This year, 1973, at the Nova Scotia College of Agriculture, there have never been more registrations. We have the highest number of students any institution has ever welcomed, in addition to which of those 400 or so students, 104 are women.

On the same topic, this is what Mr. Louis-Philippe Albert, of the Economic Policy Division of the premier's office in Fredericton, had to say:

It would also be profitable for New Brunswick to have a team of professors of New Brunswick, of professors of agronomy, of thinkers who are above politics and above the present circumstances who could analyze problems which arise all the way from the farm to the marketplace and make studies such as universities can undertake and such as those being carried out in Truro.

Having discussed with some of my colleagues of Nova Scotia—

Mr. Albert went on to say.

I understood that they could do nothing without this institution, without this group of professors of agronomy in Truro. We have none in New Brunswick. All this is a little outside the subject matter but it is nonetheless part of the problem.

Moreover, the best contribution the Department of Agriculture of New Brunswick can make to the establishment of this agricultural leadership which is so necessary in French-speaking agricultural circles of New Brunswick is to promote agricultural training at both the scientific and the technological level. The federal Department of Agriculture, through Agriculture Canada, in Fredericton, could also play a more decisive part in the new efforts which are being made to restore the agricultural industry in these areas.

For reasons that farmers do not fully understand, it seems that this institution is the one which often is the most hesitant to face the vital problems involved. "It is not within the functions of this institution to deal too much with the release of agricultural figures at the local level, but rather to deal with research", the officials of this institution like to repeat every time they are asked to take a position in this respect. This negative attitude from the officials of this institution is deeply disappointing. Precisely because of its particular resources available—high expertise and most modern facilities—Agriculture Canada in Fredericton, better than anyone else, can play there a prominent part. What is more urgent, incidentally, in the interest of agriculture in Canada, and especially in the province of New Brunswick, than looking for a solution to this alarming situation prevailing in New Brunswick where 40 per cent of the arable land is in serious jeopardy of losing all its potential for agricultural production?

Unless ways are found to check land abandonment in the north and in the east of the province especially, agriculture will keep declining in those areas.

Those who continue to believe that farming can still become viable in economic terms in that area are very much concerned with this situation. As recently as January 22, 1976, the Evangeline, the Acadian daily newspaper, said, following the announcement of a community improvement project in the northeastern part of New Brunswick:

The original aspect of this document is that it emphasizes the development of the area while respecting its traditional vocation, namely rural life. The report stresses, and rightly so, that the northeast is particularly rich because of its natural resources, such as fishing, forestry, agriculture and mining, but those resources are often poorly exploited. For years these important sectors of the economy were overlooked while more emphasis was being placed on industry. That is no longer good enough.

The Acadian people are quite attached to their homeland and hang on to it because it is the only place where they really feel at home.

It is this feeling of attachment and belonging to the Motherland that the Acadian authoress, Antonine Maillet, like many others before her, sought to describe when she stated:

Today, the Acadian rebel against this notion of exodus towards the city, because they feel they are losing there their most vital assets. Their own personal lives, their own small culture, are in danger of getting lost in the city. They would have nothing left. And they are incredibly aware of that. The proof is that they struggle even at the risk to be unemployed all their lives.

The Acadians from New Brunswick are only asking for the opportunity to live at home, as full-fledged citizens, like all the other citizens of the country. The political authorities will have to consider carefully those serious problems: the stake is worth it. Up to now, we were too often inclined to ignore the fair claims of the Acadians who, according to the same authoress, "are the most deprived people on earth."

The Senate Committee on Agriculture, for its part and pursuant to its terms of reference, will continue to examine farming conditions in eastern Canada. The committee understood its mandate better following the hearings held in Moncton in the month of June 1973. Let us listen to what a farmer had to say at the conclusion of the brief he submitted to the senators who were present at those hearings:

What are you going to do? You have influence, you have political contacts, you are part of the decision-making process. But are you prepared to use all those resources to help us change the situation? For you, are those sittings not more or less an exercise to give the impression that you are concerned about our problems without committing yourself to anything but writing a report? We hope not. We call on your sense of justice and ask for your support.

Honourable senators, the farmers of eastern New Brunswick have asked for our support—they can count on that support.

[English]

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Before moving the adjournment of the Senate I would remind honourable senators that the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet in room 356-S as soon as the Senate rises. I should also like to point out that the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service has been sitting since 3.30 p.m. in room 371 of the West Block.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 12, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—LEAK OF DRAFT COPY OF SECTIONS OF REPORT—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I have the honour of being the co-chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, a committee which has been working for the last 14 months. I draw to the attention of the Senate a matter which disturbs me and the members of the committee very much, the leak of a draft copy of sections of our report, which has not been finalized. The information that was leaked was reported extensively on the CBC news this morning. I am also aware that some information was passed on to the press earlier this year, as published in the Ottawa Citizen on January 30.

Honourable senators, this practice is very disruptive to the work of a committee which has not finalized its report, and it certainly disturbs those of us who are trying to honour the confidentiality of such a report. There seems to be a growing tendency in government for important reports and documents of this type to be leaked to the press, and so I felt that this matter should be drawn to the attention of the Senate. I suppose we cannot blame the press. It is their job to get news as best they can, but surely there should be some means of protecting the confidentiality of a report before it is published. Although our committee's report will be finalized soon, the fact that it was publicized to the extent that it was is a matter of real concern to our committee, and it should be to the government.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, this is not the first time that a problem of this kind has arisen. If memory serves me correctly, on previous occasions we found that there was nothing much we could do about it. Possibly the honourable senator should give some thought to submitting this question to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, or referring his question of privilege to a Committee of the Whole. Using one vehicle or the other, we might then consider whether it is feasible to adopt certain rules to prevent the recurrence of such a case.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his advice, and I hope that all honourable senators will think about this matter. What complicates the situation is that this is a joint report of both houses.

Senator Flynn: If the honourable senator finds a solution, it may be helpful if he advises the house.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, exactly the same thing happened with respect to the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Immigration. The preliminary report, which had been prepared by the staff for discussion purposes only and which had never been seen by the committee itself, was leaked verbatim to the press. It appeared in the press and received much more publicity than did the actual report, which was considerably different after being considered by the committee.

What I do not understand is why, when we have certain rules here providing for confidentiality of certain committee reports until they are tabled in Parliament, can't we take action against the press? Surely the press is in contempt of Parliament and, that being so, why do we not do something about it? Why must we just bow down and accept it when the press publishes something which, as far as Parliament is concerned, is confidential and has a stamp on it to that effect? Why can we not do something about it?

● (1410)

May I ask Senator Buckwold why he feels the press is blameless in this matter?

Senator Buckwold: I am one of those who feel that it is the responsibility of the news media to get as much information as it can, and I do not find fault with the news media in relation to where it finds that information.

Senator McIlraith: By any means?

Senator Buckwold: No, not by any means, but if the information becomes available to the press, I personally cannot blame the press for publishing it. I blame those on the committee, or those with access to documents before the committee, who somehow engage in passing this information on to the press. I do not feel the press itself should be the whipping boy. That is my personal opinion.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, like my colleagues, I find this matter of leaks to the news media very disturbing. Both in relation to Canadian affairs and the affairs of other nations, we often hear the point of view expressed that news is the business of the news media. My colleague Senator Buckwold said that he does not blame the news media for getting news, but I think we have to find out how these leaks occur. I do not see why no effort is made to discover why or how these leaks occur.

Having said that, I do not feel that because an individual is a newspaperman and not a lawyer or an accountant or an engineer or a senator, he should feel privileged in the course of pursuing his occupation to do something which is not in the general interests of the country. There is no way I could be persuaded that to leak something that is not finalized, something that is in the process of being prepared, is performing a public service. These leaks simply enable a newsman to make a fast buck by publishing information that has not been made available in the normal course of events.

A committee report in the course of preparation is clearly not news. It is something which is still being considered. I simply do not believe that any useful service is rendered to the public of Canada, the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, when someone smart tries to make a fast buck by getting ahead of his competitors in this way. If we did this sort of thing we would have charges of conflict of interest, irresponsibility, and all sort of epithets thrown at us. But, when this is done by members of the news media, no one can criticize them. They are up there beside God.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, I could not agree more with what Senator Molson has said. However, I believe that the main offenders in these cases are those who provide these leaks to the press. They are the individuals we should be after. The press will print whatever news they can find.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, when studying the White Paper on Taxation, was concerned about this particular problem. In that instance, of course, it was a committee of the Senate and not a joint committee. In an effort to control that very thing, copies of the draft reports at the various stages were signed for by the members of the committee at the commencement of meetings and were collected at the end of the meetings. It worked very well. There were no leaks. When the report was finally approved by the committee, all copies were collected by the committee clerk and returned to the chairman. Thus we were able to keep reasonable control. Doing that with joint committees may present difficulties. However, I think it can be done, and it looks as though the committee will have to exercise itself and find ways of retaining confidentiality.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I think there are also times when a standard of ethics could and should apply. There are times when cabinet documents are released and appear in the press, or substantial extracts are published. Members of a cabinet, no matter which one, are sworn to secrecy; they take the oath of the Privy Council. These men feel that the onus is upon them to observe this oath. Most cabinet ministers have to provide a locked place for documents, and I think they do everything that is reasonably possible to make sure that there is secrecy.

If a document is considered to be as serious as that by members of the Privy Council, surely if such documents get into unauthorized hands the unauthorized person should have some sense of decency as to what is proper and right respecting the secrecy of the document, instead of broadcasting it generally. There seems to be a feeling abroad that if you get hold of a piece of information, regardless of the means used to get it into your hands, it can be used. I believe that this is the attitude that faces Senator Buckwold and others who are confronted with this problem.

[Senator Molson.]

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Copies of Report of the Study Group on Dissociation, dated December 24, 1975 (Mr. James A. Vantour, Chairman), published under the authority of the Solicitor General of Canada.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Michaud, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, presented the following report:

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture to which was referred Bill C-41, intitled: "An Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof" has, in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, February 10, 1976, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McDonald moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

● (1420)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 17, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put, I should like, as usual, to give a brief summary of what we can expect for the next week.

We will continue the second reading debate on Bill C-71, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, and hopefully refer the bill to committee. There is also the third reading of Bill C-41, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, which has been placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate. Bill C-58, the Time and Reader's Digest bill, is still before the Commons but is expected to come to us next week.

On Tuesday or Wednesday, Senator Macnaughton will call the attention of the Senate to the recent meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group held in Key Biscayne, Florida. I understand that a number of other senators who attended the meeting wish to speak on this item.

On Tuesday, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet at 2.30 p.m. to continue its study of the Green Paper on Members of Parliament and Conflict of Interest.

On Wednesday, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. to hear witnesses with respect to Canadian textile problems currently under consideration by the committee. Also on Wednesday, the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet when the Senate rises. On Thursday, the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration will meet at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to.

INFORMATION CANADA

INACCURACIES IN PUBLICATIONS—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, now that Information Canada is defunct, and not one moment too soon in my judgment, I should like to ask the Acting Leader of the Government who is responsible for the remains, because I want to address to that personage a strong remonstrance against the publication of two pamphlets which came to us in the last couple of days, one on the Governors General of Canada and one on the Prime Ministers of Canada. They are chock-full of gross, elementary and, in many instances, highly serious errors both of fact and of constitutional law and practice. They should not be allowed to circulate to add to the already overflowing mass of misinformation in the public mind, if one can call it that, on this subject. They should be withdrawn at the earliest possible opportunity.

They have the most preposterous statements in them about elementary matters of constitutional law and practice, and ridiculous misstatements of fact, including one minor one about the withdrawal of the former leader of this house, the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who is reported to have withdrawn from public life in 1907; the fact being that he withdrew from the leadership of the Opposition in this house in 1907 and was still sitting here almost up to the moment of his death. I remember seeing him here in 1916 myself.

This is just one minor instance. Another instance is the statement that the Governor General's "judicial functions were modified" by the instructions of 1878. When the Governor General possessed any judicial functions is beyond my comprehension. They certainly were not modified in any way in 1878.

There are stacks of misstatements of this kind, and careless statements and nonsense. It is a serious matter that public money should be spent to disseminate rubbish of this sort, dressed up in fancy and expensive clothes.

So I want to know who is presiding now over the remains of the defunct "Misinformation" Canada.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I hope my honourable colleague will allow me to take his question as notice, in order to give me ample time to find out who could be the culprit. I promise that I will do my best to obtain that information at the earliest possible time.

FINAL ACT OF HELSINKI CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, November 27, 1975, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau appended his signature on August 1, 1975, in Helsinki, Finland, to a document entitled, "The Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, Final Act." There were 34 other signatures of "high representatives of the participating states," including most of the countries of western Europe, the satellites behind the Iron Curtain, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the United States of America.

The conference took place over three days in Finlandia Hall in Helsinki. Policemen in plain clothes with walkie-talkie sets were present everywhere. Police dogs on the grounds, helicopters in the air and harbour craft on the waters provided a foolproof security blanket. People were kept at a distance. Security was exceptionally tight for this security conference.

The 60-page declaration is a rather complex document, as it deals with many aspects of interstate and international relations. To give you a better understanding of the problems which concerned the leaders of these countries, I am presenting the following highlights from this declaration which appeared in the New York Times of July 29, 1975:

DÉTENTE: The participating states pledge to "broaden, deepen and make continuing and lasting the process of détente."

SECURITY: They have "sovereign equality" and the right to "freedom and political independence" and "freely to choose and develop" their systems. "Frontiers can be changed by peaceful means and by agreement." However, they recognize that "all one another's frontiers are inviolable."

FORCE: "The threat or use of force" is renounced "against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state."

HUMAN RIGHTS: The signers promise to respect "fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief."

OBLIGATIONS: They pledge to obey international law and "pay due regard to and implement" the provisions of the document, but this will not affect their "rights and obligations" or existing treaties and agreements.

● (1430)

DISPUTES: A search for peaceful solutions, through mediation, arbitration or otherwise, is promised.

MANOEUVRES: The European states promise, on a voluntary basis, to give 21 days' notice of military manoeuvres by more than 25,000 men. For the Soviet Union and Turkey, which have Asian borders, the promise applies only to a 155-mile zone along European borders. The purpose is to build confidence, and avert accidental attack.

TRADE: The participants promise to give better facilities to businessmen, including visas and hotel rooms, and endorse most-favoured-nation treatment, but on a basis that gives reciprocal advantage to market and state-trading systems.

THE MEDITERRANEAN: The participants promise to seek relations with non-European states on the Mediteranean, as well as a reduction of armed forces and a decrease of tension in the area.

FAMILIES: Pledges are given to make it easier for families to unite across borders and visit one another, and for citizens to marry foreigners.

CONTACTS: Tourism, youth meetings and many other forms of contact are to be facilitated. Freer flows of information and printed matter are pledged, as are improved exchanges in education and culture.

JOURNALISTS: The states promise to reduce visa and travel difficulties, and not to expel foreign journalists without giving a reason and a chance for appeal.

FOLLOW-UP: The participants will send experts to a meeting in Belgrade on June 15, 1977, to discuss how the agreement has been applied, and whether there should be further meetings, or even a new full-fledged conference.

Apart from the signing ceremony, the sessions heard 35, mostly mechanically-read, speeches. Leonid Brezhnev, the Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and the driving force behind this conference, did not even refer to the Final Act, stating the conference was "a necessary summing-up of the political outcome of the Second World War." He warned that "no one should try to dictate to other peoples, on the basis of foreign-policy consideration of one kind or another, the manner in which they ought to manage their internal affairs."

President Ford of the United States was sceptical about the Helsinki Declaration, stating, "History will judge this conference not by what we say today but by what we do tomorrow; not by the promises we make, but by the promises we keep." He warned that "peace is not a piece of paper," and stressed the importance of balanced East-West reductions and strategic arms limitation by the two super-powers.

Prime Minister Wilson of the United Kingdom emphasized that détente meant little "if it is not reflected in the daily lives of our people." He could not understand why there could not be free movement of people and exchange of ideas across all European borders in modern times.

Prime Minister Trudeau warned that state activity alone could not produce security and cooperation. He stated, "Without the promise of family reunification, without the interchange of ideas and opinions, the new era of harmony we seek will not be found." His talk with Mr. Brezhnev paved the way for a settlement of the Soviet-Canadian fisheries dispute.

One wonders about the importance to the government of the Helsinki Declaration, when it took so long to be tabled in the Canadian Parliament. It was not tabled until December 22, 1975—four months later. I believe that the tabling of the document was brought about by the inquiry of Senator Eugene Forsey, who spoke on the topic the previous week, on November 27. He is to be warmly commended for introducing this topic, which subsequently was only briefly discussed in the other chamber.

The statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, The Honourable Allan MacEachen, was rather terse. He was of the opinion that the Final Act of the CSCE: "is intended to establish the basis for the development of future relations between their countries and peoples... it does not look back to the past." Further on the minister emphasizes:

Not one word of the Final Act justifies the claim that it constitutes recognition of Soviet hegemony in eastern Europe or of the post-war de facto borders.

Mr. MacEachen was happy with Canada's achievement—the incorporation of "measures to assist the freer movement of people and ideas." This is all very well on the surface. There was no statement in the house from the Prime Minister of Canada, who signed the agreement. I believe that the Canadian Parliament is entitled to a report from him. Much more attention should have been devoted to this conference in Helsinki by the members of the elected chamber in view of the developments that could emanate from this meeting.

We can be grateful to Senator Forsey for his analysis and critical comments of the text of the Helsinki Declaration. His "warnings, doubts, hesitations and fears" regarding the motivations of the Soviet leaders and the leaders of the democratic states, and the implementation of this agreement, should be a cause of concern to Canadian parliamentarians, leaders and people. Canada will be greatly affected by the outcome of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Consequently, I believe that this document should not go unnoticed, or be taken lightly, but should be thoroughly studied by the standing committees on external affairs of both houses. Expert witnesses should testify at the hearings and recommendations should be forthcoming, so that Canadians will be aware of all the implications of such an international agreement.

Canada is not a large, influential power; it is only a pawn in the game of international politics. At least, we should be aware of how we are being used and what could happen to us in the world.

Only at great peril can we obliterate the past. In approving this accord, Canada must remember that the Soviet Union is a communist totalitarian police state governed by a ruthless dictatorship having complete control over the lives of hundreds of millions of people of various origins in the largest empire in the world. It is a mistake to assume that communists keep their agreements; they have always followed Lenin's dictum: "Promises are like pie crusts, made to be broken." Stalin expressed it more fully in 1913 in these words:

Words must have no relation to action—otherwise what kind of diplomacy is it? Good words are a mask for the concealment of bad deeds. Sincere diplomacy is no more possible than dry water or iron wood.

● (1440)

Therefore, it should not be surprising that the Soviet Union has violated more than 100 treaties and agreements.

The United States Senate Judiciary Committee in its investigations has recorded the details of over 100 Soviet treaty violations, which were published under the title Soviet Political Agreements and Results in 1964. The following is the conclusion of the Chairman, Senator James Eastland:

—since the Soviet Union came into existence, its Government had broken its word to virtually every country to which it ever gave a signed promise. It signed treaties of nonaggression with neighbouring states and then absorbed those states. It signed promises to refrain from revolutionary activity inside the countries with which it sought "friendship," then cynically broke those promises. It was violating the first agreement it ever signed with the United States at the very moment the Soviet envoy, Litvinov, was putting his signature to that document and it is still violating the same agreement—

He concluded:

I seriously doubt whether during the whole history of civilization any great nation has ever made as perfidious a record as this in so short a time.

Let us look briefly at the background of the setting of the summit session of the CSCE in Helsinki. In the winter of 1939, the U.S.S.R., then an ally of Nazi Germany, launched an unprovoked invasion of Finland, bombing the capital, Helsinki, and other parts of that country. This shocked the world. The gallant Finnish people quickly organized their defence, the famous Mannerheim line, and repelled successive Soviet attacks. However, the superior numbers and strength of the Soviet Union forced the Finns to capitulate. Thereupon the League of Nations expelled the U.S.S.R. and praised the Finns for their heroism.

In June 1940, the Soviet Union, still an ally of Nazi Germany, after having annexed Western Ukraine, and parts of Byelorussia, Bukovina and Bessarabia, militarily occupied the Baltic states of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, according to the Hitler-Stalin agreement on "spheres of influence" in Eastern Europe. Hitler would not allow Stalin to annex Finland, for he had designs on that country.

When Germany attacked the Soviet Union in June 1941, Finland was forced into the Axis, becoming an ally of Germany against the Soviet Union. The defeat of Hitler in 1945 meant the loss of some Finnish territory to the U.S.S.R., but Finland remained independent, which was not the fate of Poland, Rumania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

Finnish independence has been, and is, precarious. Subject to Soviet economic pressures, pressures of the media and the Soviet build-up of naval and missile power in the Murmansk-Kola region, Finland has become increasingly subservient to Soviet policies, and the door to Scandinavia for Soviet plans—which I shall discuss a little later. The great tragedy is that Helsinki, the former proud symbol of freedom and resistance to foreign aggression, became the site of the summit session of the CSCE, which was conceived as a Soviet device to obtain the endorsement and legalization by the European countries and the U.S.A. of the Soviet territorial conquests as well as the ideological and cultural division of Europe. Helsinki is now on the road to acquiring the infamy and shame of Munich, Yalta and Potsdam, where Western powers yielded to totalitarian dictates and compromised their principles.

The idea of the security conference was conceived and promoted by the Soviet politbureau immediately after the death of Stalin in 1953. The cold war was declared ended, and peaceful co-existence was soon proclaimed by Khrushchev. When the Western powers refused a German treaty, because of the division into two Germanies, the Soviet Union pressed for a conference to obtain the "inviolability of frontiers" in all Europe. The Western countries, including the United States and Canada, stated that their interest "was less in frontiers than in humanitarian issues." The other conditions of their participation were an agreement to improve the Berlin situation, the opening of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT), and Mutual Balanced Force Reductions (MBFR) in Central Europe. This later led to the preparatory talks on the conference in Helsinki in 1972. The driving force behind the security conference was the Soviet Union. It was part of a strategic plan for world domination.

At the time of the Helsinki Conference, the Toronto Globe and Mail of July 30, 1975, published a revealing article by Lord Chalfont which had appeared in the London Times. The title was, "The brutal reality of Brezhnev's policy." We learn that six months before the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, Major General Jan Sejna escaped from that country to the West in February 1968. He was not merely the highest-ranking military defector at that time; he was the First Secretary of the Communist Party in the Ministry of Defence, the senior party official in the armed forces and a member of the Presidium, the governing body of the Czechoslovak Parliament. For 10 years Sejna was a member of the Warsaw Pact planning meetings, being especially involved in the formulation of the Warsaw Pact's strategic plan, designed to implement foreign policy objectives of the Soviet Union from 1968 into the 1980's. Sejna brought with him the secret Warsaw Pact documents.

The Warsaw Pact meeting in Moscow in the autumn of 1965, led by party boss Leonid Brezhnev, adopted the project entitled: "The Long Term Strategic Plan for the next 10 to 15 years and the years after." It consisted of 10 volumes, outlining studies of each country of concern to the Warsaw Pact, including Britain. Defined were the principal foreign policy targets of the various countries of the pact, and the specific roles of diplomacy, foreign trade, the military forces, espionage, subversion, et cetera.

The document presents the strategic plan in four phases. The first was the preparatory period of peaceful co-existence, from 1956 to 1959, when Khrushchev's policies of de-Stalinization helped to soften the West and persuaded the capitalist countries that the communists appeared to abandon military confrontation for economic confrontation.

The principal strategic objectives of the second phase, from 1960 to 1972, were to promote the disunity of the West and accelerate social dislocation. In Western Europe, the chief aims were to play up German nationalism and to exploit French nationalism to detach France from NATO. In the United States, the aim was to promote isolationism, domestic unrest and protest movements against the "military industrial complex." All the while, the Warsaw Pact countries were to modernize and strengthen their military forces "as a hedge against the possibility of future arms-control agreements."

The third phase, under the heading "The Period of Dynamic Social Change," covering the period 1973 to 1985, was designed "to smash the hope of false democracy," and achieve the total demoralization of the West. Friendship and cooperation with the United States would be promoted with the object of securing economic and technological advantage for the U.S.S.R., while undermining the belief of the West to improve military defences. Every effort will be continued to weaken and break up NATO by bringing about the reduction of United States troops and commitments in Europe and eventually their withdrawal.

The fourth phase is to usher in a period of "Global Democratic Peace" in the late 1980s. A "progressive peace-loving" administration will come into power in the United States. By this time the United States will be isolated from Europe, and will be vulnerable to economic pressures. The Warsaw Pact will intensify the arms race, and will thus achieve an overwhelming superiority for the communist forces.

General Sejna states:

There is, of course, nothing especially sinister in any of this—nor anything very new to the student of Marxism-Leninism. It is no more than the brutal reality of international power politics... every action of the Soviet Union in the international field continues to be consistent with the tactics of the plan.

When toasts were proposed in Helsinki during Brezhnev's hour of triumph, General Sejna wanted the leaders of the West to remember the words of the Soviet party boss, the author of the plan, when he spoke to Eastern European leaders in Praha in February of 1968, after the appointment of Alexander Dubcek as First Secretary of the Czechoslovak Communist Party. At that time, Leonid Brezhnev said:

If we want to win we cannot achieve our goals without strong military forces. Did we ever say that we would not use force if it was necessary to support progressive movements in, for example, France, Britain or Sweden?... This is the sacred duty of our forces—to protect and support progressive movements.

Can this be interpreted as non-interference in the internal affairs of foreign countries? Certainly not.

The press in the Western world was generally sceptical about the Helsinki accord, and there were numerous editorials which outrightly condemned the signing. The Estonian Information Centre of Toronto last November issued a volume—I have it here—entitled The Summit Session of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe held in Helsinki, Finland on July 28, 1975. It is a collection of 111 articles from newspapers and periodicals, many by outstanding authorities, that appeared in the New York Times, the Christian Science Monitor, Le Monde, Newsweek, National Review, The Times, The Economist, Peking Review, and in many Canadian dailies such as the The Globe and Mail, the Toronto Star, the Toronto Sun, the Montreal Star, the Ottawa Citizen, the Ottawa Journal, the Winnipeg Tribune, Le Devoir, and others.

Many outstanding authorities were highly critical of the CSCE, warning that most of the advantages were on the side of the Soviet bloc. The great Russian writer Solzhenitsyn, and the leader of the human rights movement in the U.S.S.R., Andrei Sakharov, advised against the declaration. The Soviet historian Edward Crankshaw, of Britain; George M. Ball, former American Under Secretary of State under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson; Canadian historian James Eayres; the former Prime Minister of Canada,

[Senator Yuzyk.]

John G. Diefenbaker; Soviet expert Mark Gayn; and many other prominent authorities and leaders spoke out against sanctifying Soviet tyranny.

The Canadian Committee of Captive European Nations, composed of representatives of peoples that were subjugated by the U.S.S.R., urged the Canadian government not to sign the agreement, and gave evidence that the Helsinki "pact" was a sell-out of the peoples behind the Iron Curtain.

How does the great communist rival, the People's Republic of China, assess the Final Act of the CSCE? It should be remembered that the Soviet Union is vying to win Western sympathy, and even technological and economic support, in the event of a possible all-out war with Red China. Here is an excerpt from the Peking Review of August 8, 1975.

Time-consuming as it was, the conference did precious little more than to end up with a reiteration of the principles of the United Nations Charter. The documents and resolutions of the League of Nations before World War II likewise stipulated similar principles, but they could not prevent the outbreak of another world war. The U.N. Charter is now 30 years old, but since when has there been tranquillity on earth? Take the invasion and occupation of Czechoslovakia by the Soviet social-imperialists as an example. Could this move be in keeping with any of the aforesaid ten principles? But even in the course of the CSCE talks, officials of the Soviet delegation actually let it be publicly known that the dispatch of Soviet troops to occupy Czechoslovakia was not use of force and Moscow would do so again if and when a similar situation arose in the future. It is crystal clear that "international agreements" such as the so-called "principles guiding relations between states" have no binding force on Soviet social-imperialism as a mere scrap of paper and can in no way safeguard the security of the European countries.

Then comes the conclusion:

But above all it suits the Soviet Union and the United States, it dovetails into their contention for hegemony in Europe and the world and it serves their mounting rivalry. It has nothing to do with the safeguarding of security in Europe.

That is the official stance of the People's Republic of China.

● (1500)

If there are some who think that the U.S.S.R. will honour its pledges regarding human rights, I wish to draw their attention to a petition that was signed by 86 members of the Senate and the House of Commons on December 3, 1975. It was addressed to Leonid Brezhnev, Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and sent to the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, with the following text:

We, the undersigned Canadian Members of Parliament, urgently appeal to the Soviet Government, in the spirit of the Helsinki Agreement, to permit the distinguished scientist Andrei Sakharov to go to Oslo to receive the deserved Nobel Peace Prize.

A reply was received on December 8 from the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa addressed to Mr. Alistair Fraser, Clerk of the House of Commons, returning the petition "in connection with an unjustified request on behalf of A. Sakharov." The reply read:

I am sure that you will find means to inform the members of the Canadian Parliament who signed the petition of the reasons which prevent the Embassy from complying with their request, as the petition cannot be qualified otherwise than an interference in the internal affairs of the Soviet Union. In the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on European Security it is stated, in particular, that "The participating states will refrain from any interference, direct or indirect, individual or collective, in the internal or external affairs falling within the domestic jurisdiction of another participating state, regardless of their mutual relations".

A reply was sent to the Soviet Embassy by Senator Eugene Forsey, which, with his kind permission, I should like to read:

I must first express my surprise that your letter should have been addressed to the Clerk of either House, and not to the signatories of the document you had received. That document was in no sense a document of either House: it was a petition from individual members of both Houses. Neither House, and no official of either House, had any responsibility for it whatever.

I am equally surprised that you invoke the provisions of the Helsinki Declaration in this matter. The passage you quote from the Declaration says that "The participating states will refrain from any interference, direct or indirect, individual or collective," etc. My colleagues and I are not "states", a point which has apparently escaped Your Excellency's notice. We are neither a state, nor a collection of states. The Helsinki Declaration, in the passage you quoted, refers solely to "states, . . . individual or collective" (that is, one state or a group of states).

In any event, how can our petition be described as "interference" in the affairs of the Soviet Union? We have an English proverb, "A cat can look at a king." Surely any citizen, of any state, can address to the Government of any state, a request, or plea, or petition, asking that Government to take, or not to take, a certain action?

If the Helsinki Declaration is to be interpreted in the fashion you appear to suggest in your letter, then the passages in it dealing with human rights and freedoms are just waste paper.

At this time we should take serious note of the recent visit of Mr. Joseph Luns, the Secretary-General of NATO. He spoke to the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association on February 4, 1976, and next day to the Canadian Club in Ottawa. The Globe and Mail of February 5 published a short news item, captioned: "Soviet intervention in Angola imperils détente, Luns warns." He stated that the Soviet Union has successfully mounted a military operation "way beyond its sphere of influence." Soviet achievements in Angola might lead to intervention in other parts of Africa. He said that there is a contradiction in the way East and West regard détente. He is quoted as saying:

The Western allies tend to regard détente as a move toward friendship and warm co-operation, but Warsaw Pact countries consider it little more than a tool to provide international stability while they build up their military might with the help of Western technology.

He went on to say that although the Soviet Union is not "a great success in human terms," it is "a superpower in military terms," and would not hesitate to use its military power to back political aims. Mr. Luns concluded by saying that if it gains political domination of Europe, "I do not believe that the free democratic institutions of either Canada or the United States could survive for long." A very grave warning.

The Twenty-first Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held from September 21 to September 26, 1975, in Copenhagen, Denmark, made the Helsinki Agreement the subject of close scrutiny, about which I reported to the Senate on December 4, 1975. In the resolutions it was recognized that "détente does not mean an end to deep political and ideological differences," but it is at the present time "the only valid alternative to policies of crises and confrontation." Great emphasis was placed on "a comprehensive application of the Helsinki Principles," particularly on the free movement of people and information. The most important request to the member governments of NATO was that they "monitor carefully the implementation of human, cultural, educational, and information obligations in the Helsinki Agreement so that a detailed accounting may be presented to the follow-up conference in Belgrade in June 1977."

Honourable senators, I should like to repeat what I stated in this chamber on December 4, 1975:

NATO is the bulwark of freedom and democracy in the world, the front line of defence against the aggression of totalitarian, imperialistic powers. . . The power of the Soviet Union has been increasing at an alarmingly rapid pace, surpassing NATO's conventional forces and equipment. The Western democracies are today faced with the greatest threat since the inception of NATO, offset only partially by the rising power of Red China. This is no time for complacency. We must be alert and prepared for the worst eventuality. NATO must not be allowed to be weakened, but must be strengthened in every respect. Consequently, Canada, rich in natural resources but vulnerable, must not lag behind. Our government must commit our country to a greater responsibility and role in the North Atlantic Alliance to keep this world safe for freedom and democracy.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

TELEVISION AND RADIO COVERAGE OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Greene, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability of permitting complete television and radio coverage of the proceedings of the Senate and of the public proceedings of all Senate Committees.—(Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C.)

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, in the unavoidable absence of Senator Greene, who initiated this inquiry and who I think should be here when I make my remarks, I would ask that this order stand until March 2 next.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 17, at 8 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 17, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Balfour had been substituted for that of Mr. Fairweather on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Flynn had been substituted for that of Mr. Langlois on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Reports on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the months of September and October, 1975, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report relating to warrants issued under the Official Secrets Act for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 16(5) of the said Act, as amended by Chapter 50, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Copies of Report relating to authorizations and interceptions under the Criminal Code for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 178.22(4) of the Code, as amended by Chapter 50, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Copies of document setting forth Guidelines concerning acquisitions of interests in oil and gas rights, dated January 5, 1976, pursuant to section 4(2) of the Foreign Investment Review Act, Chapter 46, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Report of operations under the International River Improvements Act for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 10 of the said Act, Chapter I-22, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Order of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, dated February 12, 1976, respecting the Irving Pulp and Paper Agreement, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, together with copies of press release relating thereto.

QUARANTINE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Senator Perrault presented Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THE PRIME MINISTER

VISIT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA WITH CABINET MINISTERS—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I inquire of the Leader of the Government as to whether the visit of the Prime Minister and some of his colleagues of the cabinet, including the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to British Columbia last week was worth depriving the Senate of the presence of the government leader?

Senator Perrault: It is for honourable senators to make that determination and for history to pass judgment on the visit—if history is interested. I do want to say that the working visit of the Prime Minister and other ministers to Western Canada, specifically in this instance to British Columbia, is a practice which I heartily commend. My belief is that perhaps parliamentarians spend too much time in Parliament in what is, at times, the unreal atmosphere which exists here.

Senator Flynn: You do not speak of the Senate!

Senator Perrault: May I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that perhaps, at times, we can make just as great a contribution to the welfare of the people of this country by meeting with them and discussing their problems as we can by deliberating and enacting legislation here.

It is my hope that in the years to come it will be possible for not only this cabinet but other cabinets to frequently hold meetings in various parts of the country. The transportation and communications facilities which exist today make entirely feasible this very worthwhile practice.

To understand the many problems which exist all over the country, I believe members of Parliament have to move around the country. They have to see the problems firsthand and to talk to those involved, whether they be British Columbians, Albertans, Quebecois, Maritimers, Newfoundlanders, or those who live in the North, on the Prairies or in Ontario. That is one very useful way in which we can achieve the kind of interchange that is necessary in the interests of Canada as a whole, regardless of our political beliefs or where we find our provincial homes. The meeting was useful and a success, and I hope that members of other parties, some of them occupying shadow cabinet positions, will similarly engage in this kind of exercise.

Senator Flynn: I would simply say, since I gave the Leader of the Government an opportunity to make a little political speech—and he made exactly the one I expected—that perhaps his absence helped to expedite the work of the Senate.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, if I may add a brief historical footnote, it may interest honourable senators to know that formal meetings of the Privy Council, with the Governor General present, in the early years after Confederation, have taken place, not only in Ottawa, of course, but also in Quebec City, in Montreal, in Halifax, in Tadoussac and in the town of Prescott, Ontario.

Senator Flynn: Don't forget St. Patrick, Quebec.

Senator Forsey: I said meetings of the Privy Council with the Governor General present.

Senator Flynn: But St. Patrick was the Riel case.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, we all appreciate this historical information. If it was the practice in the past and has been abandoned subsequently, it is a practice well worth reviving. To those commentators who wrote in news reports about the meeting in British Columbia to the effect that it was nothing but a sham, I would suggest, as someone who was present, that it was very much a full meeting of a cabinet committee discussing problems facing the eastern provinces as well as the west. It was not a sham; it was a valid meeting of an important cabinet committee.

COMMERCIAL USE OF PICTURE OF PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words about a question asked by Senator Forsey on Thursday, February 5. On that occasion the honourable senator made reference to some advertising material sent out by the Publishers Clearing House, which he believed to be an American-based firm. He alleged they used in their advertising literature a picture of the parliamentary library.

I am informed that the law pertaining to the use of a picture of any part of the Parliament Buildings is found in section 17(2)(c) of the Copyright Act, which provides that the making or publishing of photographs of any architectural work of art does not constitute an infringement of copyright. The Parliament Buildings are an architectural work of art of the Italian Gothic style, as honourable senators are aware. Therefore, the publishing of a picture of the Parliament Buildings, or of a particular part such as the library, would not ordinarily require permission to be sought and given.

Senator Davey last February asked a question regarding a commercial advertising message which used a picture of the Parliament Buildings. Information was sought as to whether permission was asked of the Government of Canada to use the picture of the Parliament Buildings, and I, at that time, had to give an answer similar to the one I am now giving Senator Forsey.

As Senator Forsey mentioned, several years ago a hotel chain attempted to attach the expression "Parliament Hill" to the name of a new building, and as a result an act was passed, which was assented to on May 19, 1972, prohibiting the commercial use of the words "Parliament Hill".

I hope this answers Senator Forsey's question, albeit in a summary manner. If honourable senators wish to inquire into this question in more detail perhaps they should so indicate, and the matter might be referred to an appropriate standing committee.

I understand that the Parliamentary Librarian, Mr. Erik Spicer, had this matter referred to him in late January, and concluded that he had no control over the use of pictures of the Library of Parliament, and, to his knowledge, neither does anyone else. I have been informed that Mr. Spicer also said that pictures of the library have been used a number of times without permission, consultation, or even notification.

Senator Forsey: By the government or government agencies.

Senator Perrault: Conceivably.

Senator Forsey: Without permission.

Senator Perrault: The parliamentary librarian felt that there was no point in objecting to the use of the picture of the Library of Parliament in the present instance, as he had no control over this. He would be prepared to go further if there had been a flagrant misuse of the picture, but all he could do was make his objections known.

Senator Riley: I wonder if the Honourable Leader of the Government would permit a question?

In his statement he said that there is nothing to prevent anyone from using a picture of the parliamentary library. Does that mean that if I issued shares in some fictitious mine, or some venture like that, and the share certificates had a picture of the parliamentary library on them, the government would not intervene in any way? I have had something to do with security frauds. When a share certificate is issued with a picture of Canada's Parliament Buildings or the Library of Parliament on it, is it the intention of the government to just ignore that?

Senator Perrault: In view of past rulings on this matter, I would suggest that if the mining stock were entitled, "The Parliament Hill Quicksilver Mining Corporation," and had on it a large picture of the Parliament Buildings and the Library of Parliament, that that would constitute a grotesque use of the symbols of Parliament. The same restrictions and prohibitions, therefore, which applied in the case of the hotel would then apply to mining promoters who may wish to exploit the dignity of this place.

Senator Riley: I would also direct the attention of the leader to the fact that this does not protect the unsophis-ticated investor. I believe it was once said by the head of the Ontario Securities Commission that if lifeguards on the beach tell the swimmers that there are sharks in the water, they will still go in. We have the questionable Carolyn Davis book deals telling us we are going to make a big income every year. Disgusting! But here we have someone putting out a piece of paper that looks like a share certificate, and it appeals to the unsophisticated. They invest money in it and the government is not prepared to do anything about it.

Senator Beaubien: What government?

Senator Riley: I don't care what government. It might have been when you were in government.

Senator Walker: That is a provincial matter you are talking about.

Senator Riley: No, it is not a provincial matter. It is a federal matter, it is a matter for Consumer Affairs, because the picture on the share certificate is a picture of the parliamentary library.

Senator Côté: It is a nice picture.

Senator Riley: There must be some way in which it can be stopped. In this particular instance, it was issued by residents of a foreign country and designed to attract Canadian investors.

Senator Asselin: Order.

Senator Côté: What was the first question?

Senator Walker: What is your question?

Senator Riley: My question is: What is the government going to do about it?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that the owners of this particular company, The Publishers Clearing House, have indicated that in subsequent press runs they do not intend to employ the picture of the parliamentary library.

Senator Riley: The damage has been done.

Senator Perrault: I would simply repeat my belief, which I think is supported by most honourable senators. When there is undue commercial exploitation of words like "Parliament Hill," as in the case of the hotel, in an apparent effort to suggest that somehow that commercial activity has the official seal of approval, support or approbation of Parliament, then it certainly is a matter which should be brought before Parliament for action. In any case, circumstances which subsequently arise may lend themselves to rulings at that time. If cases do in fact occur at some future time—if there is such a thing as "The Parliament Hill Get-Rich-Quick Mining Corporation,"—then Parliament can deal with them very well at that time.

● (2020)

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I should like to take this opportunity to ask a question related to this general matter.

It will be recalled that several commercial interests in Canada have produced, and continue to produce, Christmas cards and New Year's cards showing a picture—not a photograph but an etching, a crayon drawing or something of that sort—depicting the Centre Block. I do not know whether such commercial enterprises are entitled to make use of a picture of the Centre Block in that way, but I do object to the fact that the representation is not correct. It shows a whole storey on this building, the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings, which does not exist.

It seems to me that if commercial or any other interests produce a likeness of the Parliament Buildings, the least that should be required is that such likeness be accurate. The particular card I am referring to is, I am sure, circulated by the tens of thousands, because we receive dozens of them ourselves every Christmas.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as supporters of the free market system—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault:—it seems to me that if an honourable senator is concerned about the appropriateness of captions, and the correct use of pictures and photographs of these honoured and revered buildings in which we conduct the affairs of the people, the most appropriate action for him to take is to contact the commercial company involved and point out to its management the error of its ways, and hope that in subsequent issuances of calendars or cards the mistakes will not be repeated. That is the free market way.

Senator Flynn: On a question of privilege, may I say I did not raise the question of Parliament Hill.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Goldenberg: Before the Orders of the Day, honourable senators, I want to inform senators that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet tomorrow, Wednesday, after the Senate rises, to continue its study of certain proposals in the Green Book on Conflict of Interest.

PROVINCE OF NOVA SCOTIA

STATE OF EMERGENCY DUE TO STORM DAMAGE

Hon. Ernest G. Côtteau: Honourable senators, I ask leave to make a statement relating to a state of emergency which exists in southwestern Nova Scotia.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Granted.

Senator Côtteau: Honourable senators, with your indulgence, I should like to draw your attention to a state of ruin and devastation which now exists in some parts of southwestern Nova Scotia as a result of the severe wind storm which hit that area on Monday, February 2, 1976. This is the same storm which Senator Dan Riley described in this chamber on February 4, 1976, with particular reference to its effects on the province of New Brunswick.

In Nova Scotia it appears that my home area is the one which received the full brunt of this extraordinary storm. I need not remind you that this part of Canada, namely, southwestern Nova Scotia, is one which has long since learned to live and cope with severe Atlantic storms; but this one outdid all others, as it packed winds with a velocity in excess of 100 miles per hour, and it combined with high tides to give the coast a lashing the like of which has never been known before in that area.

All three counties of Shelburne, Yarmouth and Digby suffered severe storm damage. The vastness of the territory covered by these three counties makes it most difficult to arrive at an estimate of the damage with any degree of accuracy. In circumstances such as these one has to rely on the local press, and one of the local weeklies, Le Petit Courrier, in its issue of February 5, 1976, claims that the losses created by the storm will probably amount to $4 million.

Today I called the editor of this paper to learn that officials of the provincial Department of Fisheries estimate the loss to fishermen and the related industries to be in the area of $20 million. Tonight I read in the Ottawa Journal, dated Halifax, as follows:

Initial figures indicate $40 million to $50 million damage has been reported by fishermen in southwestern Nova Scotia as a result of a February 2 storm with winds gusting to more than 100 miles an hour, Fisheries Minister A. M. Cameron said Monday. Mr. Cameron said the final total for damaged equipment probably will be high enough to involve federal government assistance. He said he expects claims for these items to amount to several million dollars.

I suspect, honourable senators, that whatever the right figure turns out to be, it will be a heavy one. The damage runs the gamut from that of minor proportions, such as the uplifting of rooftops, the toppling of chimneys, the breaking of windows, et cetera, to that of major proportions, such as the uprooting of trees and utility poles, the demolition of mobile homes and other small buildings, the sinking of fishing vessels, and the destruction of wharves with their related buildings and equipment.

The hardest hit of all were the fishermen and the fishing and marine industries. In the town of Yarmouth, the sea was forcefully driven way beyond the high tide mark covering a long stretch of its Water Street. Abetted by the hurricane force wind, the sea battered to ruin many of the wharves which line the edge of the street, and along with that it took the boats which were tied up to them. Such was the fate of many scallop draggers, herring seiners and smaller lobster boats in Yarmouth, the Tusket Islands and the surrounding areas as well as in many other communities in Shelburne and Digby counties.

Perhaps I should explain that this storm struck at a point in winter when many of the lobstermen, out of respect for the rigours of the winter, traditionally pull their traps out of the water and stack them up neatly on the shore—and, wherever possible, in the interest of practicality, on wharves, some of which are their own property. After the storm, in some cases both the traps and the wharf disappeared. One wharf in particular on Turpentine Island is said to have contained 1,000 such traps at a value of between $20 and $30 apiece. This is one of the many examples of the gravity of the damage suffered by hundreds of fishermen. One bright note in this whole story is that there was no loss of life.

[Senator Côtteau.]

Honourable senators, I will not prolong my description of the storm. I would simply say that the Government of Nova Scotia has shown an immediate and warm response to the state of emergency which followed the storm in my home area. It is my belief that a program for the relief of those afflicted will be properly initiated by the province. I know that the local M.P., Miss Coline Campbell, is very much concerned about this matter and that she is doing her utmost to bring some relief to the area.

My plea at this time is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Perrault, to take note of the situation brought about by the recent storm in my area and in other parts of the Atlantic provinces, and to lend a sympathetic ear to any request for federal assistance in the promotion of a relief program to help those whose possessions have been so tragically destroyed.

Senator Perrault: I know that all honourable senators appreciate the account given us by Senator Côtteau with respect to the devastating storm in his area. I should like to take this opportunity to assure him on behalf of the government that should an official request for assistance be forwarded to the government, sympathetic consideration will be given to it.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION BILL

THIRD READING

Senator McDonald moved third reading of Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Paterson: Honourable senators, may I have the opportunity to ask Senator McDonald a question before the final question is put? I should like to know if the idea behind this piece of legislation is to perpetuate the price of a loaf of bread at 60 cents or more? I ask this in view of the fact that there are 22 million consumers in Canada, half of them women and children, and many people are finding great difficulty in trying to supply their families with bread at 60 cents a loaf.

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, this piece of legislation has nothing to do with the price of bread. It has no relationship whatsoever, in that all that this bill provides for is a levelling of farm income over a period of years. This piece of legislation does not mean that wheat will have any given price, but that the average return to the farmers will be stabilized over a period of years, thus removing the humps and hollows in returns from grain production in Western Canada. The federal government will put into the western grain stabilization account $2 for every $1 contributed by the farmers. It certainly has nothing to do with the price of grain.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1975

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 11, the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, I would ask your indulgence for my being not too well prepared, having been stuck in the snow this afternoon for four hours. However, I will do my best and offer a few opinions with respect to Bill C-71, which is now before the Senate.

● (2040)

[Translation]

Honourable senators, Bill C-71 now before the Senate is an omnibus piece of legislation. It includes amendments to the Criminal Code proposed for our consideration. As the Leader of the Official Opposition said during the debate, I regret that such omnibus bills include a number of provisions, and often confront Parliament with difficulties. Although some of the provisions may be acceptable to us, others may not be in accord with our convictions, our conscience, our experience. We are nonetheless asked to accept the principle of such a bill composed of a variety of provisions. We are asked to approve the principle of the bill.

I feel that such a procedure does not benefit our society. Parliament cannot give a sensible opinion on each and every one of the provisions of the bill, when it is asked to decide in principle.

Bill C-71 comprises a number of provisions. It is not my intention to go into every detail of all the clauses of the bill. I would simply stress certain features raising certain questions in my mind. I would first refer to the part concerning bail.

We know that flexibility was introduced some years ago in the matter of release on bail. This was of course at the request of a number of law experts, who urged that certain parts of the Criminal Code be liberalized in order to provide for more humane conditions when it comes to bail. Unfortunately, that experiment was in my view harmful to society. It has not been understood by those who could benefit, and God only knows that in Quebec we were in for it. We paid the price of easier parole introduced some years ago. We saw parolees committing crimes, coming back before the courts, and getting away on bail even though they were under parole. They were again released because of the new bail clauses passed here in Parliament. In many cases these paroles were violated. People did not appear at their trial. They tried to escape justice. Unfortunately, in many cases the people who were released on bail because of the generosity of the court committed other crimes a few weeks later.

This is why all provincial attorneys general protested and asked the federal government to introduce more restrictive provisions in the bail legislation.

I believe that in today's society people would like to give medals to those who commit the greatest number of crimes. Of course, I have great respect for the magistrates, but I believe that in the past some of our judges have shown weakness in applying certain provisions of the Criminal Code.

It is time for Parliament to think first of all of protecting society while recognizing the weaknesses of those who commit more or less serious offenses, before giving them a chance to rehabilitate themselves. However, society will be glad to learn that we have been firmer, that we have corrected the mistakes embodied in the old bail legislation and that it will be more difficult for someone who goes before a court to be released on bail since the burden of proof will rest on the accused. The accused will have to show proof to the court, whereas in the past it was up to the Crown to show the court that the accused should not be released because of its belief that he would not appear for his trial and that it would be dangerous for society to release the accused because he could commit other crimes. But now the burden of proof has been reversed; it will be up to the criminal to prove that he deserves to be released on bail. I believe that this is an improvement and, even though I am a defence attorney, I applaud loudly these provisions because I think that they will afford better protection to our society.

The bill also contains a provision concerning the verdict of a jury. I would like honourable senators to understand what I want to say.

The other day the Leader of the Opposition explained this problem in depth. I must say that on that occasion he made one of the best speeches he has ever made in the Senate, since he showed once again his great knowledge of jurisprudence and of the law and his experience in court.

The problem raised by the jury's verdict stems, of course, from Morgentaler's trial. The question at issue has nothing to do with abortion, but the fact that a court of appeal reversed a verdict of not guilty brought down by a jury. You know the strong opposition that was raised by jurists as well as people involved with civil liberties in Canada who opposed that decision by the court of appeal, suggesting that the jury principle had been sabotaged. It must be pointed out that the then Minister of Justice described the situation of the dismissal of the verdict of acquittal by a court of appeal as a great hysteria raised by people wanting to spread disorder in society.

Senator Flynn: That was Otto Lang?

Senator Asselin: Otto Lang. However, I think that under the law the jury epitomizes the common sense of the Canadian people. The main instruction a jury is given at the beginning of a trial, for those who practised criminal law, is as follows: the accused "hath put himself upon his country, which country ye are." From there on the jury has the exclusive right to decide whether an accused is innocent or guilty.

In that respect, it will be recalled that the Criminal Lawyers Association of Ontario stated that the Supreme Court had destroyed a basic principle of democracy by maintaining the precedence of a verdict brought down by a jury. In return, that association wants a new federal law to prevent a court of appeal from reversing a decision made by a jury.

At the time of the Morgentaler verdict, the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion made a public survey to determine whether or not a decision by a court of appeal could reverse the verdict of a jury, without a new trial taking place. The results at the national level showed that 48 per cent are against the precedence of a decision by the court of appeal over the verdict of a jury without there being a new trial. That is why the minister, Otto Lang, had to face strong opposition before accepting the amendment now being considered.

Of course, there is a matter of faith in all that. For those who practised criminal law for several years, it could be said that in 90 per cent of all cases the jury served society well; the jury often helped the courts to clarify very complex facts; it also helped the court to bring about, in so far as facts are concerned, a consensus of twelve people who are there to listen, examine and decide on the facts.

It was said during the debate that the jury had no right to take any position on legal issues. It has long been recognized as a sound principle. The jury is master of the facts and the facts only. Even if it happens that the judge, after both parties have presented their case, gives instructions to the jury, he always adds this: "You cannot take my comments into account, but I have to inform you on the legal debate which took place between the Crown and counsel for the defence." He tells them: "You are the only masters of the facts". The judge has the right to give his own appreciation of the facts. He can tell them: "That witness swore such a thing before you but I do not believe him. But you can believe him if you decide that his credibility is sound." And I say again that the judge can give the jury his own appreciation of the facts. But the jury is definitely not required to accept the analysis of the facts made by the judge in his address to the jury. In short, again I repeat that the jury is the sole master of the facts. The debate in this place becomes very interesting because the Opposition leader raised a new law issue. I wonder whether we should not, in the light of his speech, consider more carefully the cases he sustained before the Senate. Here is his thesis in a few words. The Opposition leader did not deny, nor will other senators do so either, that the jury is master of the facts. But what he wanted to demonstrate was that in this particular case, the Morgentaler case, the evidence concerning abortion has been recognized by the accused. It was maintained that as the facts had been recognized, the jury had ruled on a legal issue, that is on section 45 of the Criminal Code, which in certain circumstances allows abortion.

Now, to my mind, section 45 of the Criminal Code deals precisely not only with a matter of law but also with the interpretation of the facts. In such circumstances, section 45 stipulates that an abortion can be performed by a medical doctor and can be considered legal. I feel that this important matter, which the Leader of the Opposition brought up, should be studied by the competent committee where experts in criminal law could tell us whether, in fact, when the accused has recognized the facts as true, the jury being master of the facts, is not obliged to give a verdict of guilty.

Does a jury have the right to interpret the facts in terms of the law, under section 45 of the Criminal Code, with regard to abortion? If so, can the court of appeal substitute itself to the jury and say: "You were wrong; your decision must be overruled."

First of all, I would think that all honourable senators who are lawyers are aware that only on extremely rare occasion has a court of appeal overthrown the decision of a jury on the facts, since all superior courts, courts of appeal, have always recognized, as I said, that the jury is master of the facts. Although we cannot deal here in depth with the thesis submitted by the Leader of the Opposition, I trust we can do so in committee. Though we may not be ready to move an amendment to meet the concerns of the Leader of the Opposition as well as recognize the seriousness of his documents when he made his speech last week, it might be well for us to accept the amendment as it now stands.

I do not see that a court of appeal should intervene again and again against the decision of a jury. If the court of appeal has any doubt about the decision of the jury, it should at least, as provided in the amendment, order a new trial. It should not say the jury was wrong and we acquit or condemn the defendant who has lodged an appeal. I think it would be wise to accept the amendment, but I repeat that it is extremely important to listen to experts in committee, so that they would justify and describe how to evaluate a case such as the Leader of the Opposition has submitted to us. For instance, if the accused himself admits the charges against him before the jury, should the court of appeal intervene when the jury took the decision on both legal and factual issues? Having said that, I suggest it would be extremely important to refer Bill C-71 to the committee, at least to examine this question.

I also have in mind the provision of this bill dealing with impaired driving and the breathalyzer.

It is ever more obvious that we have deplorable fatal accidents in this country. From experience of cases I had before the courts, fatal accidents rarely occur where fewer than at least 75 per cent of the people were under the influence. That it is a well-known fact admitted by all those who plead before the courts and also by criminologists who have studied the subject. The law is made more severe. At the present time, for a first offence the judge usually imposes a $100 or $150 fine. I am talking about my district. When someone needs a driver's licence to earn his living, it is not suspended. But in the province of Quebec, for a first offence, if you plead guilty or if you are convicted, you lose 9 points automatically out of a maximum of 12. And if you lose your 12 points, your licence is automatically suspended by the Quebec Transport Department for a three-month period. I think it is an excellent system and it has produced results in our province. At the present time, under the new legislation, for a first offence the maximum fine is $2,000 and the minimum fine $50, and also a jail sentence, or both.

Obviously, this is more severe than the former legislation, under which, for a second offence provided it has not been committed in the same year, or over a two or three-year period, the judges are still quite lenient in Quebec, but not in the other provinces. In Quebec, a fine will still be imposed but the accused person's licence will not be suspended if he can prove that he needs it to earn a living. The new provision is excessively severe. For a second offence, no fine is provided but imprisonment for 14 days. Fourteen days' imprisonment strikes me as extremely severe. And it is so, to my mind, because the government does collect fabulous amounts from the sale of liquor. If you look at the public accounts you will note how considerable those amounts are.

But, on the other hand, the government does not provide any organizations for detecting alcoholism. Our rehabilitation groups for alcoholics are extremely few in number in Canada. Some people say, on the one hand, that those who are caught driving while impaired due to alcohol should be punished but, on the other hand, no alcoholism detecting services are set up, nor are there any campaigns to educate the public. In many cases, police officers enjoy chasing after people who have had two glasses of gin. I am aware of this because very often I have clients who have to appear in court. There are all kinds of persecutions going on. I think police officers should have a code of ethics of their own. The new legislation being considered provides that if a police officer has reason to believe that a person is driving while impaired, he must stop him and if he thinks that this driver is so impaired he orders him to report to the police station and submit to the breathalyzer test.

On the other hand, our policemen should not take upon themselves to chase after people who have had two or three glasses of gin. We know what the consequences are for people who are convicted: their driving licence is withdrawn and they often lose their jobs, and their families are also considerably affected by the resulting loss of income.

So, I say that the federal government, in cooperation with provincial governments, should set up detection centres for alcoholics. It would be more positive than the negative and strict provisions contained in Bill C-71. We should also provide grants to open rehabilitation homes for those who suffer from the disease called alcoholism. It is a disease like any other and some alcoholics could easily be cured. I think that we should try to be more positive in that field.

There is also another provision concerning rape. It is perhaps the crime most frequently committed in the last few years. And it is the crime for which denunciations are the least frequent for the reasons you all know, because the girl who is victim of that crime is reluctant to tell her story in public. I would say that less than 5 per cent of rape cases come before the courts. In the past, counsel for the defence could scrutinize the past of the rape victim. He could do so, because the law required proof that the victim was of good moral character. Such is the term used in the Criminal Code. Counsel for the defence then pursued his investigation to test and, of course, reduce the witness' credibility, to try to find out if the girl had not at other times had sexual intercourse with others before filing a complaint.

I think that the law will now encourage rape victims to more readily come forward. It is provided, of course, that proceedings will be conducted in camera, where public morality so requires, but mainly that counsel intending to attack the complainant's past morality must give notice to the Crown and to the complainant of his intentions to examine the girl on that particular aspect. Such evidence will be given before the judge, without the presence of the jury. The judge will decide whether the evidence adduced or tentatively adduced by counsel for the defendant is relevant. If the evidence is not relevant, the judge will not allow it to be given to the jury for its consumption.

In the whole, I submit that the provisions outlined are interesting in nature.

I would also have wished that legislation be brought to bear on other crimes that I would call modern, namely, kidnapping and extortion. Throughout Canada, and especially in Quebec, honourable senators are aware that there is now a tendency to kidnap the families of bank managers and ask for money the next day. I believe it is a crime that cannot be defined; it is aimed at bank managers' families, who are kept prisoners for days and days in order to extort money. I regret that no reference is made in Bill C-71 to such horrendous crimes, which I call modern crimes. Gangsters thought of doing that. They said the best way to get money these days is to kidnap the family, the wife and children of a bank manager, in order to extort thousands of dollars, hundreds and thousands of dollars from the bank. I believe that amendments should have been suggested to make the provisions of the Criminal Code more severe in cases of kidnapping for extortion.

I would also like the government to consider setting up a royal commission of inquiry on organized crime. A motion has already been moved in the Senate by Senator McGrand relating to organized crime, but I believe that Dr. McGrand restricted the elements of the problem because he wanted to try to discover why some people start on the road to crime from infancy. I believe we should study all aspects of organized crime, as Quebec is doing at the present time.

This has been useful to the population. In Quebec, people are now more knowledgeable. They are more aware of the underhand practices of organized crime. Honest citizens are now aware of the way that these people operate. I believe that this is useful not only to the people but also to the police forces in Quebec.

I would also like other commissions to be established to study violence and its effects on children, and the consequences of pornographic material in shops as well as in shows; to inquire why there is so much violence on television, since our children watch it and then try to imitate what they have seen. I believe that those are extremely important points that the government should look into.

[English]

In connection with these provisions, I wish to draw the attention of honourable senators to a book written by two Canadians, Dr. Louis M. Bloomfield, Q.C., of Montreal and Dr. Gerald F. Fitzgerald, of Ottawa. The book is entitled Crimes Against Internationally Protected Persons: Prevention and Punishment—An Analysis of the UN Convention.

If honourable senators read this book which was written by those two prominent lawyers, one from Montreal and one from Ottawa, they will know more about organized crime, not necessarily in Canada but in the international field.

[Translation]

I think we should, as I said earlier, refer this bill to committee to consider the aspect that I described, and without giving my consent, of course, we on this side of the Senate support the principle of this bill. We would like the questions put by the Leader of the Opposition to receive adequate answers from experts in criminal law from the Department of Justice.

[English]

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE MEETING "IN CAMERA"—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege with respect to a statement made by Senator Goldenberg.

A meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was called for this afternoon. We were delayed by the weather in Toronto this morning, and finally a group of us motored here, arriving at 5 o'clock and too late for the meeting. In any event, I understand the meeting did not take place.

When I had an opportunity to look more closely at the notice I discerned that it indicated the meeting was to be held in camera. Whether the committee met or not, the meeting was to be held in camera.

I am not only perplexed but astounded to learn that such a meeting would be held in camera. I have been present at all the committee meetings, and I know of no resolution authorizing the chairman to do this. This is not a matter that lends itself to consideration and decision behind closed doors. I think he owes us an explanation.

Senator Flynn: You are the only one who needs an explanation.

Senator Croll: Does everyone else understand it?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Croll: As to why the meeting should be behind closed doors?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Asselin: We are drafting a report.

Senator Croll: It says here, "Consideration of proposals..."

Senator Asselin: We are drafting a report.

Senator Goldenberg: That is exactly what it is, honourable senator. Mine was not my sole responsibility for this decision. We held a meeting. There was a quorum of the steering committee, and it was unanimously agreed last week that the meetings be held in camera because what we are actually doing is arriving at our decision.

Senator Croll knows perhaps better than any other senator that when a committee has finished its public hearings, and sits to consider its conclusions, it sits in camera and not in public.

Senator Asselin: Hear, hear.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, the very fact that the steering committee decides on something is not in itself final. The matter has to go to the whole committee for decision. If the whole committee endorses it, then that is another matter. Until then, an undertaking of this nature is highly improper.

Senator Flynn: Senator Croll could have raised that point of order when the committee met this afternoon, if indeed it had a quorum. He can still do that. However, making a fuss in the Senate about that point is entirely irrelevant.

Senator Croll: When a committee meeting is held in camera, the committee deliberately meets without a reporter and therefore nothing is reported. I want it reported, and that is why I have raised the matter here. I intend to raise it time and again until it is placed out in the open so everyone can hear and see decisions being made.

If this is the beginning, then I serve notice now that none of this committee's deliberations will be behind closed doors. I serve notice so that you will know that whatever is said and whatever is done will be said and done openly.

Senator Flynn: Of course, everyone knows that anyone attending the meetings of this committee on conflict of interest must declare his interest before coming to a conclusion. Even Senator Croll should do that.

Senator Croll: I shall be delighted. My interest is to see that justice is done to the Senate.

Senator Flynn: It is just a fuss.

Senator Goldenberg: If Senator Croll had been at the meeting today he would have seen that there was a reporter present.

Senator Asselin: Hear, hear.

Senator Croll: Most unusual, because that is the first time. There will be one there tomorrow, and that is okay with me.

Senator Flynn: I hope the press is here to hear you.

Senator Croll: If they are not, they will hear about it.

Senator Flynn: That is your only point?

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, that is absolutely correct. He is right when he says it is time we be heard. Not a word has come out on this because it has been kept kind of quiet. It is time it was out in the open, and it will be.

Senator Flynn: You only rise on points which make the Senate appear rather shady. When we are doing something of importance, you do not care.

Senator Croll: I hope you do this importantly.
The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 18, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of operations under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, Chapter M-16, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Order in Council P.C 1976-187, dated February 3, 1976, amending Part II of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of the said Act, Chapter H-3, R.S.C., 1970.

THE SENATE

REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES— QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I have one question, or perhaps two—a curious way of putting it, but the reason will become apparent in a moment—for the Leader of the Government. The first question is: Has a senator been appointed for the Northwest Territories? I may have missed something.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, to the best of my knowledge there has been no appointment to the senatorial seat for the Northwest Territories as yet, although I understand consideration is being given to that appointment.

Senator Forsey: That leads me to my second question. Can the Leader of the Government give us any idea when we may expect to hear of this appointment? It is now a pretty long time since provision was made for this appointment. An appointment was made for the Yukon, fairly early incidentally, and we all regret very much the prolonged absence of the honourable senator from the Yukon. I hope the government will soon get around to appointing a senator for the Northwest Territories, because I think it is a very important matter.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator has raised an important question. I know that all senators are looking forward to the day when a representative from the Northwest Territories takes his or her place in this chamber. As the honourable senator is aware, appointments to the Senate—a process which takes some time—are always made very carefully in order to ensure that people able to contribute to the public life of Canada serve in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: I suppose that reply applies also to the ten or twelve other vacancies that presently exist.

Senator Forsey: This merely compounds the sin of the government in taking so long to make the appointments.

Senator Perrault: I hope the vacancies which exist in the Senate can be filled in the near future. However, as I just said, very careful consideration is given to this process.

Senator Forsey: Yes, you have to be very careful not to let in a Tory by mistake.

Senator Flynn: It probably was in your case.

Senator Langlois: Would that be a mistake?

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for the second reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Langlois speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

● (1410)

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, the Senate is indebted to Senator Flynn and Senator Asselin for their very worthwhile contributions to the debate on second reading of this bill. I say this in all sincerity even though I do not agree with some of their points of view. However, their views should be completely studied by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which I intend to move that this bill be referred if it receives second reading.

I do not know who wrote that very old saying, "Every story has three sides—yours, mine, and the facts." I wish to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the story behind the Morgentaler amendment has more than three sides to it—his, mine, those of the judge and jury of the trial court, those of the judges of the Appeal Court of Quebec, those of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada and, of course, the facts of the case.

I deem it impossible, therefore, to comment on these facts without infringing upon the rule that this matter should not become the subject of a debate at this time because it is presently sub judice. I hasten to add that my honourable friend in his address made that remark in a different way, but to the same effect. My friend took the position that although the proposed amendment is not altogether wrong, it might be going in the wrong direction.

If I understood his remarks correctly, he expressed the view that it is time to have an in-depth study of the jury system in this country. As I said, I hope that his remarks will be studied carefully by our committee, while trying to observe this long-standing rule of not debating in Parliament a matter which is sub judice.

This afternoon I shall confine my remarks to brief references to the notes of the learned judges of the Supreme Court, without commenting on same. First, I refer honourable senators to page 4 of the notes of Mr. Justice Pigeon. I should mention that I am referring to the original text of the judgment, and not to the printed report, because the page numbers might differ. At page 4 he said:

Dealing first with the defences of necessity and of section 45, it must be noted that while the five judges who heard the case in appeal—

Meaning the Court of Appeal of Quebec.

—were all of the view that these were not available to the accused, their reasons for so deciding were not identical, especially with respect to section 45.

Concerning the defence of necessity, Mr. Justice Pigeon, after having quoted Kenny's opinion on which Mr. Justice Casey relied, added the following remarks at page 5:

The views expressed by the other judges were not significantly different on this question. As I read them they were all of the view that there was no evidence of the urgent necessity which, as the Crown conceded may, in very exceptional circumstances, justify a violation of the criminal law, this being a common law defence preserved by section 7.3 of the Criminal Code.

Then on page 6 he added:

Concerning section 45, three of the judges who sat on the case in appeal were of the view that this provision was not available as a defence to a charge under section 251.1, while the other two, namely, Casey and Rinfret J.J.A., appear to hold only that it was not available in the circumstance of the present case.

Also on page 6:

I am therefore of the opinion that the court of appeal was correct in holding that the trial judge erred in putting the defence of necessity before the jury as there was no evidence to support it.

On page 9 the same learned judge said:

Because the order of the Court of Appeal in this case appears to be without precedent, a review of the relevant legislative history is desirable.

Finally, referring to the power of the court of appeal to enter a verdict of guilty, at page 19 Mr. Justice Pigeon wrote:

Needless to say that this is obviously a power to be used with great circumspection.

This same view was expressed later on in the dissenting opinion of the Chief Justice.

I now pass to the notes of the Honourable the Chief Justice of Canada. At page 1 of his notes, he said:

This appeal, which is before this court as of right under section 618(2) of the Criminal Code, presents the highly unusual, if not the singularly exceptional, situation of an appellate court itself entering a conviction after setting aside a jury verdict of acquittal.

Later on the same page:

That verdict was set aside and a conviction was entered by the Quebec Court of Appeal which found it unnecessary to send the case back for a new trial.

The five judges who constituted the court—

Referring again to the Quebec Court of Appeal.

—unanimous in result but not in their reasons, concentrated on the two defences that the trial judge had left to the jury, a defence under section 45 of the Criminal Code and the common law defence of necessity preserved by section 7(3) of the Criminal Code.

I could go on citing similar comments and reservations expressed by the honourable judges of the Supreme Court, but I feel that those I have cited so far are sufficient to justify the amendment which is being proposed by the Minister of Justice in the present bill.

This amendment purports to clarify the situation, setting out in the clearest terms possible the power of our courts of appeal to deal with an acquittal verdict in similar circumstances. As an additional reason in support of the proposed amendment, I believe it can be said that the jury, having been misdirected by the trial judge and the verdict having been rendered as a result of this erroneous direction, there was in this particular case no proper judicial decision rendered. This position is enhanced by the fact that the court of appeal found that the jury was directed to give consideration to the defence of necessity, and the defence under section 45 of the Criminal Code, when the evidence was clearly insufficient to support such defences. In these circumstances it would seem to me that ordering a new trial with directions to the trial judge would have been more appropriate in this case.

Finally, I am of the opinion, and I assume that my honourable colleagues agree with me, that if any modification is to be made to the application of our jury system, the only place where such a modification can be brought about is in this Parliament, and in this Parliament alone. All this is said, as I observed, with due deference to the opinions expressed by the Leader of the Opposition, expressing again the hope that his views will be thoroughly considered, as I am sure they will, by the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Before I pass to the remarks of Senator Asselin, I should like to add another comment on the speech of the Leader of the Opposition in this debate, where he quoted the remarks of Mr. M. L. N. Somerville, the Immediate Past President of the Canadian Bar Association. At page 1743 of Debates of the Senate for February 11, Senator Flynn quoted Mr. Somerville as follows:

It is a perfectly tenable position that the only remedy available to the Crown from an improper acquittal by a jury should be a new trial.

To my mind, this is Mr. Somerville's basic thought. He went on to criticize those of the opposing view who took advantage of this case, which has some public appeal, I grant you, to mount what he called "a furious propaganda war" against our court system. I agree with this fully. But, the basic thought expressed by Mr. Somerville is, I repeat:

It is a perfectly tenable position that the only remedy available to the Crown from an improper acquittal by a jury should be a new trial.

Senator Flynn: He said "may be."

Senator Langlois: To my mind this supports the view I am expressing at the present time. However, the contrary view is also very important, and I again voice the hope that it will be thoroughly discussed by our committee.

I now pass on to the views expressed by my good friend Senator Asselin, and since he spoke in French I shall make my comments in that language.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin expressed ideas which are not always the same as those of his leader, and I think the Leader of the Opposition had anticipated that position and even tried, by anticipation, to explain it by saying that his colleague Senator Asselin was more of a defence lawyer and that his sentiments necessarily led him to sympathize with the accused.

Senator Asselin: No.

Senator Langlois: It is a justifiable and very humane position, I think, and I do not believe my friend Senator Asselin should be offended by this remark.

Senator Bourget: It is not that bad.

Senator Langlois: It is not bad at all, as Senator Bourget says. It is only a humane attitude. However, I recall that in his remarks, Senator Asselin first emphasized the transfer of the burden of proof in the case of bail and if I understood him correctly, he supports the amendment which transfers, in certain specific cases well defined in the legislation, the burden of proof from the Crown to the accused when the accused wants to be released before trial. I believe that, generally, our honourable colleagues of the Senate accept this amendment, as it was accepted in the other place.

He also contradicted the Leader of the Opposition when he quoted, as reported on page 1768, I believe, of Senate Hansard for February 17, the following statistics, that is, the result of a public inquiry made by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion, and I quote:

At the time of the Morgentaler verdict, the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion made a public survey to determine whether or not a decision by a court of appeal could reverse the verdict of a jury, without a new trial taking place. The results at the national level showed that 88 per cent are against the precedence of a decision of the court of appeal . . .

Senator Asselin: Forty-eight.

Senator Langlois: Yes, pardon me, 48 per cent.

. . . are against the precedence of a decision of the court of appeal over the verdict of a jury without there being a new trial. That is why the minister, Otto Lang, had to face strong opposition before accepting the amendment now being considered.

This is in glaring contradiction, and I trust the honourable Leader of the Opposition will not hold it against me for pointing it out to him, with what he said on page 1745 of Hansard for February 11 when he explained the position adopted by the former Minister of Justice, the Honourable Otto Lang on introducing this bill in Parliament. I quote:

● (1430)

[English]

In this particular case what I regret is that the decision of the government, or of the Minister of Justice, was made only because of pressure brought to bear by a certain element of public opinion—and a relatively small element at that, I suggest.

Senator Flynn: But I was speaking only of those who knew something about it.

Senator Langlois: But Senator Asselin also knew something about it.

Senator Flynn: I know, but he quoted the popular opinion.

Senator Langlois: It was a public opinion survey that he quoted.

Senator Flynn: Yes, I know.

Senator Langlois: But my honourable friend will not contend that 48 per cent is a small group.

Senator Flynn: No, I would not say that, but I was speaking of those who knew something about it.

Senator Walker: The honourable senators speak so well in English, why don't they continue in English? They are much more fluent.

Senator Langlois: I thank you, but I am replying to my honourable friend, and out of courtesy to him I am speaking in the language he used in his presentation.

Senator Asselin: And Senator Walker's French is very good.

Senator Langlois: And it will be good practice for you, Senator Walker.

Senator Walker: This is free translation.

Senator Langlois: Yes, it is free translation.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin also added, and I fully endorse his position, that the jury system served Canadian society well. I agree with Senator Flynn, and I think he will completely agree with me when I say that if the jury can make mistakes from time to time, judges can also make mistakes, because the saying errare humanum est does not apply only to the jury. It applies to any human being. It is absolutely normal, and it is in our nature to make mistakes now and again.

But I think I can add, with the support of Senator Asselin, that in general the jury system serves our Canadian society well. Moreover, when discussing this bill with Senator Asselin before its introduction in this house—and I hope he will allow me to make this reference—he said to me that the jury system also made a significant contribution to the administration of justice in Canada.

I know that such is the opinion of a counsel for the defence.

Senator Flynn: I agree.

Senator Langlois: Well, my honourable friend said the other day that he had had only one bad experience before a jury, and, as far as I am concerned, I never had any in my life. I think my opinion is independent and not based on others' experience, which is not all that bad.

The other day—and I open with a parenthesis here—I was very surprised to see that my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, took a dislike to me—

Senator Flynn: Never.

Senator Langlois: —for using a typical expression from Quebec because my position was based on the opinion of the former Prime Minister of Canada. This is the first time I agreed with this political leader and I do not know why I should be blamed because I agreed with him on this occasion. I wonder what crime I committed by doing so, but in any event—

Senator Flynn: I always worry when both of you agree.

● (1440)

Senator Langlois: Maybe, but you have agreed with him more often than I have.

Senator Flynn: No, no, that is not what I am talking about.

Senator Langlois: Anyway, as regards the remarks of Senator Asselin, he has outlined—and I agree with him, as I said earlier—that the argument based on new law as raised by Senator Flynn is worthy of consideration. I do not think it necessary to go over that aspect again. I am in total agreement with him on this point.

As regards provisions concerning impaired driving and the breathalyzer, I was surprised by Senator Asselin's comments, though I know that this debate lent itself to such a departure from the subject, when he suggested a rehabilitation and detection system. I agree with him in this regard but I do not think such an argument should be made during the debate on a bill that falls within the federal jurisdiction, a bill concerning the Criminal Code, whereas detection, rehabilitation and treatment of alcoholics are rather matters of provincial jurisdiction, more precisely the Department of Health. Yet he may have been justified in making such a comment, since I myself, when explaining this bill, as recorded on page 1731 of Hansard for February 5, made the following suggestion as regards the provisions of the bill, and I quote:

While the amendments provide for heavier maximum fines and longer maximum periods of detention than previously, there is also provision for the judge to grant a conditional discharge to allow the accused driver to undergo treatment and undertake a program for alcohol abuse.

Perhaps this remark led Senator Asselin to make such statements and hence to depart from the subject matter when he dealt with the rehabilitation and treatment of alcoholics. In my view, the treatment and rehabilitation of alcoholics is necessary since alcohol abuse is a disease of our times, and I think all our efforts must tend toward a very elaborate treatment of this disease, this condition of our fellow citizens. I would add, however, that if there is one way to reduce often fatal traffic accidents, that way is to apply the principle on which the proposed amendment is based. In other words, to remove alcoholics from the highways before they can get involved in accidents, or give them the benefit of release through conditional discharge so they may get treated or, better still, get cured from their sickness.

I would even say that a known alcoholic should never hold a driving licence. This would protect not only the general public, but the alcoholic himself against his own disability.

I would now comment on the remarks made by Senator Asselin on the clauses concerning rape. As I understood him, Senator Asselin favours in camera proceedings, and the limitation of evidence on the complainant's sexual antecedents, in order to protect rape victims. I believe the proposed provisions are absolutely perfect. I believe they are introduced to remedy a situation where the complainant is victimized a second time by such public exposure, by exposing aspects of her own private intimacy often having but very indirect connection with the crime before the court.

Finally, I come back to the other crimes mentioned by Senator Asselin: kidnapping, extortion, organized crime. I expected he would refer directly—he did so indirectly—to the work done by the Organized Crime Inquiry Commission in our province. I believe he referred to it at least indirectly. You may correct me if you did so more directly, but I am under the impression that you did refer to it. However, I believe that you avoided talking about wiretapping. I would especially like to refer to the report submitted a few days ago. This report comes from the Solicitor General and, according to my interpretation, it aims at establishing that the restrictions on wiretapping which were introduced a year and a half or two years ago interfere with the detection and the pursuit of criminals. I hope that the Canadian Parliament will come back on its decision and follow the suggestions made by the Senate at that time. I believe that if the amendment of the Senate had been passed at that time, the report of the Solicitor General would now be different from that which was submitted a few days ago.

Now, I would like to speak to Senator Asselin's last comment about internationally protected persons. The senator seemed to agree with the purpose of the bill. He quoted—I believe he was not in the house when I moved second reading of the bill—he quoted very closely what I said on the subject, that the new provision is aimed at permitting Canada to meet its international commitments under the Geneva Convention, and that this amendment was amply justified by the events which have occurred throughout the world where diplomats have been attacked, assassinated or kidnapped in various countries. I believe that if we want to continue enjoying the benefits of a diplomatic corps which does its job in the various countries of the world with the necessary serenity and freedom of action, its members must be protected adequately, and the bill aims at giving this protection.

Finally, and I will conclude with these words so that my honourable friends do not lose their patience, I must say that I agree with the opinion voiced, I believe by Senator Flynn and by Senator Asselin, namely, that these omnibus bills are difficult to deal with on second reading. Their provisions are so different and often so heterogeneous that it is difficult to have a continuous line of thought on the subject. We are asked to go from one aspect of the implementation of our legal system to another, without any link in between.

I believe that it is in the committee phase of the bill that a direct and real study of these provisions should be made and this is why, when I moved the bill on second reading, I immediately stated at the end of my remarks that I intended to introduce a motion after the debate that the bill be referred to the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for further study. I hope we will have the necessary expertise in criminal law to be able to grasp a better understanding of the full meaning behind each provision.

Senator Flynn: My honourable friend seems to find it easy to underline those small contradictions which exist between my speech and Senator Asselin's, but he had no one on his side either to contradict him or agree with him.

Senator Langlois: I understand that my honourable friend should envy the situation in which I find myself today but this has not always been the case. I have already known different situations but I prefer, as he himself probably does, that the comments which would contradict my statements be made by people who sit in front of me rather than behind me.

Senator Asselin: On this side of the house we feel free to express our views.

Senator Langlois: So do we on this side of the house, for that matter.

Senator Asselin: That is not so sure.

● (1500)

[English]

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a question of the Deputy Leader of the Government? In the course of his remarks in the French language he said he was in favour of the suspension of the driver's licence of a convicted alcoholic—at least, that was the impression I got.

Senator Langlois: I did not use the word "convicted." I was referring to a known alcoholic.

Senator Flynn: It is not a crime to be an alcoholic.

Senator Rowe: I am wondering whether what he had in mind was a permanent suspension. We are all agreed, of course, that while a man is suffering from alcoholism he should not be driving a motor vehicle. However, somewhere along the line he may become a non-alcoholic, at which point he surely ought to be permitted to hold a driver's licence. Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Government would care to elaborate on what he said.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, what I said in French was to the effect that in the spirit of the amendment before us, and as a preventive measure, it would be much better to remove the alcoholic from the road and give him a chance to rehabilitate himself before he causes serious injury.

I felt that we might consider going somewhat beyond that by refusing to issue a driver's licence to a known alcoholic. That would be a provincial matter, of course, and would be one method by which we could remove the alcoholic from the road and prevent fatal accidents.

Senator Rowe: But somewhere along the line, surely it should be possible for the individual to redeem himself. Surely there should be a period of rehabilitation following which he would qualify for a licence.

Senator Langlois: Yes. In the course of my remarks, I mentioned a rehabilitation scheme. If the alcoholic is rehabilitated, he would then be issued a licence. If he proves that he has joined the AA and that he can stick to his decision not to drink, then he would again be issued a driver's licence.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, before the motion for adjournment is put, I should like to remind you that the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet when the Senate rises.

Senator Asselin: Both at the same time?

Senator Langlois: Yes.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 19, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977, together with copies of a news release containing a statement by the President of the Treasury Board on the said Estimates.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Senator Perrault presented Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege. My honourable colleague, Senator Graham, brought to my attention a few moments ago a matter that is not of great importance but one which I cannot let stand. It concerns an item in the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, February 18, 1976. The heading is: "Senators angry over the use of library in ad" and the item ends with "Senator F. W. Rowe, (PC—Nova Scotia)".

Senator Walker: You don't object to "P.C.", do you?

Senator Rowe: It reminds me of what President Roosevelt had to say about Hitler when Hitler was talking about his "New Order." Roosevelt said that it was not "new" and it was not "order."

I take it that "PC" is short for Progressive Conservative.

An Hon. Senator: Privy Council.

Senator Rowe: It could be the Privy Council.

Senator Perrault: They are mutually incompatible.

Senator Rowe: I have the utmost respect for the neighbouring province of Nova Scotia, of which Senator Graham and others here are distinguished representatives, but I must point out the historical fact that I have been living in Newfoundland for over 300 years.

Senator Walker: He is certainly getting old, isn't he?

Senator Rowe: I have no intention of removing my domicile in that island. In a little more serious vein, however, the article goes on to say:

Senator F. W. Rowe, (PC—Nova Scotia) said he has received Christmas cards decorated with a picture of the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings to which he objected.

• (1410)

I must point out again, as I am sure honourable senators will recall, that I did not object to a picture of the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings. I merely suggested that if commercial interests intend to depict the Centre Block, or any other part of the Parliament Buildings, they should at least make accurate representations. The particular painting in question is inaccurate, in that it shows a complete storey which is not on the building at all. That is what I objected to in the interests of accuracy.

It is not an important matter, but still I think for the record I should point out just what the facts are. I am not a P.C.; I am not from Nova Scotia; and I do not object to the use of pictures of the Parliament Buildings on Christmas cards, providing such use is legal. I do not know what the legalities are.

Senator Perrault: Otherwise the story was accurate!

Senator Flynn: So far as the label "P.C." is concerned, I think the question of privilege should have been raised on our side.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macdonald: The honourable senator should feel complimented that he is shown as coming from Nova Scotia.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

THE ESTIMATES

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE AND REPORT

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1977, in advance of bills based upon the said estimates reaching the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Exclusively based?

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, February 24, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to give you a brief summary of the work schedule for next week. I shall deal first with the meetings of committees.

On Tuesday the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 2.30 p.m. to continue its study of Canadian relations with the United States. Also at 2.30 p.m. on the same day the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet to commence its examination of Bill C-71, the Criminal Law Amendment Act.

On Wednesday the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has arranged a meeting for 9.30 a.m. on Canadian textile problems. On the same morning the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet at 10 a.m. I have been advised that when the Senate rises on Wednesday afternoon the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet again to consider Bill C-71 if it has not disposed of that matter on Tuesday afternoon.

On Thursday at 9.30 a.m. the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will have another meeting on Canadian relations with the United States, and the Special Senate Committee on the Clerestory of the Senate will meet at 10 a.m.

In the Senate we will continue the second reading debate on Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act, and proceed with Bill S-32, which was introduced today. In addition to these two bills initiated here, we can expect to have Bill C-58, the Time and Reader's Digest bill, by Tuesday next.

Senator Flynn: Again, that is wishful thinking.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES— SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Senator Rile: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to the question Senator Forsey asked of the Leader of the Government yesterday. I should like to ask the leader if there is any substance to the rumour that the government is considering advertising in the media in order to fill the long-standing vacancies in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: No such action is contemplated, honourable senators.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY OF CANADA BEST WISHES FOR SUCCESSFUL LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate? In view of the events of the coming weekend, and in view of the leader's well-known objectivity, does he not wish to tell the Senate that he hopes that the Progressive Conservative convention will elect a man who can succeed the present Prime Minister in not more than two years?

Senator Perrault: It is said that all good things come to those who wait. Perhaps at some time in the future there will be a change in government in this land. The immediate need does not seem to be evident to most Canadians. I do take this opportunity, however, on behalf of the supporters of the government in this chamber, to wish the honourable senators here who serve so well in opposition every success with their very important convention. Our political system can only thrive on the healthy and vigorous operation of our political parties. This is an important convention, not just for our Progressive Conservative friends but for all Canadians, because it is most important that this great, historical party have the kind of leadership which can provide alternatives for the Canadian people.

Senator Bourget: You had better ask our leader to speak at your convention.

Senator Langlois: He would be a good candidate.

QUARANTINE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Fred A. McGrand moved the second reading of Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this amendment is to provide the legislative authority for prompt and appropriate action at Canadian ports of entry should it become necessary to prevent the importation into Canada of dangerous diseases in addition to the four infectious and contagious diseases named in the schedule of the present act.

Basically, what is going on is that under the existing act quarantine action may be applied only with respect to the four scheduled diseases, namely, cholera, yellow fever, smallpox and the plague. As you know, in recent times there have been many instances of diseases being reported, and a lot of attention given to them. We do not know if they are new, and they may in fact be very old, but at least they are being identified as dangerous diseases such as Lassa fever and Marburg virus disease. These are examples of diseases which are developing and being reported around the world, but, at present, should one of these diseases be detected at one of our ports of entry, Canada lacks the authority to do anything about them.

We lack this authority because we are a signatory without reservation to the International Health Regulations. These are the regular international health regulations of the World Health Organization. Under the existing law we can only isolate or detain someone if we suspect, or if we confirm, that they have one of those four diseases. Yet we know from world health intelligence that there are indeed these other exotic diseases, and in this age when 400 people can be moved in a day from virtually one corner of the globe to another, we are threadbare and vulnerable in law.

What this whole exercise is about is to get legislative authority for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to do whatever might be required if we are faced with the suspicion or confirmation of these other diseases. The minister will have some authority to take quarantine action. Essentially, then, the substantive amendments being proposed are limited to two clauses, clause 3 and clause 4.

There are six further amendments, the purpose of which is either to clarify the existing act or to make changes consequential to the substantive amendments.

Two major changes are being proposed. The first is to ensure a means within the provisions of the Quarantine Act whereby a quarantine officer at a port of entry may, in an emergency situation, and with the approval of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, order the detention of a person arriving in Canada whom that quarantine officer reasonably believes to be a carrier, or to have been recently in close proximity to a carrier, of a contagious or infectious disease not listed in the schedule to the act. Such unlisted diseases are referred to as "dangerous diseases," and are intentionally not listed in a separate schedule to the act in order to provide needed flexibility. This detention will be for a period of time not to exceed 14 days.

An important feature of the amendment is the reflection of the government's concern that the Canadian Bill of Rights be fully respected in any detention so ordered. Proposed subsection 8.1(6) makes it incumbent upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to justify, within 48 hours, the detention order to a judge of the superior court of the province in which the person is detained. In such instances, the judge will hear the case within one day and will be empowered to revoke, vary or confirm the detention order.

The second major change is to provide for detention in those cases where it is definitely determined by a quarantine officer, as opposed to merely being suspected by him, that a person arriving in Canada has a disease considered dangerous to public health. Detention in these circumstances would again require ministerial approval but would not necessitate judicial review. In these respects, the proposal differs from the existing legislation where, for the four scheduled infectious and contagious diseases, ministerial approval for detention in either circumstance is not required, and where there is no provision for judicial review. No change in these existing provisions is proposed.

At the present time an officer has the power to board any conveyance arriving in Canada from any place outside Canada, or departing from Canada for a place outside Canada, and inspect that conveyance and any goods or cargo found therein.

Clause 1 of the bill amends subsection 7(1) of the act. The amendment accomplishes three things. First, it clarifies that it is the quarantine officer who may find a conveyance infested or contaminated. Under the act, no particular person is specified as the responsible officer. The amendment identifies the quarantine officer as the official responsible for identifying and finding a conveyance—it might be an aircraft or a ship—infested or contaminated.

Secondly, the amendment extends the application of the section to other dangerous diseases. The present law extends only to the four scheduled diseases, and this amendment makes it applicable to other dangerous diseases against which protection is sought.

Thirdly, the amendment recognizes that problems are created by airborne bacteria or viruses as well as by infestation by vermin or insects. The present law does not recognize that problems can be caused by airborne bacteria or viruses.

The next clause deals with subsection 8(1), and is a technical correction only. It amends paragraph (d) by clarifying a quarantine officer's authority to request a medical examination of persons who have been in close contact with a person who arrives ill, is suspected of being a carrier of disease, or is noted to be infested with insects that may be carriers of an infectious or contagious disease.

Clause 3 adds section 8.1 to the act. The basic purpose of this amendment is to empower a quarantine officer in emergency situations to take certain action subject to the approval of the minister and, where such action involves detention of a person in excess of 48 hours, that action is subject to review by a superior court judge. This section alludes only to dangerous diseases, and not to infectious and contagious diseases as are referred to in the existing act. The quarantine officer, if he encounters evidence of a dangerous disease other than that which is scheduled, may, subject to the approval of the minister, detain that person. However, should this be intended for a period in excess of 48 hours, the minister is obliged to report that detention to a judge of the superior court in the province where the action is taking place, and that judge must within 24 hours hear the case and he—the judge—is empowered to confirm, vary, or revoke the detention order.

Under the present act it would be possible to have an Order in Council which includes Lassa fever, in addition to the four diseases already scheduled. Canada is a signatory to the International Health Regulations without reservation, and to add a disease which the World Health Organization is unprepared to have subject, universally, to regular quarantine control would be a breach of protocol. That is why it should be done only on an "as required" basis, as opposed to a continuing basis.

With respect to the amendments in clause 2(2), I refer honourable senators to the explanatory notes contained in the bill. The proposed subsection 8(2.1) would expand the list of places where a person may be detained, and the proposed subsection 8(2.2) would designate a medical officer of health by reference to area rather than by reference to name. The present subsection 8(2) reads:

● (1430)

Where

- (a) a person described in subsection (1) refuses to undergo the medical examination requested by a quarantine officer,
- (b) a quarantine officer suspects that a person described in subsection (1) who has undergone a medical examination requested by that quarantine officer may have an infectious or contagious disease,
- (c) a person arriving in Canada from a place outside Canada is unable to produce as required by the regulations evidence satisfactory to a quarantine officer of immunization to an infectious or contagious disease, or

(d) a quarantine officer believes on reasonable grounds that a person at a harbour, airport or port of entry into Canada has been in close proximity to a person described in subsection (1), the quarantine officer may

(e) detain that person

(i) in a quarantine station or a hospital, or

(ii) if he is a person arriving in Canada from a place outside Canada on a vessel, on that vessel for a period not exceeding the incubation period prescribed for that disease; or

(f) authorize that person to leave the quarantine station if

(i) he signs an undertaking in prescribed form that he will report to the medical officer of health named therein within a period fixed by the quarantine officer and stated therein, which period shall not be longer than the incubation period prescribed for that disease,

(ii) he submits to being vaccinated against that disease, or

(iii) he signs the undertaking described in subparagraph (i) and submits to being vaccinated against that disease, as in the opinion of the quarantine officer the circumstances require.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 24, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 24, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Honourable Jean-Paul Deschatelets, P.C., Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.
Prayers.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Daudlin had been substituted for that of Mr. Flynn on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Report of the Export Development Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on Radon levels at St. Mary's School, Port Hope, Ontario, issued by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and dated December 22, 1975.

Documents issued by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on February 19, 1976 entitled "Radioactive Waste Locations in Canada" and "Progress Report on Radioactive Waste Investigation in Port Hope, Ontario", with annex of Atomic Energy Control Board's memoranda attached to the latter.

Copies of Rules respecting appeals to the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal under the Anti-Inflation Act, made by the Chairman of the said Tribunal on February 19, 1976, pursuant to section 27(2) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE—SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET TABLED

Senator Laird, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the committee's report approving the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for the proposed expenditures of the said committee with respect to its examination and report upon the subject matter of Bill C-60, respecting bankruptcy and insolvency, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, authorized by the Senate on May 13, 1975.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS—SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET TABLED

Senator Laird, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the committee's report approving the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs with respect to its examination of Canadian relations with the United States, authorized by the Senate on November 6, 1974.

COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE—SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET TABLED

Senator Laird, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the committee's report approving the supplementary budget presented to it by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on National Finance for the proposed expenditures of the said committee with respect to its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it, authorized by the Senate on December 5, 1974.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Laird: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, to which was referred the subject matter of a motion containing proposed regulations entitled "Regulations of the Senate respecting attendance of senators at sittings of the Senate and deductions to be made from the sessional allowance."

The Clerk Assistant (Reading): The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, to which the subject matter of a motion containing proposed regulations entitled "Regulations of the Senate respecting attendance of senators at sittings of the Senate and deductions to be made from the sessional allowance," referred to the committee on May 21, 1975, reports that it has examined the said subject matter and now reports as follows—

An Hon. Senator: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Laird: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule—

Senator Grosart: Rule 78.

Senator Laird: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 78, I move, seconded by Senator Petten, that the report be taken into consideration now.

Senator Croll: Now?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Grosart: I understand that, in effect, Senator Laird has asked permission to move the adoption of the report notwithstanding rule 78.

Without going into the details, may I suggest that before leave is granted the full text of the report be read by either the Clerk or the Clerk Assistant. Otherwise, we would be quite in the dark with respect to granting leave to adopt the report, or even to discussing the adoption of the report, at this particular time without knowing its substance.

● (2010)

Senator Laird: By the way, honourable senators, I point out that copies of the report are before you. Perhaps you would like to take one minute to see what is in it, and then you can decide whether you will give me leave.

Senator Grosart: My point, honourable senators, is that somebody said, "Dispense," and consequently the substance of this very important report, which is quite short, was not read to the Senate. I suggest it should be read before we discuss the request for leave.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I need more than one minute to digest this report, so I suggest that Senator Laird put it over until tomorrow, anyway.

Senator Laird: Honourable senators, I am in your hands. If you prefer that, and if you are not in the mood to give leave, that is quite all right with me.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Unless there is unanimous consent, consideration of this report will go over to the next sitting.

Senator Laird: I so move.

Senator Grosart: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Did the Honourable Senator Laird move that "this report be considered at the next sitting of the Senate"?

Senator Laird: I move that consideration of this report be deferred until the next sitting.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I think not, because under our rules I suggest that is not necessary. Under rule 78, a report presented to the Senate shall be received without debate, and a report which by its own terms is for the information only of the Senate—which may or may not apply to this case—shall be laid on the table but may on motion be placed on the Orders of the Day for future consideration. I therefore suggest that there should be a motion that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for future consideration.

Senator Langlois: The motion was made.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it your wish, Honourable Senator Laird, to move such a motion?

Senator Laird: I did make that motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Laird, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that this report be placed upon the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

HONEY BEAR BREWING CORPORATION LIMITED—REFUND OF FEES

Senator Haig, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the parliamentary fees paid on a proposed bill respecting Honey Bear Brewing Corporation Limited, of the City of Winnipeg, in the Province of Manitoba, be refunded to the petitioners, less the sum of $65 for printing and translation costs.

He said: Before this motion is put, honourable senators, I should like to offer an explanation.

The fee paid in this matter amounted to $650, made up of a parliamentary fee of $200, and $450 for the printing and translation of the bill, of which there were to be 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French.

At the time it was decided to abandon the petition, the Printing Bureau had provided the Law Branch with 15 page proof copies of the bill. As the matter had been closed, and no additional copies were required, the Printing Bureau billed the Senate for $65. Therefore, Mr. Halter, the petitioner, should get a refund of $585.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

DISCUSSION IN SENATE—QUESTION

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government. On Thursday last the Senate adopted the following motion which was moved by Senator Langlois:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1977, in advance of bills based upon the said estimates reaching the Senate.

That is the normal motion, and I have no objection to it. It is an appropriate motion. The committee studies the estimates and eventually presents a report to the Senate, usually a day or two before legislation granting full supply is introduced.

Furthermore, when interim supply bills are debated, Senator Langlois usually says that all senators' rights are being reserved and that if anybody wishes to speak on the subject, he or she may do so. Well, honourable senators, I have been here 20 years and I have never yet heard anybody speak on these items, except the Leader or Deputy Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition. I do not object to this practice, because I realize that if any senator wished to speak to these items then he or she could have done so.

However, honourable senators, I would make this suggestion to you. In view of the small amount of work we have on our order paper why can we not, when we refer the estimates to committee—and I am not suggesting at all that we interfere in any way with the work of the committee—allow the item to stand on the order paper so that any member of the house may be able, if it seems to be appropriate to do so, to speak on any item contained in the estimates? In that way the estimates can be spoken to inasmuch as they may relate to, say, Newfoundland, the Maritimes, or any other region.

We would be greatly assisted if the estimates, on being sent to committee, were not taken off our order paper. This, in turn would allow a great number of senators to participate, it would generate interest, and it would provide work for the Senate. At the same time there would be added interest in the work being done on the particular estimates in question.

Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government is: Why can't this be done to stimulate work in the Senate?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, in this respect we are following the usual practice whereby the main estimates, when tabled, are referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance for study in advance of bills based thereon coming before the Senate. When this committee presents its report, any senator is welcome to speak to it. Later, a supply bill, which usually covers a three-month period, is introduced to approve part of the estimates. Even then, when part of these estimates are passed, each item contained therein is still open for discussion. The passing of a particular item does not preclude any further discussion. In my view, ample opportunity is given to every member of this house to discuss the estimates. We do not have to wait until the final estimates are brought in to speak to any item passed on any of the occasions I have mentioned.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I thought the chairman of the committee might have some comment to make, but as a member of the committee perhaps I can say that I am sympathetic to the suggestion made by Senator Croll. On the other hand, I see some definite procedural difficulties. It would be very unusual to refer a bill or estimates to a committee, and then while that bill or estimates are under consideration in committee to have a debate in the Senate itself on the subject matter under discussion by the committee. I can see some grave difficulties in that. However, I appreciate the concern of Senator Croll that opportunity be given for adequate discussion in the Senate with respect to the estimates. It happens very often that the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance is presented fairly close to the time at which we receive the first appropriation bill based on the estimates. We have at least a convention, if not a rule, that the main estimates are referred to the National Finance Committee before discussion takes place in the Senate. In this way the Senate is assured that a committee of the Senate has examined the main estimates in detail. This has happened, and Senator Everett, the chairman of that committee, has made very sure that it does happen.

There has been, in my opinion, a fairly full examination of the estimates in committee. I am sure that Senator Everett has the intention of calling the committee soon to discuss the estimates so that the committee's report will be presented to the Senate in plenty of time. That, it seems to me, is the time at which there could be every opportunity for full discussion of the estimates. In my opinion, the main point is that the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance should be presented in the Senate well before the commencement of debate on the first appropriation bill.

Senator Everett: I might say, in answer to Senator Grosart and Senator Croll, that of recent years it has been the practice of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, rather than spending its time duplicating the work of the other place by going through the estimates in detail, department by department, to select a department, a program, or an agency and carry out an extremely detailed examination of it. In my opinion, it is possible to complete the work of reviewing the estimates much earlier than we have been able to in the past, and to have the committee's report presented in the Senate for debate well in advance of the supply bill. However, this would necessitate some type of mechanism whereby the committee could continue its examination of a particular department, agency or program after the estimates are reported to the Senate itself.

In this connection, I might say we are just completing our report on Canada Manpower, which we hope to present to the Senate within the next two or three weeks. It is the present intention of the committee to embark upon an examination of certain of the programs in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I would respectfully suggest that this is a subject into which the deputy government leader might wish to enquire. If the administration introduces a motion whereby we can review the blue book and present a report to the Senate, and continue with our main investigation of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I am sure we would be able to present the blue book for debate well in advance of the time at which the supply bill comes before us.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I am in full agreement with the suggestion of Senator Grosart and Senator Everett that we should be given an opportunity to receive the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance before any supply bill based on the main estimates reaches us. I would hope that this could be achieved without precluding any particular study that the National Finance Committee might wish to make of a particular department. However, if we receive the report of the National Finance Committee on the estimates earlier than usual, it might allow more time for debate on the whole estimates.

Senator Everett: May I say to the deputy leader that one of the reasons why the Senate does not get the report before the supply bill is due to the fact that the committee tries to keep the subject open for as long as it can in order that it can proceed with its specific investigation. If there were some mechanism whereby the committee could commence its specific investigation, return the estimates, and then carry on with the investigation, the report of the committee on the general estimates could be presented to the Senate for debate, and the committee itself could carry on with its specific investigation.

Senator Grosart: Would Senator Everett not agree that there is probably not really a conflict here, because normally the report of the committee on the estimates comes to the Senate long before the report on the specific department under investigation. This is the case at the moment with the Canada Manpower inquiry. That inquiry originated under the main estimates of last year. It is still going on and there has been no report, but in the interim there has been a report on the main estimates. Therefore, I ask the chairman of the committee if he would not agree that the main and immediate responsibility of the committee is to report on the estimates and not on these specific inquiries, very useful though they are?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, I intervene at this time to point out that we are on the Question Period. A question has been asked by the Honourable Senator Croll and answered by the Deputy Leader of the Government. That question has now developed into a debate. I did not consider intervening before. Honourable senators may wish to continue the discussion on this subject, but I remind them that we are now on the Question Period. I understand that Senator Everett would like to say something further.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, in reply to Senator Grosart I should like to say that we embark upon the special investigation at the time the estimates are in our hands. It has been customary to delay the report on the estimates until just before the supply bill comes to us. At that point the committee faces a crisis, and we get around it by a special motion.

I am suggesting that we have the estimates referred to the committee, and the committee could determine what specific study it is going to undertake in connection with them. The committee would then be free to report back on the estimates, and continue with the special study which is an integral part of its work in looking at the estimates. This is a procedure we have developed, and it is one which I think is very important to the work of the Senate on the estimates.

In former times the work the Senate did in connection with the estimates was merely a duplication of the work of the other place. That did not mean a great deal, so we developed the concept of zeroing in on one department and studying it intensively. The committee would like to continue with that concept. I am asking for some mechanism whereby we can commence that study at the same time that we consider the estimates, refer the estimates back for debate in the Senate, and then carry on with the study.

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I do not believe the discussion is zeroing in on what Senator Croll has asked. It seems to me that we should make provision for an open end in both the committee and the chamber. I believe that is what Senator Croll is asking for. As a member of the National Finance Committee, I am not certain that I want to quickly report the estimates to the house, thus precluding the committee members from discussing any item in those estimates they want to discuss, except those concerned with a particular study the committee may be engaged in.

There are many times when a member of the committee may want to call witnesses before the committee on a certain subject before the supply bill is brought down. The chairman has said he is interested in providing for a special study to zero in on a particular department. As a member of the National Finance Committee, I want the estimates left open for as long as possible.

I agree with Senator Croll, however, that there should be provision for discussion in the Senate as well, thereby allowing any honourable senator to discuss a particular department or item in the estimates. This could perhaps be achieved by way of an inquiry drawing the attention of the Senate to certain aspects of the estimates. I, for one, certainly do not want to shut off any discussion or prevent members of the committee from bringing any item before the committee.

Senator Croll: I wish to thank the honourable senator for understanding exactly what I was trying to get at. I realize that the committee must limit itself to perhaps one department or item in the estimates. This could perhaps be achieved by way of an inquiry drawing the attention of the Senate to certain aspects of the estimates. I, for one, certainly do not want to shut off any discussion or prevent members of the committee from bringing any item before the committee.

Senator Everett: The honourable senator knows full well that in examining the blue book it is the practice of the committee to go through it department by department. We do not make the references that are made in the other place, nor do we spend the same amount of time on it, but we do select one department into which we conduct an intensive and thorough study.

It is not a case of taking the blue book and reporting on it within a few days or a week. What we are talking about is a fairly lengthy process. The report is presented to the Senate sufficiently in advance of the supply bill's coming to us so as to allow for adequate debate, provided we have the mechanism whereby the committee can make a special study of a particular department without having to keep the estimates open. That is the way we have operated up to now.

As Senator Grosart has said, I do not think we should fall into the trap of referring a matter to a committee and, at the same time, keeping it before the chamber.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, in an endeavour to stay in order may I ask the chairman of the committee if he would not agree that the mechanism which he appears to seek is already in place? The committee can quite properly make a first report on the main estimates, putting that report before the Senate so that discussion ranging over all the estimates could then ensue, and then a second report dealing with any specific department or departments.

I do not understand why this committee cannot deal with the main estimates in that way. In my experience, it has never taken more than one meeting for the committee to deal with the main estimates, although there may have been occasions when it took two. I do not see why the committee cannot report back on the estimates generally so that they are open for discussion in the Senate, which I think should be the case, followed by a second report dealing with any other specific matters.

Senator Croll: I think that is an excellent suggestion.

Senator Everett: I would be delighted if that were the solution. I think that would answer all of the problems.

Senator Grosart: Agreed.

Senator Everett: I should say it is not entirely true that the committee takes only one or two meetings to deal with the main estimates. Some examinations of the main estimates have involved eight or 10 meetings. I think it stretches the truth a little to say that the committee takes only one or two meetings to deal with the estimates.

ESTONIA

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that today, February 24, marks the fifty-eighth anniversary of the Proclamation of the Independence of the Estonian Democratic Republic.

On this day in 1918, after being subjugated for centuries by the Russian Czarist regime, Estonia, by the will of her people, became a free country with an advanced democratic constitution. Thus, these people prospered and lived in peace with their neighbours until June 1940, when the Soviet forces occupied their land, as well as Latvia and Lithuania. This was done in cooperation with Hitler's Nazi Germany. Later Soviet Russia annexed the Baltic States, making them an integral part of the Soviet Union.

The Western powers did not recognize the annexation of the Baltic States by the U.S.S.R. Canada and the United States, up to the present time, do not recognize this Soviet occupation, and still give recognition to the consuls of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania in our respective countries.

Honourable senators today received copies of the United States House of Representatives Resolution No. 864, together with the Sense of the House regarding the Status of the Baltic States of November 20, 1975, which was passed unanimously. The resolution reaffirms and strengthens the existing United States foreign policy of non-recognition of the illegal annexation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union. Such a resolution gives sincere encouragement to the millions of Eastern Europeans who are suffering under the heavy yoke of the Soviet Russian Communist dictatorship.

I should like to congratulate the Canadian citizens of Estonian ancestry for their devotion to the principles of freedom and democracy, and to pay tribute to them for their many contributions to the building of a better Canada for all citizens.

I feel sure that all honourable senators will join with me in this tribute, and will extend our best wishes to the Estonians for the realization in the near future of the freedom of their country.

QUARANTINE ACT

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 19, the debate on the motion of Senator McGrand for second reading of Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my remarks on Bill S-31 will be very brief because the bill is not controversial, and it certainly is not very exciting. It is a housekeeping bill; or, since it deals with decontamination, perhaps we should term it a housecleaning bill. The amendments in the bill recognize that aircraft are now a means of conveyance, and we are bringing the Quarantine Act into the jet age, so perhaps the bill should be termed S-747 instead of S-31.

The amendment in clause 7(1) includes dangerous diseases other than the four presently covered by the Quarantine Act, namely, smallpox, cholera, yellow fever and the plague. The other day when I heard Senator McGrand mention the plague in his opening remarks, I found myself looking at certain senators opposite. Then my thoughts went down the corridors to the treasury benches in the other place and I realized that the difficulties in this country are caused by a plague of Liberalism. I often wondered why Mr. Stanfield was unsuccessful in removing the present government from office, and I came to the conclusion that he should have been using the Quarantine Act instead of the Elections Act. Perhaps a great many Canadians now feel they are quarantined by the Anti-Inflation Board. Honourable senators will forgive me if I take this opportunity to point out to them that during the past weekend a new political antibiotic has been developed and its name is Joe Clark. Canadians can now look forward to a relief from the plague of Liberalism.

The inclusion of another dangerous disease is the necessity not only to speed up international air traffic, due to our giant airliners, but it is now recognized that many of the so-called ancient viruses—ancient in that they have been recognized for some time—by merely changing the amount of their protein content can produce a new influenza. Therefore, it is essential to have the means of providing protection on a required basis rather than on a continuing basis.

I listened with interest to Senator McGrand's explanation that appeal provisions are to be provided under subsection 8(1) in order not to contravene the Canadian Bill of Rights. It is rather unusual to see this government have such respect for the Bill of Rights. It makes me suspect that in future legislation we will see a minor amendment to the Quarantine Act illustrating the respect the government has for the Bill of Rights.

Clause 1 of the bill recognizes that problems are created by airborne bacteria and viruses. These are placed in the same category as other contaminants such as vermin and insects.

Honourable senators, it is going to be an entirely different procedure in decontaminating a rat infested vessel than it is in decontaminating a modern airliner. I note that the legislation gives no specific instructions as to the procedure to be followed in this case. As I said earlier, the amendments are not controversial or significant, so there is no opposition to them.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, we are indebted to Dr. McGrand for the fine explanation he gave this bill, which, as Senator Phillips has said, is primarily a housekeeping bill. I welcome its introduction in the Senate. I hope it to be the beginning of a long line of housekeeping bills which are required for many statutes by various departments. This is a special opportunity for this chamber to look at this kind of legislation and make sure that it satisfies the requirements of the times and the ideals of Parliament.

This bill is about quarantine. Many of us can remember that our first notion of quarantine was in seeing a card in the front window of a house warning the public that the occupants had typhus or smallpox or scarlet fever or even measles. We did not think very much about the Latin derivation of the word, which involved forty days. We just knew that people were going to be locked up for awhile. We also knew that it meant segregation because of communicable contagious diseases being rampant in society. We also had isolation hospitals to deal with these cases.

Later we learned that quarantine involved health inspection at ports of entry from abroad. Those of us who read American history know about the problems they had over the years on Ellis Island, and, knowing our own history, about some of the problems that were created in our own great ports of Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, and Vancouver.

We had somewhat of a horror of the words "immigration sheds," because people were thought of as being cooped up and perhaps inadequately cared for, and that they were mostly poverty-stricken, immigrants. We have also had a fear even in our day, I think, of the spread of communicable diseases. A few days ago when the tragic earthquake hit Guatemala, one of the first reports reaching us through the media was about the danger of epidemics and the need for medical supplies and medical attention.

In the course of history there have been many disastrous epidemics. We know about the terrible black death in Europe in the fourteenth century when over 25 million people, about a quarter of Europe's population, died. In the seventeenth century the London plague claimed some 70,000 lives, depleting London's population by 15 per cent. In the decade between 1896 and 1906, a cholera epidemic struck Africa and the Far East. Some four million deaths were reported in India alone.

In 1847 we had a very serious situation in this country, primarily because of the potato famine in Ireland. The potato crop had failed but not the grain crop and not the cattle business. There was a mass exodus from Ireland at the time. One hundred thousand were overcrowded into ships destined for Canada. The unsanitary conditions were unspeakable. The people could not go to the United States because of the strictness of their immigration laws. But immigration was open in Canada. The policy of the British Government, if there was any, seems to have been to remove the people from the famine-stricken areas of Ireland. Canadian facilities were primitive and inadequate, and the province of the United Canadas, as it was at that time, really had no immigration policy and certainly no official warning.

[Senator Phillips.]

Between May and November of 1847, some 400 ships came into the St. Lawrence, mostly from Ireland, a few from Scotland and some from England. These ships were desperately overcrowded with young and old, many of them ill. The trouble spot in Canada was at the quarantine station on Grosse Isle, about 33 miles east of Quebec.

● (2050)

These ships were overcrowded with people who were afflicted by ship-fever, typhus and cholera. There was no vaccination and no adequate facilities to look after them. Accounts of the situation on Grosse Isle indicate that conditions there were simply appalling. Over 16,000 people died at that time. It is estimated that 4,000 of them died at sea; 1,100 died on the ships at anchor at Grosse Isle, because there were no facilities to look after them even if they could have disembarked; over 3,300 died on Grosse Isle; some 700 died in Quebec; and about 5,300 died in Point St. Charles in Montreal. And of the people who went to various places in Ontario, over 3,000 also died. There were many deaths at that time after the arrival of ships at Saint John.

The authorities simply could not keep up with the demands placed upon them. It is estimated that between 10,000 and 12,000 people were buried in a common grave on Grosse Isle.

The heroism of the people was outstanding, as was the heroism of the doctors, the nurses, and the clergy of all denominations who ministered to the sick as best they could in the circumstances, even to the point where many of them died as well. The compassion shown by the people in the little towns and villages near Quebec was of a nature not to be forgotten. The French Canadian families opened their hearts and their doors to the Irish babies, many of whom had been orphaned either on the way to or on Grosse Isle, and adopted them, making them part of their families, raising them and starting them off in life.

A monument to the memory of those fever victims was raised on Grosse Isle in 1909. Of the many fine orators, and the principal speaker, on that occasion was the then Secretary of State for Canada, the Honourable Charles Murphy. Later he was a respected senator. I knew him well, and I revere and treasure his memory. He told me the story—and I have read it in accounts of the occasion—of a Madam Roberge who appeared at the ceremony with her two daughters. Neither Madam Roberge nor her two daughters could speak one word of English, yet her name had been Ellen Cox. She had been one of the orphaned children adopted into French Canadian families.

Honourable senators, we have come a long way in the 130 years since that time. As Senator Phillips has said, today we have thousands disembarking from giant aircraft and passing swiftly through immigration. We have new techniques, new procedures and new controls for processing them. Mass air travel is possible because of the great advances in modern medicine. Without those advances we would not be able to have such means of transportation.

I feel this is an appropriate time and place to pay tribute to the dedication and skill of the professionals who have assisted in this great task. I refer to the research scientists whom it is impossible to enumerate—men such as Pasteur and Fleming. I refer to the dedicated people in the medical profession who, through the years, have struggled with tremendous problems of such great importance to mankind. I refer also to the medical officers of health who, though seldom thought of, are responsible for administering the legislation which is intended to safeguard the public health from the onslaught of communicable diseases.

On the one hand, we have the contribution of medicine and, on the other, the political decisions which have had the effect of assisting the development of safe travel and good health generally. Let me illustrate that point with a story about a man called John Snow. I do not know if he was a doctor, but I suspect he might have been. He lived in London, England, in the 1800s. In 1824 he learned of an outbreak of cholera in a section of London, the Parish of St. James. In that one small area there were 500 deaths within ten days. John Snow went there immediately to observe what was happening. Once he was there he questioned the people, and observed their customs and habits. He watched what they did and how they lived. He formed the opinion—and this was at a time before there was any thought of testing water—that perhaps the Broad Street pump was the source of contagion, and took action. He went to the guardians of St. James's Parish and persuaded them to remove the handle from the Broad Street pump. Once that was done, the epidemic came to an end.

That is a simple story, but it is significant because it illustrates the importance of political action in achieving ends of the kind which the measure before us is trying to achieve. What John Snow did in persuading the guardians of St. James's Parish to remove the handle from the Broad Street pump was a political act.

As Senator Phillips has said, the measure before us is a housekeeping bill. I am pleased to see it introduced in the Senate. If we take a little time to consider the background of bills of this sort, I think we can do much to improve the character of legislation in many fields. I am sure this bill will improve the Quarantine Act.

On motion of Senator McGrand, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 25, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

February 25, 1976

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 25th day of February, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

CANADA YEAR BOOK

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Senator Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I should like leave of the Senate to speak briefly on the subject of the Canada Year Book, which was issued a few weeks ago.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: I am not sure. It seems to me that it would be more appropriate if Senator Desruisseaux were to give notice that he will call the attention of the Senate to this particular subject either tomorrow or some time next week. Is there some special reason why it should take precedence over the Orders of the Day? If the honourable senator's speech were no more than five minutes I would not mind, but it would certainly not be the regular way to proceed and we do have legislation to consider.

Senator Desruisseaux: I realize that. You are quite right and I will not ask for leave today. I will simply give notice that on Tuesday evening next I will speak briefly on the subject of the Canada Year Book.

QUARANTINE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator McGrand for second reading of Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act.

Senator McGrand: Honourable senators, I have nothing to add at this time. If the bill is given second reading, I intend to move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McGrand moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I should like to have leave to make an announcement with respect to the consideration of this bill in committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Granted.

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I had hoped to be able to hold a meeting of this committee this afternoon when the Senate rises.

Senator Flynn: Why not yesterday?

Senator Carter: Unfortunately, neither the minister nor his parliamentary assistant is available to appear before the committee this afternoon. You can see from the Order Paper that tomorrow morning is filled up with committees, and on Thursday, March 4, the committee will be occupied with witnesses who have been asked to appear in connection with Senator McGrand's motion respecting crime and violence. As a consequence, unless the opportunity occurs earlier, at present unforeseen, it will not be possible to consider this bill until March 11. I am told, however, that there is no great hurry for consideration of the bill at the present time.

Senator Flynn: You do not have to be told. You know.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved second reading of Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill now before us is rather a formidable looking document, but I want to assure you that this afternoon I am not going to make a speech that is as formidable as the document is in appearance. I think even a most cursory perusal of the bill will make the reason for my decision self-evident.

Honourable senators will recall very vividly the mammoth exercise that Parliament went through in 1971, which produced our so-called tax reform law and the new Income Tax Act that went into force on January 1, 1972. At that time Canada had in effect conventions, or tax treaties, with 16 other countries, which tax treaties had been in effect for many years, some of them dating from the end of World War II. The fundamental concepts or changes in concept involved in our tax reform measures necessitated that we enter into negotiations with all these countries and, indeed, it is anticipated that we shall have to enter into negotiations with an equal number in the future with a view to obtaining conventions with them covering taxation areas of interest to Canada and each of the other countries concerned.

The first three conventions to have been successfully negotiated out of the 16 extant at the time of the tax reform legislation are reproduced in this bill. They are treaties with France, Belgium and Israel. These treaties come before us today to be ratified and to be enacted into law.

Honourable senators will notice that the treaties themselves are attached to this bill as Schedules I, II and III and comprise some 73 of the 76 pages of the total bill. The first three pages of the bill are the enacting provisions, and these in turn are divided into four parts. I think I can deal with these briefly.

Part I deals with the convention with France, Part II deals with the convention with Belgium, and Part III deals with the convention with Israel. Each part is almost identical in wording, and the operative section declares that the appropriate schedule, which is the convention, shall have the force of law. Part IV is entitled "Supplementary Agreements" and that part of the bill confers upon the Governor in Council the power to declare by order any subsequent supplementary agreements made with the three countries in question to be approved by Canada. It is interesting to note that such an order must, after its issue, be laid before Parliament within 15 days or, if Parliament be not then in session, within 15 days of the resumption of a session.

Senator Flynn: Or the beginning of a session, I suppose?

Senator Lang: A new session, yes.

Senator Flynn: Because we are still in the first session of this Parliament.

Senator Lang: Thereafter the order comes into force within a further 15 days unless Parliament takes affirmative action to revoke it. I also note that clause 12 seems to contemplate the enactment of new rules by the House of Commons and the Senate to accommodate this sort of procedure within the normal procedures. I assume this to be contained in the legislation in anticipation of many other such bills of a similar nature that might come to us, or are certain to come to us over the next few years.

That is all I intend to say with respect to the bill itself and that, in fact, is about all there is to say with respect to it.

Now I will go through the schedules themselves and, for obvious reasons, I will deal with the highlights of these treaties and their provisions in only a general manner.

I intend, when and if this bill receives second reading, to move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trading and Commerce. I know that in that committee, under the chairmanship of Senator Hayden, with all his perception and his penetrating scholarship in these matters, all senators will have an opportunity to delve into the interstices of our international taxation scene.

Honourable senators, fortunately, the three schedules representing the conventions with the three different countries are almost identical in nature, and therefore I do not intend to attempt to distinguish between them, nor to deal with them individually.

It is quite interesting to note that these conventions follow a model convention promulgated by the OECD. I would say at this time that I consider it most fortunate that the OECD does make efforts to achieve international uniformity in such laws. As these conventions bind the countries which are signatories to impose a lesser rate of tax on income flowing to the other signatories, a large part of these schedules comprise agreement on definitions, on questions of domicile, and as to what constitutes a permanent establishment, and so forth, and all of them are concepts which honourable senators are familiar with from other such tax treaties. Thereafter these schedules deal with the matters which are of most general concern, namely, the payment of dividends, interest payments, and royalty payments.

We find that the maximum withholding rate on dividends and interest payments is fixed at 15 per cent for all three countries involved, namely, Belgium, France and Israel. The maximum withholding tax permissible on royalties is 10 per cent in the case of Belgium and France, and 15 per cent in the case of Israel; and, as heretofore, the copyright on artistic works remains exempt.

Referring back to the tax reform measures of 1971, honourable senators will recall that in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce we dealt at great length with two items which were new concepts to our tax system, namely, capital gains, and what is called FAPI, or foreign accrual property income. Those two concepts made these conventions necessary. In addition, honourable senators will recall that effective January 1 of this year it was provided that the withholding tax on dividends would be increased to 25 per cent from 15 per cent.

When one considers the complications inherent in operating under the old conventions with a new tax act, and the changes already in effect in our own tax system, one can understand the tremendous sense of urgency which must pervade the Department of Finance in getting these conventions negotiated and into law.

With regard to capital gains, I can only say that the agreements negotiated recognize the Canadian tax positions and state that capital gains may be levied by the host country on dispositions of real estate, business assets and shares in real estate companies.

This, of course, reaffirms the old conflict-of-law concept, namely, the distinction between movable and immovable property, stipulating generally that immovable property only may be subject to capital gains tax in its country of residence or domicile.

The FAPI rules and the withholding tax rates are met and set out in the conventions by way of fixing new rates for the latter and by reference to the provisions regarding the avoidance of double taxation in the case of the former.

The prohibition against discrimination is carried forward in these conventions. However, it is interesting to note that the small business deduction under our act, and the dividends tax credit, both of which are permissible only to Canadian residents, are retained, notwithstanding these non-discriminatory provisions.

Undoubtedly, some people in Canada will be saddened to learn that the two-year tax exemption for salaries paid in one country to a teacher from abroad is abolished and that these persons now fall within the restricted exemption generally afforded and applicable to personal services.

Pensions and annuities remain taxable as heretofore by the state in which they arise.

In probably one of the most important clauses of the bill, the relief from double taxation is dealt with in some detail and along the same line as has heretofore been the case. There is implicit recognition by the contracting states of our concepts under the FAPI rules.

Senator Connolly: Does that mean that there is a tax credit on foreign tax paid?

Senator Lang: That is correct. In other words, heretofore the accruing property income would be received as a dividend tax free; it will now be taxable, but the tax imposed by the foreign jurisdiction on that income will fall within the section providing for the relief of double taxation.

Generally speaking, as honourable senators are aware, each country being a party to these agreements agrees to allow a deduction from its tax in respect of tax imposed in foreign jurisdictions on the same income. That, of course, is the basic reason for all international tax conventions.

In conclusion, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Canadian negotiating teams which worked on these agreements. In order to have negotiated them they presumably had to explain the 1971 amendments to our Income Tax Act to their foreign counterparts in some detail. To date, the ability to do just that seems to have escaped some of our most competent practitioners, including lawyers, chartered accountants, and even officials of the Department of National Revenue. I can only admire the extraordinary facility which must exist on the part of our negotiating teams, and I extend to them our congratulations.

As I mentioned previously, it is my intention, should this bill receive second reading, to move that it be referred to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, at which time honourable senators will have an opportunity to question expert witnesses on the details of these conventions, and inquire into the way in which it is expected that these rather complicated and elaborate formulae are going to work. In the meantime, I would commend this bill to the most favourable consideration of the house.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REGULATIONS RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS— MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, which was presented yesterday.

Senator Laird moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I feel I owe the Senate an explanation of the disposition made of the matter referred to us, which you will see in the report that was distributed last night, and, of course, in the suggestion made in the regulations proposed in the motion by Senator Godfrey, in the main involving doubling the monetary penalty for absence beyond 21 days in any one session.

Perhaps honourable senators will not need me to remind them that the only two excuses for absence beyond 21 days are sickness, certified by a doctor's certificate, and absence on public or official business.

This matter was thoroughly discussed in committee, and has been, I may say, unofficially discussed over perhaps a period of a year, both in and out of the committee. So, a lot of consideration has been given to the problem involved.

On the day on which the committee dealt with the matter, there was practically no other business and so we devoted ourselves to it almost exclusively. I should perhaps point out that there was full attendance, although I can say there always seems to be a full attendance in that committee.

After the presentation by Senator Godfrey and others, and a very thorough discussion of what should be done about the matter, the committee decided that the increase in monetary penalty was not getting at the root of the matter, in the sense that it would probably only encourage the improper use of the excuse of being absent on public or official business.

In order to get at the root of the matter, the committee, after much consideration, finally decided that the right way to deal with the problem of inexcusable absence was to provide what you see in paragraph two of the report now before you—which can be found in both the Minutes of Proceedings and what was distributed last night—namely, that when an honourable senator certifies that he is absent on public or official business he should be obliged to state the nature of that business, where it was done and the details, which would enable a judgment to be made whether or not it was public or official business.

I also remind honourable senators that over a year ago, I sent to every member of the Senate a photocopy of a letter of opinion by our then Law Clerk, Mr. Hopkins, in which he delineated what in his opinion was public or official business, but which I imagine many of you may have filed in a wastepaper basket or some other inaccessible spot. If you want to take another look at it to remind yourself of what it contains, I assure you that a copy is available through Mr. Dean or myself.

The third and final matter which appears in the third paragraph of this short and succinct report is that where there is a doubt, the Internal Economy Committee will review the reasons given. As a matter of practice, where there is no doubt, obviously we are not going to take time to review the matter, but in the normal course we will write to Mr. Dean and he will undoubtedly, once a month or thereabouts, place before us anything about which he has doubt.

Frankly, the whole idea is to remove from a civil servant the responsibility of deciding the issue, and place it precisely where it belongs—on the shoulders of the committee, which is composed of 20 senators and is ultimately responsible for so many things that happen around the Senate in the course of its operation.

Very shortly, this is the reason for our having taken the attitude we have. Of course, if any honourable senator wishes to ask questions of me I shall be pleased to try to answer them. I would express the hope that the debate will not end today because, after all, it is a rather important matter.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, ever since I have been a member of the Senate I have wondered where this particular subject belonged. Now that I have been told I wish to make a few remarks at this time.

I apologize for not having checked the wording of the writ summoning us to the Senate, but as I recall it it commands us to attend the Senate as and when called. The determination of whether or not senators have been attending has been left to the administration of the Senate. It has been a fairly simple matter—either we have been in the chamber at a certain time or we have not. It is now proposed that in the final analysis this determination will be made by the committee. I have no objection to that. However, one point which, to my knowledge, has never been debated but which has been discussed by some of us, is whether attending a meeting of a Senate committee or fulfilling a mandate given us by the Senate to represent this chamber at a conference as part of a delegation, is in fact attending the Senate.

There have been occasions, as was the case last evening, when there is a very brief sitting of the Senate, and when an honourable senator may have attended two or three committee meetings during the course of the day. He may have spent four or five hours at committee meetings, and for some reason or other is unable to be present in the chamber, and in that case the onus is on him to explain to the administration or to the committee the reason for his absence. At the same time, a senator's attendance at a committee meeting is a matter of record. The mandate given a senator by the Senate is to represent the Senate here or elsewhere, and when he does so he is officially on Senate business. It is my belief that in such circumstances the onus should not be on the senator to justify his absence from the chamber.

● (1440)

I am not moving or proposing any amendment to the report but I do suggest to the chairman of the committee that the committee should address itself to this point at an early opportunity, and report back to the house.

On motion of Senator Côté, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FINAL ACT OF HELSINKI CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Forsey calling the attention of the Senate to the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe—(Honourable Senator Petten).

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, when I adjourned this item it was my understanding that there were other senators who wished to speak. As no honourable senator has indicated his intention to speak we could, in my opinion, now consider this matter debated.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in this debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, before I move that the Senate do adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5.45 p.m. for royal assent, I should like to announce that when the Senate rises the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet in room 256-S to continue its study of problems in the Canadian textile industry.

Senator Flynn: And what of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs?

Senator Langlois: Notices have already been sent out stating that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is also meeting this afternoon to consider the amendments to the criminal law.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk Assistant.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills.

An Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof.

An Act to repeal An Act respecting the Halifax Relief Commission and to authorize the continuation of pensions, grants or allowances paid by the Halifax Relief Commission.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

---

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

Senator Petten moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 26, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS
MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Collette and Marceau had been substituted for those of Messrs. Blair and Francis on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service.

SIXTH REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Buckwold, I have the honour to table the sixth report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service. I would ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see p. 1799.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 2, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put I should like to give the usual brief outline of what we can expect to have before us next week, in both the Senate and committees.

On Tuesday afternoon at 2.30 the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet to continue its examination of Bill C-71, the Criminal Law Amendment bill, and at 3.30 there will be a meeting of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region.

On Wednesday the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet to hear further witnesses on Canadian textile problems, and the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet when the Senate rises.

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet at 9.30 on Thursday morning to continue its study of Bill C-71, the Criminal Law Amendment bill, and at 10 o'clock the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will continue its study concerning the feasibility of the establishment of a special committee of the Senate to inquire into crime and violence in contemporary Canadian society. A number of witnesses will appear.

In the Senate on Tuesday evening we will continue the debate on second reading of Bill S-32 to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel, if that debate is not concluded today. Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, which had first reading in the Senate yesterday, is on the Order Paper for Tuesday next, when Senator Davey will move second reading. I have been informed that Bill C-85, respecting immigration security, introduced in the House of Commons yesterday, is expected to pass that house today and come to the Senate before we meet next week.

In addition to the foregoing we will probably have one or two other bills from the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Lang for second reading of Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, my first pleasant duty is to compliment Senator Lang, the sponsor of this bill, on the excellent presentation he gave us. I do this particularly with respect to the detail with which he examined specifically the double taxation aspects covered by this bill. He said that he did not intend to make a "formidable" speech, although he did comment that the bill as presented to us is formidable in appearance. I would say he did make a formidable speech, certainly formidable in substance; at least, it so impressed me when I came to examine the speech and the bill.

As far as the bill itself is concerned, other than the parts which detail the actual conventions, it is short, consisting of only 12 clauses. However, it increases to 77 pages as a result of setting out in detail the conventions with France, Belgium and Israel for the avoidance of double taxation between those countries and ourselves. In his opening remarks Senator Lang referred to "16 other countries," saying that at the time the tax reform legislation—as I shall refer to it for the sake of brevity—went into effect, on January 1, 1972, we had conventions of this nature with 16 other countries. If my information is correct, those 16 countries did not include the three countries covered by this bill. Up to that time, starting as Senator Lang said, immediately after World War II, we had concluded conventions with (in alphabetical order) Australia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Jamaica, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, South Africa, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Kingdom, and the United States.

I shall be posing some questions to Senator Lang, not in any way critical of his presentation but because, as this bill is being initiated in the Senate, our comments will probably be looked at rather carefully by some in the other place. As a layman, there are questions that I should like to have answered. I hope that Senator Lang will find it possible to answer them when he closes the debate, rather than waiting to have the questions raised in committee, in view of the fact that, following his suggestion, this bill will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce rather than to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I might say that I have no objection to that, for the reasons stated by Senator Lang, namely, the very great expertise of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in the field of taxation, including double taxation. On the other hand, I hope that it will not be a precedent to send international treaties, conventions and agreements to committees other than the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, unless there is a particular reason for so doing as there is, I would agree, in this case. I say that because I hope to indicate that this bill raises some questions which go over a much wider range than taxation and which involve considerations of many other treaties, agreements and conventions into which Canada has entered and, no doubt, will enter in the future.

Reverting to my question about the conventions we had with 16 nations in 1972, do the three that we have now entered into fall within that list? Are they renegotiated conventions, or are they new conventions?

Secondly, if we have had, or now have, conventions with 16 or 19 countries, what is the situation of a Canadian taxpayer in respect of those countries with which we do not have conventions for the avoidance of double taxation?

I would also like to know if it is the intention to revise or renegotiate the 16 conventions I have listed, all of which are dated prior to 1972 when the Income Tax Reform Act came into effect. As Senator Lang noted, the new act is an important component of particular provisions in these conventions which are covered by the bill now before us.

I would also ask: What is the Canadian taxpayer's situation in respect of avoidance of double taxation in all other countries of the world? Senator Lang said that we would be moving on to negotiate conventions of this kind with other countries. What is the situation of the Canadian taxpayer in the absence of such a convention?

Senator Lang said that these three were the first to be "successfully negotiated" since 1972. So I ask: Is it our intention to renegotiate existing conventions?

The conventions themselves are in Parts I, II and III and, as Senator Lang said, they are "almost" in the same terms.

[Senator Grosart.]

He indicated one exception—the difference in the royalty withholding tax in respect of Israel, where I think it is 15 per cent compared with 10 per cent in the others. I have looked through the conventions, but did not note any other major differences. Perhaps the sponsor will indicate whether there are other important differences as between the provisions of the three conventions.

I come now to another statement made by Senator Lang. Again, I am not criticizing, but merely asking for an answer on the assumption that there is a good answer. While dealing with the withholding tax, which refers to dividends, interest payments and royalties, he said:

We find that the maximum withholding rate on dividends and interest payments is fixed at 15 per cent for all three countries involved... The maximum withholding tax permissible on royalties is 10 per cent in the case of Belgium and France, and 15 per cent in the case of Israel; and, as heretofore, the copyright on artistic works remains exempt.

My first question is: What exactly is meant by the statement that the copyright on "artistic works" is exempt? I ask that because it is my information that withholding tax is required in Canada on certain copyright payments. I am not quite sure what the phrase "artistic works" means. It is sometimes taken to mean only the graphic arts, but in the broader sense it could refer to the printed word, to music, and so on. I merely ask for clarification there.

Again I ask for clarification of the subsequent statement:

In addition, honourable senators will recall that effective January 1 of this year it was provided that the withholding tax on dividends would be increased to 25 per cent from 15 per cent.

That seems to be at variance with the other statement that the maximum withholding rate on dividends and interest payments is fixed at 15 per cent. Perhaps we could have an explanation of that.

I come now to the discrimination clause in the bill. Senators Lang's comment was as follows:

● (1420)

The prohibition against discrimination is carried forward in these conventions. However, it is interesting to note that the small business deduction under our act, and the dividends tax credit, both of which are permissible only to Canadian residents, are retained, notwithstanding these non-discriminatory provisions.

I am wondering whether this is a case where the actual provisions of the act are not in keeping with the undertakings we have made in the discriminating clauses of the covenants.

Turning to the bill itself, I note that clause 5(3) reads:

The Minister of National Revenue may make such regulations as are necessary for the purposes of carrying out the Convention or for giving effect to any of the provisions thereof.

I am happy to see the use of the words "are necessary." In previous bills, quite often the phrase was "which the minister deems necessary." As I have said on other occasions, the use of the phrase "which the minister deems necessary" would seem to remove the whole matter from the courts. In this case, the minister would have to defend any action he took by way of regulations. He would have to prove that such regulations are necessary.

I come now to a statement in the bill itself, a statement which I find unusual and, perhaps, extraordinary. The statement in question can be found in several places in the bill and the conventions. I will read it from clause 2(2):

In the event of any inconsistency between the provisions of this Part, or the Convention, and the provisions of any other law, the provisions of this Part and the Convention prevail to the extent of the inconsistency.

This seems to raise the question as to whether Parliament is being asked, through this bill, which will become an act of the Parliament of Canada, to override provincial legislation if that provincial legislation is within the jurisdiction given to the provinces exclusively under the British North America Act. This, to me, is a very important question. In the past the federal government has, by and large, avoided getting itself into any position where it could be suggested that it is taking the position that an international treaty entered into by Canada would override, per se, provincial legislation.

Perhaps there is some other explanation for that statement. It may well be that it is intended to refer only to other federal legislation. But it states clearly:

In the event of any inconsistency between the provisions of this Part, or the Convention, and the provisions of any other law, the provisions of this Part and the Convention prevail to the extent of the inconsistency.

I would point out that there is a long history of resistance to this attitude, if it is an attitude of the federal government. As I said a moment ago, the federal government has not generally taken this particular position over the years.

Some honourable senators will remember a famous case involving this question. Mr. Bennett, when he was Prime Minister, towards the end of his period of office, I think in 1935, attempted to ratify, by action of the Parliament of Canada, certain provisions of conventions of the International Labour Organization. The provinces objected because in their view the subject matter of these conventions was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. The matter finally went to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and Lord Atkin, in giving his decision, made the very clear statement that the federal government "could not, merely by making promises to foreign countries, clothe itself with legislative authority inconsistent with the constitution which gave it birth."

After that the Canadian government reverted to its former practice of avoiding any attempt to ratify or implement conventions of the International Labour Organization where the subject matter was within the jurisdiction of the provinces. In fact, up to recent years—I have not checked the most recent years—of some 120 conventions at which Canada was a party, Canada did not ratify more than 20, on the ground that Canadian federal action would infringe on the rights of provinces. At that time the Department of External Affairs issued an official statement which said:

Canada is a federal country and the fact that most labour conventions are wholly or partly under provincial jurisdiction has placed obstacles in the way of the federal government, up to the present, ratifying many of the 110 conventions.

Perhaps honourable senators will bear with me if I cite a few of the instances where this principle seems to have been maintained, contrary to what I read as the intention of clause 2(2) and other similar statements in the bill before us. In 1947 there was a resolution of the United Nations asking all members to agree to place in the curricula of the schools a course on the United Nations itself. Canada specifically refused to give that undertaking. The Canadian delegate said:

In Canada, under our system of confederation, there is a federal government and nine provincial legislative assemblies.

As there were at that time.

By our Constitution, the government of each province has complete and exclusive jurisdiction and control over educational matters.

Therefore, everyone will understand that my government could not, if the proposal is adopted, take measures to encourage the teaching of the United Nations charter, et cetera, in the schools of Canada.

Much the same thing developed in 1948 at the time of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, where again it was stated officially on behalf of Canada:

Canada does not intend to invade other rights which are also important to the people of Canada, and by this I mean the rights of the provinces under our federal Constitution.

There are many other instances, coming almost up to date. I will cite only one more, in case it should be said that the present bill is a special case, because it deals with taxation. Taxation was involved in the matter of the International Civil Aviation Organization, where the federal government undertook that the establishment and the personnel of that authority in Montreal would not be subject to federal tax. That was its undertaking. The Province of Quebec said it would impose taxes, and it refused temporarily to agree to give the personnel diplomatic immunity. The matter was finally settled amicably. In the meantime, the federal government, to get itself out of an embarrassing situation, undertook to pay the taxes on behalf of this international organization. As I say, it was settled amicably because Quebec finally decided to grant the privileges and immunity. In this case, even the matter of succession duties—which are, in effect, taxes—was raised.

● (1430)

I cite that to illustrate that the principle of the federal government's not undertaking in any way to invade the exclusive legislative jurisdiction areas of the provinces seems to be contradicted in this bill. Perhaps Senator Lang, in his great wisdom and knowledge of the law, will tell me that that was not the intention, and that it is not the effect.

I make these remarks on this particular part of the bill, not to suggest for one minute that I am a great fighter for provincial rights. In this particular area, it is almost to the contrary. However, I have a feeling that this is an area which should be settled amicably between the federal government and the provinces—if anything can be settled amicably between them—for the simple reason that at the present time this conflict of jurisdiction is greatly endangering some aspects of our international relations.

Those of us who attended the meetings of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group a month ago, upon which Senator Macnaughton will be reporting shortly, ran up against this problem. When we were there a draft treaty had been submitted to both governments. It was initiated by the senior officials of both governments as a suggested treaty which would come into effect in respect to the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline, if that was the decision of both countries. Our American friends, citing recent legislation in Saskatchewan with respect to potash, asked, "What is the sense of making a treaty with you? You cannot enforce it against provincial action." They mentioned specifically that part of the pipeline that would go through one of the Canadian provinces might become subject to exorbitant or discriminative taxes. They asked us—and we could not give a definite answer, although we tried to—"What is the use of making an international agreement with you, if you cannot undertake to implement it?"

The United States is not quite in the same position because their international treaties automatically, without further implementation, become the domestic law of the land, which is not so in Canada, or any country still under the Westminster tradition. I therefore say, in contrast to former comments, that this is a matter which should be taken up and considered very seriously by the federal government. I do not know what the answer is.

We were asked, if the United States required assurances in respect to any investment they make or any rights of passage they might want, whether the federal government would undertake to say it would exercise the power of disallowance. My answer was, "If I were an American, I would try it, but I do not think you would have very much of a chance."

There are other powers, of course, available to the federal government to override provincial legislation which would run contrary to a treaty obligation taken by Canada.

As I said at the beginning, a bill such as this, even though the major subject may be double taxation, has implications beyond those that might interest the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. I repeat that I hope the practice will not be followed of referring all treaties, conventions and agreements to committees that might be interested in the subject matter. The fact is that every one of these treaties or conventions will have subject matter dealt with by some specific committee. Under rule 67(1) (g) the first group of matters to be referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee includes treaties and conventions, and so on. However, I am not insisting on it in this case, because if ever there was an excellent case for an exception this bill is it.

In conclusion, therefore, I would ask the senator learned in the law who sponsored the bill to let us know before we vote on it whether there is any possibility of matters within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures coming into conflict with the undertakings made in this bill, and whether that is any part of the reason why we seem to be asserting the authority, which I cited, that this bill overrides any inconsistency between this and any other legislation—I believe that is the phrase that is used. I believe this is an important consideration arising out of this bill, and I am quite sure we shall have satisfactory answers in due course from Senator Lang.

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for his contribution to this debate, and congratulate him on the obvious knowledge he displays in asking his questions.

Senator Flynn: Are you closing the debate?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the Honourable Senator Lang answering a question, or is he intending to make his closing speech?

Senator Lang: I shall reserve my answer, if any other honourable senator wishes to speak.

Senator Burchill: Honourable senator, before Senator Lang closes the debate may I make one comment? I was a member of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee when it was considering the Income Tax Act. I felt at the time that it was a most complicated and difficult matter. In his remarks yesterday Senator Lang congratulated the negotiators of these conventions because of the fact that Canada had a complicated taxation measure. I just wish to add that I think Canada has the most complicated, difficult and extraordinary Income Tax Act of any country in the world.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Lang speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Lang: If I may, honourable senators, I will close the debate by attempting to answer my honourable friend, Senator Grosart. Inadequate as my resources are to answer him with any degree of thoroughness or completeness, I hope my remarks will be of some assistance to him and others on the other side.

Working in reverse order, I would say that Senator Grosart has raised one of the most difficult questions possible in constitutional law by questioning the federal treaty-making power as it is exercised under this piece of legislation. I do not profess to have any expertise in this area, but I am as appreciative of the problems inherent in it as he is himself.

I would make just one observation, not as a constitutional expert or even as a lawyer but simply as a layman, namely, that inasmuch as these treaties themselves deal with taxation matters exclusively under the jurisdiction of the federal government, there can be little chance that they would infringe upon matters exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provinces. If there were such interference, it would only be by indirection, and probably through the effect of the interrelationship of our federal income tax system with the income tax systems of the various provinces. I trust that my honourable friend will raise that question when and if this bill is referred to committee. At that time I would hope that we might have the benefit of the presence of some of our colleagues, such as Senator Forsey, who are not members of the committee.

● (1440)

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator Lang: Senator Grosart questioned my statement with respect to the inclusion in the treaty of non-discriminatory provisions, and my reference to small business deductions under the Income Tax Act as they are affected by these non-discriminatory provisions. As honourable senators are aware, the small business deduction and the lower rate of tax on dividends from Canadian corporations is a benefit conferred under the Income Tax Act—if I can use the word “benefit” in referring to anything under that statute. It is a lessening of a tax load which is applicable only to Canadian residents. In other words, it discriminates against non-Canadian residents who might be taxable in Canada. In these treaties it is also specifically provided that these provisions will hold, notwithstanding the agreement against discrimination.

Senator Flynn: Would you repeat that?

Senator Lang: I think I had better.

The contracting parties here covenant that they will not discriminate against the nationals of the other contracting parties in matters of taxation. Having made that covenant there is a proviso: notwithstanding that we in Canada will discriminate against your nationals in connection with our application of the low rate of tax on dividends from Canadian corporations and the low rate of tax on small business corporations. I hope I have clarified my position.

Senator Lamontagne: It shows we are good negotiators.

Senator Lang: Speaking of good negotiators, I will pass for a moment to the reference I made to the increase in our withholding tax effective as of January 1 of this year.

Honourable senators will recall that in the tax reform measure that came into effect on January 1, 1972, there was a provision increasing the withholding tax to 25 per cent effective January 1, 1976. That rate of tax, now having come into effect, will be reduced to the 15 per cent provided for in these conventions, once this bill becomes law.

There will be some pretty unhappy nationals of other countries who are going to be subjected to that 25 per cent tax, until we have similar conventions with those countries. I suggest that this may be a very clever way of giving ourselves a good bargaining lever in advance, by raising our withholding tax rate and then bargaining for a convention, with the opportunity of offering a lower rate under the convention. I am not suggesting that that was the motivation for imposing this increased rate by the act of January 1, 1972, but it certainly would work to the advantage of Canadian negotiators at this stage of the game.

The honourable senator raised the question as to what is included in the term “artistic works.” Generally speaking, historically there has been no subsection to withholding tax, in countries with which we held a convention, on copyrights payable on artistic works other than motion picture films and films or videotapes for television use. That information is from the notes supplied to me by the particular department of government. Generally speaking, therefore, the withholding tax would not be attracted by copyright payments such as royalties on books and royalties on music, but such things as motion picture films and videotapes for television use would be excluded from this provision.

I think the honourable senator must bear in mind, when he is considering this problem—and I know how knowledgeable he is in matters of copyright, having been involved with copyright for many years—that the withholding tax exemption only flows if there is no “permanent establishment” in the country whence the royalties are arising. If such a permanent establishment does exist, representative of the copyright owner, then, of course, when those royalties are repatriated they are subject to the normal withholding tax, and they come back either by way of dividends or interest, or otherwise.

As to the differences between the various conventions covered by this bill, I can only state that the 5 per cent difference between the withholding tax on royalties applying to Israel and that applying to France and Belgium is in fact the only major or substantive distinction. There are many minor distinctions, because in the case of each convention the local laws affected by the convention in each country are designated and set out, and the definitions of “tax” under each convention are different, as they encompass different tax authorities within Belgium, Israel and France respectively. To the best of my knowledge, apart from the mechanical differences, which are self-evidently necessary, there are no other differences of a substantive nature.

The honourable senator asked me whether we had 16 or 19 treaties. Although I have not done the research I am sure he has in respect of the specific countries with which we had treaties at the time of the introduction of the Tax Reform Act, I will confess that I relied for my information on the notes provided me by a department of government. If he can get an answer that will satisfy him from a quotation from these notes, then he may have more ingenuity than I seem to possess. My note says: “At the present time Canada has 16 treaties in force which have to be revised (the French one is an example of this) as a result of tax reform.”

I take it from those words that 16 is the total, and that these three are part of those 16. But my supposition arises only from the wording of that paragraph which I just read. As to the balance, which I assume to be 13, conventions have already been negotiated and concluded with quite a few of those other countries, but they have not yet come to us for ratification. I am not sure of the number that are ready to be proceeded with now, but I believe they include treaties with the United Kingdom and four or five other countries. Eventually all 18 treaties will be renegotiated as opposed to being negotiated de novo. Thereafter, it is the intention of the government to approach upwards of another 24 countries with the invitation to conclude a treaty on these matters.

I was asked a question with respect to the situation today affecting those countries with which we had a treaty as of January 1, 1972, and with which we do not have a renegotiated treaty. The old treaty remains in effect during this period, and it is subject to the transitional rules set out in the Income Tax Act of 1971. Under those transitional rules the Governor in Council has extensive powers to provide for the changing situation arising under our treaty obligations during the interim period until a new treaty is concluded.

So far as the extent of the power to regulate contained in those transitional rules is concerned, I am unable to comment at the moment, but I think that the first real problem that the administration will be faced with arises from this increase in withholding tax to 25 per cent as of January 1. That is statutory, and the effect of it cannot be obviated by regulation under transitional rules. I presume the government thought at one time that as of January 1, 1976 all 16 treaties would have been renegotiated. In view of the complexity which Senator Burchill referred to, I am myself not at all surprised that there has been a time overrun, and it is certainly to be expected that the time overrun will last long into the future.

If I am correct in the note I made during the course of his speech, Senator Grosart asked a question concerning the situation as between Canada and other countries where no convention is in effect. In many ways, I think the answer is almost obvious—that country will impose taxes on Canadian residents, and it will impose a withholding tax or any other type of tax which its sovereignty permits it to impose, and without regard to the effects on Canada or Canadians. In like manner, we will be doing the same thing.

This lack of reciprocity could be quite damaging. I can conceive of its being seriously damaging, particularly in underdeveloped countries where we may have a large multinational operating for the first time, or where we may otherwise have first taken a position in their economy without such reciprocity existing. Generally speaking, though, apart from the potential for concern in that regard, the conventions that do exist cover our major trading and commercial partners in the western world. I would presume that a very large percentage of our international commercial transactions are with those countries with whom we do have conventions.

I hope, honourable senators, that I may have given you some adequacy of response to the questions put to me. I trust that the questioning of this bill will not cease here, but that it will carry on in committee.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of Senator Lang? He mentioned there was no problem with respect to the power of the federal government to enter into this type of convention since the taxation system of the federal government is completely within its jurisdiction. There is no doubt about that, but how does this affect the provinces which have their own income tax laws? I am thinking especially of Quebec, for instance. Does the convention include these provinces or not, and is there a difference as between a Canadian resident residing in Nova Scotia and a Canadian resident residing in Quebec?

Senator Lang: I am afraid, honourable senators, I am not going to muster the temerity to answer that question. I have read many learned and complicated articles in this area of concern, and I think one can get as many opinions as there are people giving the opinions. I think if another opinion is to be sought, it might well be sought elsewhere than from me in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: All right, I won't insist.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Lang moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 2, at 8 p.m.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Thursday, February 26, 1976.

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service has the honour to present its sixth report as follows:

In accordance with its Order of Reference of the House of Commons of Tuesday, October 22, 1974 and of the Senate of October 23, 1974 a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons considered Parts I, II and III of the documents entitled Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service of Canada, prepared by Mr. Jacob Finkelman, Q.C., Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. This Joint Committee was duly organized Wednesday, November 13, 1974 and held forty public meetings between that date and Thursday, June 19, 1975. Thirty-one briefs, including two reports by Mr. Finkelman entitled Supplementary Observations and Recommendations, have been received and considered by your Committee. A variety of interested parties have participated, including: bargaining agents representing employees in the Public Service of Canada; unions representing views outside the Public Service of Canada; the Treasury Board Secretariat representing the Government as employer; employer groups in the private sector; the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board and the Chairman of the Public Service Commission; personnel and labour relations specialists; university professors; and interested individuals.

THE INTERIM REPORT

In the course of these hearings, your Committee was persuaded by the evidence of several witnesses, and especially by that of Mr. Finkelman, that the Public Service Staff Relations Board was not properly constituted to carry the burden of the various responsibilities placed on it by the Act and that the capacity of the Public Service Staff Relations Board to handle its work load effectively and expeditiously was seriously constrained by its part-time membership. To mitigate these pressing administrative and operational difficulties, your Committee prepared an Interim Report and in it recommended the consolidation of the several functions of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. Your Committee recommended as well that members of the Public Service Staff Relations Board be able to sit in panels, and that sufficient full-time members be appointed to enable the Public Service Staff Relations Board to handle the matters referred to it with dispatch. This Report was laid before the Senate and before the House of Commons on May 29, 1975.

A Bill (Bill C-70), was given first reading on July 14 and was referred to your Committee for comments and suggestions. Minor technical amendments, unanimously supported by the Special Joint Committee, were made to the Bill and Bill C-70 was approved by Parliament on July 21, 1975.

Your Committee continued to hear representations until July 16, 1975 when it began the final evaluation of the evidence which had been placed before it.

Altogether 31 persons or organizations made representations and 49 persons appeared before the Committee and were questioned by members. The names of persons appearing before the Committee and of persons and organizations submitting briefs are listed in Appendix A.

SCOPE AND LIMITATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE'S INVESTIGATION

The task facing your Committee was a formidable one. Employer-employee relations in the Public Service of Canada are governed by several different statutes, principally the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the Public Service Employment Act and the Financial Administration Act. These statutes provide for two independent regulatory agencies in the area of Public Service employer-employee relations: the Public Service Commission which derives its authority and responsibility from the Public Service Employment Act; and the Public Service Staff Relations Board which derives its authority from the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Although both agencies are concerned with the rights of employees as individuals, the Public Service Staff Relations Board has the additional concern of the relationship of bargaining agents and the employers in collective bargaining. For most employees in the Public Service, the Treasury Board (which derives its authority from the Financial Administration Act) is the employer, working with and through deputy heads on matters relating to personnel management. For other employees, the statutory employer is the agency in which they are employed and these agencies, the "separate employers", also exercise employer status and have responsibilities under the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

From the point of view of employees, and also to a considerable extent from that of the bargaining agents, these statutory divisions of authority and responsibility raise awkward barriers against the logical processes of personnel administration in the Public Service and against the resolution of problems facing individuals and groups of employees. Despite the limitations on the scope of your Committee's inquiry which were imposed by its terms of reference, many witnesses, especially those representing employee interests, urged us to come to grips with any aspect of the total system which required improvement and change.

The problem is perhaps best understood from an historical perspective. From 1918 until 1967, personnel management in the Public Service was based on the Civil Service Act and administered by an independent agency, the Civil Service Commission. In 1967, following a comprehensive study and report by the Preparatory Committee on Collective Bargaining, and detailed consideration by a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, Parliament approved a new statute, the Public Service Staff Relations Act, to accommodate the added dimension of collective bargaining. The Civil Service Act (now the Public Service Employment Act) underwent major amendments. Significant changes were also made in the Financial Administration Act. Responsibilities which had been vested in the Civil Service Commission for fifty years now passed to the Treasury Board, re-cast as the "general manager" of the Public Service and "the employer" in the collective bargaining relationship. The major responsibility under the Public Service Employment Act became that of "staffing", (recruitment, selection, appointments and appeals) and was entrusted to the Public Service Commission. This rearrangement of responsibilities was seen at the time as providing an acceptable accommodation between those concepts and systems which had proved their worth over many decades and the new attitudes towards the regulation of employer-employee relationship which had gradually spread throughout Canada in the post-war period.

In the words of the Report of the Preparatory Committee on Collective Bargaining which was published in July, 1965:

"When the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act was passed in 1948, there was no apparent desire on the part of the Public Service employee organizations to have their relationship with the Government regulated by the legislation. Within a few years, it was being argued by some associations that the Public Service should be brought within the ambit of the Act and by others that a system of collective bargaining and arbitration designed specifically for the Public Service would be preferable. By about 1960, the latter view had become clearly dominant.

The formula of accommodation between the old and the new, which was devised in 1965 by the Preparatory Committee, and which led to the present legislative format, is of fundamental importance to the character and quality of employer-employee relationships in the Public Service. Your Committee has had to consider whether it should resist or respond to the request for a re-evaluation of the relationship between the present Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act. In reaching our conclusions in this regard, we considered both the terms of reference given to Mr. Finkelman when he undertook his study and the terms of the orders of reference given to us by the Senate and the House of Commons. Both are included in Appendix B of this report.

Guided by these terms of reference, your Committee has heard the views of interested groups and persons on the Finkelman recommendations. This report constitutes our assessments, conclusions and recommendations on the major submissions made to us.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

In his first appearance before your Committee, the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, Mr. Finkelman, said:

"Although a number of the bargaining agents urged that I recommend a substantial expansion of their role in regulating appointments to and within the Public Service, I decided that, whatever, the merits of such changes, I had no mandate to undertake policy initiatives that would alter, in any substantial manner, the traditional responsibility of the Public Service Commission for regulation of the merit principle. If in the course of time such an alteration is to be made, the preparation for such a major shift in public policy will need to be much broader based than my investigation."

Your Committee heard representations from bargaining agents for expansion of the scope of collective bargaining into areas now administered by the Public Service Commission. On December 4, 1974, Mr. Carson, Chairman of the Public Service Commission, urged the Special Joint Committee to review the entire Public Service Employment Act rather than only those sections relating to Mr. Finkelman's recommendations. Over the course of the Committee hearings the mood of the bargaining agents, realizing the scope and implications of their demands, changed. The Public Service Alliance of Canada at its appearance before the Special Joint Committee requested the establishment by the Government of a committee to study the Public Service Employment Act and make recommendations within two years.

In May of 1975, the Public Service Commission appeared again before the Committee and supported the altered Alliance view. The Public Service Commission had modified its approach and, in its second submission to the Special Joint Committee, recommended that:

- (a) a review of the Public Service Employment Act and the role of the Commission be undertaken by a special task force; and
- (b) immediate amendments to the Public Service Employment Act should be limited in the meantime to necessary technical adjustments.

Your Committee concluded that the comprehensive re-evaluation of personnel management in the Public Service of Canada implicit in a review of the Public Service Employment Act was beyond our scope and resources.

Because of these representations and of the consensus reached as to the need for a comprehensive study of the issues and the alternatives, which must be thoroughly assessed before Parliament can deal with the Public Service Employment Act, your Committee recommends:

1. That a special task force be established to review the Public Service Employment Act and the role of the Commission in personnel management and employer-employee relations in the Public Service; and
2. That the review include an examination of the role assigned the Public Service Commission and its relationship to the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Public Service Staff Relations Board.
3. That the review entail a study of the relationship of the Public Service Commission and the departments and agencies; and consider the development of an audit system for performance accountability with respect to matters delegated to departments and agencies under the Public Service Employment Act.

We are satisfied that Parliament, at the earliest opportunity, should correct certain problems which the Public Service Commission indicated it has encountered in its administration of the Public Service Employment Act, as it now reads.

Your Committee therefore recommends:

4. That because two or three years may elapse before the aforementioned review results in legislative changes, certain revisions to the Public Service Employment Act be made immediately to allow the Public Service Commission to operate efficiently under the present statute and that the Public Service Commission, after consultation with the bargaining agents and the employer, develop proposals for such revisions.

5. That Parliament consider the proposed changes to the Public Service Employment Act as soon as possible, bearing in mind their relationship to changes recommended in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE: FACTS AND FIGURES

The Government of Canada is the largest employer in the country. Though not all government employees are public servants, there were in April, 1975, almost 250,000 public servants represented under the Public Service Staff Relations Act by fourteen different bargaining agents in 104 bargaining units.

According to evidence presented to the Committee, between the introduction of collective bargaining in the Public Service in 1967, and November 30, 1975, there have been 449 collective agreements—73.9% (332) by voluntary agreement; 15.1% (68) following arbitration; 8.6% (39) following conciliation; and 2.4% (11) following a legal strike.

Though Parliament has several times enacted back-to-work legislation for disputes falling under the Canada Labour Code, at no time has such action been necessary for the 11 lawful strikes under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. There have been however more than 50 unlawful strikes, since collective bargaining was introduced to the Public Service of Canada in 1967 and more appropriate means appear to be necessary to curtail unlawful activity. If the record had been different then we might have very well concluded that the assumptions underlying collective bargaining in the Public Service of Canada ought to be changed.

The Public Service Alliance is the largest Public Service union, representing some 165,000 employees. The next largest union is the Canadian Union of Postal Workers which represents 23,000 employees. The Professional Institute of the Public Service has been certified to bargain on behalf of approximately 17,000 employees. Other certified bargaining agents are: the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada, 16,500 employees; the Canadian Postmasters' Association, 8,200 employees; the Association of Postal Officials of Canada, 3,600 employees; Local 2228, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 2,700 employees; the Federal Government Dockyards Trades and Labour Council, 2,600 employees; the Economists, Sociologists and Statisticians Association, 2,300 employees; the Research Council Employees Association, 2,200 employees; the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, 2,150 employees; the Council of Graphic Arts Unions of the Public Service of Canada, 1,250 employees; the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, 1,000 employees; the Professional Association of Foreign Service Officers, 1,000 employees; and the Syndicat général du cinéma et de la télévision, 400 employees. Statistical tables reflecting significant developments in the collective bargaining structures and process from 1968 to 1975 are shown in Appendix C.

THE PUBLIC'S INTEREST IN PUBLIC SERVICE BARGAINING

The aim of collective bargaining is to reconcile the interest of employed persons in improving the terms and conditions of their employment with management's interest in obtaining operational efficiency.

In the Public Service, it is important that this reconciliation be effected in such a way as to ensure that services for which taxes are paid be not interrupted. It is the increasing interruption of such services, sometimes even to the degree of imperilling the public interest that now causes serious concern.

Some witnesses before your Committee argued that it is wrong for public services ever to be disrupted and it is wrong, therefore, for the Government to condone disruption by permitting public servants to strike in any circumstances. Others argued that only when they are allowed to engage in free collective bargaining, including resort to strike, can public servants obtain satisfactory conditions of employment.

The right to strike, however, is not an issue confined to the federal public service. Your Committee estimates that there are well in excess of 2,000,000 persons employed in public services in Canada. Of these, 250,000 in the employ of the Federal Government are subject to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The rest include persons employed by federal Crown Corporations, provincial governments and Crown Corporations, municipalities, school boards and hospital boards. In varying degree and with certain important exceptions, these employees too have the right to strike, as do employees governed by federal and provincial labour laws in the private sector who provide services which may be considered essential by the public. It is therefore to be assumed that a large proportion of the work-force engaged in providing services which affect the public interest in Canada supports the continuation of the right to a withdrawal of services.

Some who believe the right to strike in the Public Service of Canada should be withdrawn tend to disregard the achievements of the parties since 1967. Apart from the recent actions by certain union leaders, the Public Service unions which have been certified as bargaining agents under the Public Service Staff Relations Act deserve, with few exceptions, public appreciation on several counts.

They have overcome the inherent organizational fragmentation and geographical dispersion of their constituents and brought them together into stable and enduring national bargaining units for the purposes of collective bargaining.

They have written viable constitutions to govern their internal affairs which adopt and preserve within their organizations the democratic traditions of this country. Despite the immediate climate of the collective bargaining relationships and the tensions generated by disputes, their leaders have generally operated within the law and have endeavoured to restrain those who counselled otherwise. Public Service unions have brought to the negotiating table a respect for rational arguments, institutions and processes producing an approach to settlements good enough to merit study by many other jurisdictions.

There is a need to recognize and give credit as well to those who have represented the employer, both in achieving the structure of relationship which was recommended in the Report of the Preparatory Committee on Collective Bargaining and in maintaining day-to-day relationships in departments and agencies, where collective agreements are interpreted and administered.

Considering our terms of reference, the immediate requirements for change, the evidence of the interested parties and the record of collective bargaining in the Public Service of Canada, your Committee concludes that there is much merit in the system created by the legislation enacted in 1967. After all the evidence was heard and debated, Parliament added new dimensions to collective bargaining in Canada. In the future, the assumptions underlying collective bargaining may change but your Committee's mandate and direction focused on finding solutions to today's problems. Therefore, our purpose was to strengthen and improve the collective bargaining process in the Public Service of Canada wherever possible.

It is perhaps appropriate that your Committee's study should have been conducted during the course of the longest strike that has occurred since the collective bargaining in the Public Service became law. We have been obliged to consider very carefully whether Parliament in 1967, in its concern that public servants should not be deprived of rights granted to others, went too far. Experience over the past eight years allows us to examine the consequences of granting the right to strike for the Public Service. Your Committee decided to determine where to draw the line between the rights of public servants and the rights of the public: at what point the public, through the Government and then Parliament, should be prepared to intervene in the collective bargaining process; and, if intervention is appropriate, whether it should be by a continuing statutory prohibition or by an ad hoc response to a particular situation.

Your Committee concluded that where the activities of the parties engaged in collective bargaining do not adversely affect the public interest, the collective bargaining process should be free to operate without government intervention. But when the public interest becomes adversely affected, Government and Parliament should be prepared to intervene.

The assumption upon which Parliament granted the right to strike in the Public Service of Canada in 1967 was that the safety and security of the public were assured. The exception to the right to strike for some "designated" employees made it possible for Parliament to grant that right to most public servants since their services were not essential to the safety or security of the public.

The requirement to ensure that services affecting the safety or security of the public be uninterrupted remains unquestioned. None of the bargaining agents appearing before the Committee disagreed with the concept of the "designated employees"; that is, that certain persons performing duties relating to the safety or security of the public should be denied the right to strike.

Your Committee therefore concludes:

6. That the general principle of collective bargaining law governing the Public Service of Canada is sound and the rights granted should not be withdrawn merely to overcome inconvenience.

7. That the bargaining agents, subject to the conditions of the statute and the recommendations to follow, continue to be able to choose arbitration or conciliation-strike, as the method of dispute resolution.

8. That there is a need for additional procedural and substantive amendments to the law governing the collective bargaining relationship, and more appropriate remedies for unlawful activity.

With respect to the national economic or social impact of a strike by public servants, or indeed by any other group of employees, your Committee has no doubt that where the welfare of the community as a whole is concerned, the right to strike is not sacred and its suspension is the responsibility of the Government and Parliament or the appropriate Legislature.

The continued protection of the national economic or social interest can be provided by statute at the cost of a total denial of some rights now available to persons providing services to the public; or it can be protected by granting a statutory right to strike and imposing on Government and Parliament the responsibility of determining when a strike has so affected the public interest that the right must be suspended.

Your Committee recognizes that the public interest can be adequately protected by Government and Parliament determining when and where the public interest is adversely affected. When Parliament is dissolved, the Governor-in-Council should be similarly empowered.

Your Committee therefore recommends:

9. That when Parliament is dissolved, the Governor-in-Council be empowered to suspend the right to strike, whenever in its opinion a strike is adverse to the public interest.

In order to provide additional mechanisms to facilitate settlements, the Committee examined the techniques available under the Canada Labour Code and endorses the provision enabling the establishment of Inquiry Commissions. Your Committee therefore recommends:

10. That the President of the Privy Council, upon the recommendation of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, acting on his own initiative or upon application, may refer a dispute or difference between employer and employee that exists or is apprehended to exist to an Inquiry Commission for investigation and report to the President of the Privy Council.

DESIGNATED EMPLOYEES

Both Mr. Finkelman, in his report, and the Treasury Board, in its representations to the Committee, proposed that the definition of designated services should be extended. In some of the representations from organizations outside the public service, suggestions were made which would have broadened the definition to include "essential services". Your Committee feels that the phrase "essential services" is too difficult to define and would lead to the inclusion of most public servants. In other words, the right to strike would be granted to public servants only to be denied by another process. In balance, we conclude that some extension of designated services beyond safety or security is necessary to ensure that "health" be included, and to add a new dimension that of protection of public property.

Your Committee does not believe that it is the desire or in the interest of any employee or bargaining agent to indirectly damage or destroy public property, to jeopardize national treasures, or to expose to risk the outcome of important experiments through the withdrawal of services. The results of such destruction would in some circumstances interfere with a return to work despite a settlement. We accept the assurances of the representatives of the bargaining agents that appeared before us that special arrangements can and will always be made to guarantee protection. We do not doubt the good faith of those making these representations but we believe that the public should have statutory assurance in these areas and that such minimum protection no longer be a subject of bargaining. Your Committee therefore recommends that the law be revised to provide for the designation of employees:

11. To protect members of the public against an imminent threat to their health, where the withdrawal of services would pose such a threat.

12. To ensure the continuation of important experiments, particularly long-term experiments or research where the withdrawal of services would place them in jeopardy.

13. To maintain the necessary physical environment for the security of national treasures.

14. To ensure that temperature of all public buildings does not fall below 5° Celsius. (The maintenance of at 5° Celsius will have no detrimental effect on the employees' strike nor will it provide any assistance to the employer to continue operations.)

Though the bargaining agents all agreed that the concept of designation was valid there was criticism of the number of people designated, the identification of the persons designated and the designation process itself. It was argued that the compilation of the list of designated employees should be left to the parties to negotiate. This view assumes that the prime concern of the parties is to protect the public interest. Experience does not necessarily support this view. Instead, it shows that the public interest tends to become secondary to the primary subject of bargaining terms and conditions of employment. Eight years of experience has shown that the designation process has become integrally related to the negotiation process with all the devices of strategy, advantage, timing, play and counter-play. In some circumstances the employer has inflated its list on the assumption that in subsequent bargaining some designations would be lost. On the other hand, the record also reveals that too often the initial response of bargaining agents to the employer's proposed list of designated employees was to object to every position on the list. In other circumstances, for strategic reasons, bargaining agents have agreed to proposed designations that would otherwise have been unwarranted.

Your Committee deplores these techniques. These manoeuvres have produced a lack of confidence on the part of employees in the integrity of the process. We therefore conclude that the process by which employees are designated under the Act is unsatisfactory.

Under the present legislation, the designation process becomes operative only where the bargaining unit has chosen the conciliation-strike route as the dispute resolution mechanism and the designation has application and effect only during the period in which a legal strike occurs in that cycle of bargaining. Your Committee believes that employees should be designated because they perform duties protecting the public interest and not because of the dispute resolution process chosen; and further that if the duties of a position are designated, the incumbent should be required to perform those duties until a case can be made that justifies the removal of the "designation" status.

Later in this report, the penalties recommended for unlawful activities are set out and distinctions are drawn between designated and non-designated employees. Designated employees or those accessory to preventing designated employees from performing their services should be subject to the appropriate penalties whenever they unlawfully withdraw their services.

After eight years of experience with the designation process, one might reasonably expect the system to have matured and stabilized. On the contrary, we find that there is neither stability nor continuity in the existing processes of designation. In order to improve the designation process and to ensure that the public interest is protected under the collective bargaining process your Committee recommends:

15. That the Public Service Staff Relations Act be amended to require the designation of all employees whose functions involve the provision of services which in accordance with this Act are to be provided without interruption.

16. That the bargaining agents and the employers continue to be required to determine, by agreement, the employees in the bargaining units who are to be designated.

17. That the Public Service Staff Relations Board continue to be empowered to make determinations regarding the appropriateness of a "designation" where the parties cannot reach agreement.

18. That, where necessary, the techniques of examination, mediation and reference to established precedent be employed to resolve disagreements in connection with the determination of designated employees and to assist in what will be initially an extensive task.

19. That permanent lists of designated employees for each bargaining unit be filed with the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

20. That the Public Service Staff Relations Board establish appropriate processes for ensuring that the lists of positions and incumbents are kept up to date and for dealing with proposed amendments in the lists submitted to it by the employer or the bargaining agents concerned.

21. That the incumbents of the designated positions be informed by the Public Service Staff Relations Board of their obligation under the Act with special reference to the penalties for unlawful activity.

22. That the processes referred to in Recommendation 20 distinguish among proposals which involve a change in incumbent, a new position comparable to a position previously designated, and a position in respect of which the employer cannot rely on a precedent.

PROSECUTION OF OFFENCES UNDER THE ACT

During the course of the hearings and deliberations of this Committee the largest outbreak of unlawful strike activity in the eight-year history of the legislation took place. Between October 1974 and September 1975, the Treasury Board sought consent from the Public Service Staff Relations Board, as required by the provisions of Section 106 of the Act, to prosecute some 2,300 employees in 6 bargaining units for unlawful strike activity before the courts. Approximately 940 of these were alleged to be designated employees. Insofar as we can ascertain, in most cases where consent has been granted, the employer has initiated prosecutions in the courts. The judicial process has proven to be cumbersome and expensive, and the court decisions lacked uniformity.

The present two-stage process with its substantial costs, delays, fragmented administration, absence of precedents, and inconsistent penalties has led all parties to agree that the present system for dealing with unlawful activity is not working well and is inappropriate.

At first it was suggested that all prosecutions should be taken directly to the courts, thereby increasing the number of forums and simultaneous hearings. Arguments opposing this suggestion pointed to: judges unfamiliar with the public service and the relevant statutes, lawyers with insufficient time to prepare for such a mass of separate actions, an inability to group respondents or to make procedural arrangements on a national basis, and the lack of precedent or deterrent value.

In the context of this analysis, Mr. Finkelman suggested that allegations of unlawful activities by designated employees be heard by the Board and that those of non-designated employees be heard by the courts after consent is obtained.

This led to a proposal carefully considered but not accepted by the Committee which suggested that in cases of unlawful activities by designated employees, the employer should have three alternatives:

- (a) To impose discipline, subject to the review by the Board of the appropriateness of the discipline, or its extent, through the grievance procedure.
- (b) To seek remedial action by application to the Board, the Board to be empowered to impose a monetary penalty or to direct that disciplinary action be taken against the employee.
- (c) To seek consent to prosecute an employee in the courts, the Board to be empowered to substitute for consent, on its own initiative or on request of an employee, a penalty or a direction that disciplinary action be taken in accordance with option (b).

Under this proposal, the employer would be entitled to resort to only one of these alternatives with respect to an employee involved in any one offence. On its face, this model appears to allow the employer complete freedom in the selection of the alternative, in that, theoretically all offences could still give rise to consent to prosecute proceedings and determination by the courts.

The existing consent to prosecute proceedings is one of the main characteristics of the present process and has been found to be cumbersome.

Your Committee believes that what is required is a procedure that reduces reliance on "consent proceedings" and on the courts. To achieve this objective, your Committee concludes that the statute should identify three procedural options for dealing with unlawful activity:

- (i) Disciplinary action by the employer, reviewable through the grievance process and adjudication.
- (ii) Prosecution of an offence before the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and disposition of the case by the Board.
- (iii) Prosecution of an offence in the courts and disposition of the case by the courts.

Your Committee is convinced that minor infractions of the statute should be dealt with directly by the employer, that is, utilization of the traditional authority of the employer to deal with employee misconduct. If the employer's imposition of penalties is fair, the basic objective of deterring future unlawful activity will be served. In the view of your Committee, in other cases of unlawful activity, the Public Service Staff Relations Board should be provided with the necessary authority to deal with any infraction of the legislation. Resort to the courts should be limited to those cases considered to be serious offences.

With respect to those classes of action which we believe should continue to be subject to prosecution in the courts, the question arises as to whether prosecution should be dependent upon the consent of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. In this matter, we were persuaded by evidence presented to us by the Board's Chairman, Mr. Finkelman, who in addition to his experience in the administration of his section of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, was both architect and administrator of similar provisions of the Ontario Labour Relations Act. In a submission made to us on June 5, 1975, Mr. Finkelman reflected on his reluctance to recommend removal of the "consent to prosecute provisions" of the Act.

"One of the reasons for my hesitation is that such an approach would represent a sharp departure from a pattern that prevails in the legislation applicable to the private sector in most jurisdictions in Canada. Even if we were to conclude that such a requirement had outlived its usefulness in industrial relations generally, I believe the elimination of the requirement insofar as it relates to employees in the federal Public Service alone would open the door to a charge that such employees were being discriminated against, particularly so since in the public sector, the employer is both employer and government."

To achieve the general aim of limiting the involvement of the courts and placing greater emphasis for this responsibility on the parties concerned and on the Public Service Staff Relations Board, you Committee recommends:

23. That three procedural remedies be available for dealing with unlawful actions:

- (i) Disciplinary action by the employer, reviewable through the grievance process and adjudication.
- (ii) Prosecution of an offence before the Public Service Staff Relations Board, and disposition of the case by the Public Service Staff Relations Board.
- (iii) Prosecution of an offence in the courts after obtaining consent to prosecute from the Public Service Staff Relations Board and disposition of the case by the courts.

24. That the statute provide a schedule of offences and penalties applicable to the class of offence.

MAXIMUM PENALTIES FOR UNLAWFUL ACTIVITY

Your Committee has identified the following classes of actions which, under the present Act, are unlawful. These are:

- (a) Declaration, authorization or incitement of unlawful strike.
- (b) Discrimination against employees or employee organizations prohibited under the Act.
- (c) Participation of employees in an unlawful strike.
- (d) Intimidation of employees.
- (e) Other prohibited acts by unions, employers or representatives thereof.

Having identified the nature of the offences your Committee constructed a schedule of penalties suitable to the infraction. Your Committee further decided that if the offence involves designated employees, it should in whatever class it falls, be regarded as more serious and should therefore attract more severe penalties than similar offences which do not involve designated employees.

Our recommendations with respect to the classes of offences which should be identified in the Act, the procedural options which should be available to the injured party in prosecuting an alleged offence, and the maximum penalties which the act should prescribe for each offence, are set out below. In determining the scale of the maximum penalty which should apply, your Committee reviewed and utilized those provided in Section 190 of Part V of the Canada Labour Code (which of course does not contain references to designated employees). With respect to offences which did not involve designated employees, our recommendations adhere generally to those established by the Code. However, we have recommended that the maximum penalties, where the infractions involve designated employees or interfere with the performance of duties by designated employees, be at least double those imposed against non-designated employees.

So that unlawful activity may be dealt with more effectively, your Committee recommends:

25. That unlawful offences under the Act be dealt with by identifying the party, the nature of the illegal activity, the available option and the forum before which the hearing would take place, and also the maximum penalties for each unlawful activity. (See Schedule 1)

Your Committee heard references on the practices which secure the termination of unlawful activity in exchange for a waiver of prosecution or disciplinary action. However, your Committee deplores such agreements where services affecting the safety or security of the public have been interrupted by an unlawful strike or lockout and therefore recommends:

26. That where "designated employees" have interrupted or impaired services by an unlawful strike or there has been an unlawful lockout and no action has been initiated by the employer or bargaining agent against the contravening parties, then a Special Commissioner whose office shall be independent should be empowered to initiate legal proceedings.

27. That the Special Commissioner's authority to initiate proceedings be limited to the period beginning 15 days after the date of the alleged contravention, and terminating 45 days later.

28. That the Special Commissioner should not be able to initiate any action against any person if a proceeding in respect to that offence has already been initiated.

In its consideration of the deterrent effect of fines on unlawful activity, your Committee recognized the difficulty associated with the concept of a fine which is imposed on the Government as employer. To constitute a deterrent, a fine must have the effect of penalizing the offender. In the case of the Government as employer, the financial impact of a penalty would be significant. Moreover the Government, in its role as custodian of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, simply removes the money from one pocket and puts it into another. The solution to this problem, in the opinion of your Committee, is to convert the nominal economic penalty into a real political penalty by applying the technique now provided in the Act (Section 21) for the enforcement of an order of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, that is, by tabling a report of the Public Service Staff Relations Board in Parliament.

Your Committee also concludes that in cases of unlawful activity it would be useful to identify in the reference, in the case of the employer, where appropriate, the offending department or agency; and in the case of the union, where appropriate, the offending local.

Your Committee therefore recommends.

29. That fines levied by the Public Service Staff Relations Board on employees, or officials of the employer, or on a bargaining agent, be recoverable if necessary by an order of the court.

30. That where the employer is in contravention, the Public Service Staff Relations Board should be required to provide the Minister through whom it reports to Parliament, with a description of the offence, and the Minister should be required to table the Public Service Staff Relations Board's report in Parliament within a prescribed period.

31. That where the action has been taken in the case of the employer by a department or agency, or in the case of a bargaining agent by a component, division or local of the bargaining agent, the department, agency, component, division or local should be identified.

Your Committee also concludes that the additional remedy of issuing cease and desist orders be attached to the declaration of unlawful strike presently provided by statute at Section 103 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The Public Service Staff Relations Board now has the authority, upon application, to find that certain activities constitute an unlawful strike. This procedure should be expanded, in accordance with Mr. Finkelman's recommendation, to include unlawful lockout. Because there is no remedy attached to the present procedure which is merely declaratory, your Committee recommends:

32. That the Public Service Staff Relations Board, upon application, and when it finds that there is an unlawful strike or lockout, be empowered to issue a cease and desist order in all cases of violation.

33. That such order be filed in court and entered in the same manner as a judgment and be enforceable as such.

CLASSIFICATION

Under the present statute, classification standards are established unilaterally by the employer, although the employer consults with the interested bargaining agent before implementation and before undertaking changes. Evidence presented to your Committee by the Treasury Board and the bargaining agents was divergent in relation to the effectiveness of the consultative process. In his original recommendations, Mr. Finkelman concluded that "it is not feasible to make classification bargainable at this time". Instead he recommended a formalized consultation process and mediation as a first step to eventual negotiation. However, after reviewing the evidence presented to your Committee, which indicated that the unions were prepared to negotiate classification standards outside the normal process of collective bargaining, Mr. Finkelman, in subsequent representations to your Committee, proposed that classification should be bargainable as follows:

(a) in the context of a separate bargaining cycle corresponding to the proposed consultation cycle; and as well

(b) in an ordinary round of negotiations where proposals for a revision in the relevant classification standard were included in the demands of the bargaining agent.

Conciliation boards would be prohibited from dealing with references relating to the revision of a classification standard. However, all classification disputes would be referable to arbitration, whether they arose in the context of ordinary bargaining or "separate cycle" bargaining. Resort to strike or lockout to resolve classification disputes would be prohibited. Mr. Finkelman also endorses proposals made by the Public Service Alliance for the arbitration of disputes arising out of the negotiation of a new or revised classification standard on a "sequential" basis. This can be done by identifying the chronological order of the development or redevelopment of a standard, identifying the sequence of decision points which occur in this process, and providing for reference to arbitration of disputes arising at any of the decision points.

Though he accepted the view of the bargaining agents that the legislation should be amended to provide for bargaining on classification standards "at this time", Mr. Finkelman was insistent that a break-in period of "systematic consultation" with recourse to mediation should be imposed by law. The parties, including the Public Service Staff Relations Board, required this time to accustom themselves to the process before eventually engaging in the negotiation and arbitration of classification standards.

During the course of our examination of the extension of the scope of bargaining to include classification standards, and our evaluation of Mr. Finkelman's recommendations and of the representations made to us on this subject by the several bargaining agents and the Treasury Board, your Committee participated in the evolution of a "model" which drew its inspiration from many sources. In our view, an approach to the problem has been devised which, to some extent may have reduced the employer's apprehension on the one hand and on the other attracted widespread support from bargaining agents, who in their initial propositions had not come to grips fully with the complexity of the undertaking.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the law should provide for some extension of the scope of bargaining so as to include classification standards, and recommends as follows:

34. That, having regard to the established jurisdiction of bargaining agents in the Public Service, bargaining classification standards be interpreted to mean the determination of the relative worth of jobs within an occupational group.

35. That provision be made in the law for the bargaining of classification standards following the three-year period after promulgation.

36. That collective agreements incorporating classification standards be treated as "special agreements having their own duration".

37. That in accordance with regulations made by the Public Service Staff Relations Board, disputes arising in negotiations and involving the development or redevelopment of a classification standard be subject to reference to and arbitration by the Board.

38. That the provisions of the Act relating to the appointment of conciliation boards or conciliators not apply in cases of disputes arising out of the negotiations of classification standards, but that the Board be empowered to appoint a mediator.

39. That resort to strike or lockout to resolve classification disputes be prohibited.

40. That arbitration of the pay plan attached to a classification standard be dealt with by the Public Service Staff Relations Board only with the consent of both parties.

The bargaining agents all supported the view that adjudication should be broadened to include classification grievances. This proposal was concurred in by representatives of Treasury Board. Your Committee therefore recommends:

41. That classification grievances which are not resolved in the grievance process should be referable to adjudication.

TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE AND LONG-TERM LAYOFF

Modernization, technological change and economic adjustment to the market, or indeed any significant modification in the way in which goods are produced and distributed or services provided may seriously affect the terms and conditions of employment and the security of employees. The computer revolution and advances in transportation technology, agriculture or health are all obvious examples. Currently in the Public Service the automation of mail sorting is the largest and most evident example of "technological change" which may have a serious impact on the employees involved.

In April 1974, the Post Office dispute on technological change erupted into an unlawful strike which was resolved by an informal agreement. Your Committee heard several briefs from bargaining agents, especially from the postal unions, demanding that the impact of technological change on terms and conditions of employment be made negotiable.

Historically, employers have had the right to terminate an individual's employment temporarily or permanently, or to employ him in a less attractive position. The Report of the Task Force on Labour Relations (1968) whose studies and report preceded the revision of the federal labour law in 1971, used the term "industrial conversion" to emphasize the way in which any modification or modernization of industry can threaten the security of employees. In its report, the Task Force wrote:

"The term industrial conversion embraces all major changes that may have a permanent disruptive effect on the employment relationship. It covers far more than technological change or automation, since these are only one set of forces at work leading to such disruption . . .

Industrial conversion has a vital part to play in a dynamic growing economy. Change is essential to society and to individual enterprises. To society, change is the key to the increased productivity necessary to meet latent public needs and unsatisfied desires . . .

But industrial conversion is not without cost to those caught in its path. There is no evidence to suggest that change in general produces a net reduction in employment; but it is the cause of worker displacement and on-the-job disruption. The costs for those adversely affected can be great, and to them it is of little comfort that society as a whole, their employer, and even their fellow workers may benefit from the change. They want to know that is going to be done to protect them."

When the Federal Labour Code was modified in 1971, the statute imposed an obligation on employers to give notice and to re-negotiate "terms and conditions, or security of employment" when a significant number of employees would be affected by the "technological change".

In his Supplementary Observations and Recommendations, Mr. Finkelman wrote:

"In a public service where units are service-wide and very large, the question arises what would be a significant number of employees in any particular circumstances? Under the Code, the power to make regulations specifying the number of employees or the method of determining the number of employees to be deemed to be "significant" for the purposes of the technological provisions of the Code is vested in the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Canada Labour Relations Board. In short, the legislation recognizes that there is a "political" element involved. If the same formula were applicable in the public sector, should the political consideration be left to the Governor in Council, in effect the employer, or should it be vested exclusively in the reconstituted Public Service Staff Relations Board?"

With respect to the provisions of the Labour Code which relate to the right of employees to strike where their interests are threatened by technological change, Mr. Finkelman wrote:

... the Code provisions contemplate that a collective agreement can be reopened during its lifetime and the union can resort to a strike if it cannot reach satisfactory agreement through negotiation with the employer. Whatever the merits or otherwise of the provisions of the Code in respect of the private sector, they would, if applied to the public sector, expand the opportunity for legal strike action and thereby increase the threat of deprivation of public services.

During the period in which representations were being made to your Committee on this subject by Mr. Finkelman, there was a dispute over technological change between the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. The parties eventually agreed that any dispute arising out of the impact of technological change on employees in the bargaining unit during the term of the collective agreement would be dealt with by reference to a Special Arbitration Tribunal established by the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. The award of the tribunal would be final and binding on the parties. The capacity of the employer to implement change is inhibited only by the prescribed period of notice. In effect, events overtook both the existing legislation and the work of your Committee.

Your Committee concluded that unless there is a capacity to establish duration dates that make sense in relation to the issues negotiated, the agreements or awards might well prove exercises in futility because they might lapse before their purposes were achieved. For example, we were advised that the conversion of manned lighthouses to automated lights is taking five years. While it may be desirable for the law to stipulate that these special agreements should be read and interpreted in the context of the operative collective agreement, except where their provisions conflict with or supersede a provision of the ordinary collective agreement, the parties or the arbitrator must have the capacity to establish an appropriate duration. However, we would also suggest that, if the law is to provide for "special agreements" of long duration in circumstances where that appears appropriate, it would probably need to provide as well for a "re-opener" mechanism, on application of one of the parties to the Board, to order renegotiation after a prescribed period of time where circumstances so warrant.

Another problem faced by your Committee involved the question of whether or not the employer should be relieved of the responsibility to give notice if, in the employer's judgment, the provisions of the collective agreement already provide appropriate protection. We conclude that the answer is "No". Notice should be provided in all cases of technological change, defined as we recommend. If adequate notice has been provided prior to or during negotiations, or if the employer asserts and the union agrees that no new or different forms of protection are needed to protect the particular situation, the matter could be disposed of without negotiation. However, in the absence of initial agreement on the matter, negotiations should take place and in the course of time would be followed by a special agreement or by impasse and arbitration. In our judgment, such an approach will provide a workable procedural link between protections provided in the ordinary collective agreement and additional or special protections which may be necessary to deal with a particular area of change.

With respect to the present involvement of the Public Service Commission in the area of technological change, and its existing jurisdiction over lay-off, recall and reassignment, the Finkelman proposals would transfer authority for lay-off from the Commission to the Treasury Board and permit lay-off to be bargained and arbitrated. However, recall (i.e. the placement of lay-offs in vacant positions) would be left to the Commission, subject to whatever preferences might be established by statute. The relationship between the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act, in this matter, will form part of the review contemplated in Recommendations 1, 2 and 3.

In relation to long-term lay-off, the Finkelman recommendations are consistent with and constitute an inherent dimension of our recommendations. These recommendations are not applicable to temporary "off-duty" status where there is no loss of job security or need for reappointment. Your Committee supports the concept recognized by all parties in the various collective agreements of "entitlement to pay for services rendered".

Your Committee recommends:

42. That changes in technology, operations, organization or any other dimension of the structure or character of the employer's resources to provide service to the public be recognized as a prerogative of the employer.

43. That the employer be obliged to bargain the impact of adverse changes on employees which may occur as a consequence of the employer's actions referred to in Recommendation 42 above, including the advance notice of such changes and the details to accompany the notice.

44. That the Public Service Staff Relations Board have the authority and responsibility to provide for a mediator to assist the parties where there are differences.

45. That the Public Service Staff Relations Board be empowered to arbitrate or to establish an arbitration tribunal to arbitrate unresolved disputes arising out of negotiations undertaken to deal with technological change.

46. That resort to strike or lockout to resolve technological change disputes be prohibited.

47. That the statute prohibit the employer from laying off an employee during the period of notice recommended in Recommendation 43 above, and that the parties be empowered to negotiate, and the arbitrator to establish where relevant, the compensation to be paid to employees whose job security will be or has been adversely affected by the changes.

48. That any agreement reached or arbitration award made as a result of negotiations involving technological change be treated under the law as a "special agreement" (or award) superseding the provisions and term of the ordinary collective agreement entered into by the parties and operative for such period as may be prescribed in the special agreement or award.

THE ROLE OF PAY RESEARCH IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

The desirability of the compilation and availability of precise, independent data on compensation and other conditions of employment outside the Public Service which can be used at the negotiation table is accepted by all. Nevertheless it remains necessary to distinguish between the general concept and any specific application of this concept in the context of negotiations and arbitration. Most witnesses acknowledged the good work of the Pay Research Bureau, but a number of important questions were raised:

(a) Should the Pay Research Bureau be detached from the Public Service Staff Relations Board?

(b) Can the existing reports of the Bureau be made available to bargaining agents in other public service jurisdictions, and the private sector as they are now generally available to employers in these jurisdictions?

(c) Should the Bureau expand its survey activities into occupational areas not required by the federal Public Service?

(d) Should the Pay Research Bureau or other agency undertake research in the criteria enunciated under Section 68 of the PSSRA?

Neither the Director of the Pay Research Bureau nor Mr. Finkelman favoured detaching the Bureau from the Public Service Staff Relations Board at this time. Both anticipated a changing and expanding (more "national") role for the Bureau but stressed the need for time during which the role would evolve and also time for the interested parties, both within and outside the Public Service, to work out the necessary details. Evidence given by the Director of the Bureau suggests that most of the participating employers would not object to the release of Pay Research Bureau reports to bargaining agents in the public sector. A letter received by your Committee from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association indicated the Association's willingness to support wider distribution of Pay Research Bureau reports in the public sector.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Toronto Board of Trade, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Union of Public Employees all supported the Bureau's present surveys and reports, the idea of expanding the bureau's area of research and wider distribution of its reports to all areas of collective bargaining where disputes are resolved by arbitration, (essentially the public sector).

Representations were made urging action which would enshrine the principle of "fair comparison" and which would place a statutory obligation on the employer, and on the Public Service Staff Relations Board in its role as arbitrator, to establish terms and conditions of employment comparable to those paid in Canada by "good employers". Some witnesses saw this kind of statutory commitment as a guarantee which would be granted to Public Service employees in exchange for withdrawal of the right to strike.

The principle of fair comparison with good employers in the private sector would provide public servants with total incomes, benefits and working conditions equivalent to those provided by jointly selected good employers.

In its examination of this principle your Committee noted that if there is merit in the principle, it is in the potential effect on reducing the power struggle inherent in the adversary process. Your Committee rejected the notion of using this principle as the basis of a model of compulsory arbitration and the removal of the right to strike.

After lengthy consideration, your Committee observed that the principle of fair comparison shifts the power struggle from specific wage issues to disputes over the "good employers" to be jointly selected. The unions' interest in selection would be toward the "best employer", while the Government's position would be toward the average employer. The Government, as employer, it is argued, would base its posture on the idea that anything more would be both inflationary and unfair to the Canadian taxpayer. It was also noted that the Government, as employer, believes that its present pay policy results in equitable pay scales, benefits and job security. The employer's substantiation of this is its ability to attract and retain the employees it requires. These factors as well as productivity, profitability and regional disparities would need to be recognized in any definition of good employer.

Your Committee concludes that although opposing positions are inherent in the fair comparison model, such a model may be useful in contributing to a more cooperative mood between the parties based on fair treatment and communication. Albeit that a change in collective bargaining style cannot be legislated, your Committee concludes that mechanisms such as communication and pay research techniques which assist in the resolution of disputes should be improved and enhanced.

Development of a climate of trust and confidence requires effort, time, information, and a willingness to communicate. We applaud the efforts which have been made in the Public Service to establish and facilitate the work of Labour Management Committees and we recommend that more resources be committed by both parties to extend the coverage of these committees and to make them more effective. We support the continuing work of the National Joint Council and its impressive record of accomplishment in dealing with service-wide issues. We are encouraged by the work of the Advisory Committee on Pay

Research, but were discouraged to learn that some of the bargaining agents in the Public Service system have refused to participate in the Advisory Committee and by so doing have neither contributed to nor profited from the Bureau's research. Evidence given to your Committee by the Director-General of the Bureau indicates that the Advisory Committee, composed of representatives of the employer and bargaining agents, provides a satisfactory structure for determining the Bureau's program and balancing program priorities. Technical problems arising in connection with surveys which relate to particular negotiations are dealt with in sub-committees whose membership is determined by the particular survey activity under consideration. We urge the involvement of all of the parties to collective bargaining in planning the Bureau's research program and utilizing data procured in its surveys.

The Pay Research Bureau, including the Bureau's Advisory Committee which assists it in planning its programs and reporting priorities, is a very important part of the communication system established by the employer and bargaining agents in the Public Service and can play a most important role in reducing the areas of difference. We support the strengthening of the Advisory Committee and greater utilization of it by the parties.

These positive attributes of employer-employee relations in the Public Service, which reduce rather than increase tensions, have not been emphasized as much as they should have been. We urge the Public Service Staff Relations Board to use its influence and its prestige both to publicize what has been accomplished and to encourage and develop better systems of communication amongst the parties with a view to blunting the sharper edges of the adversary relationship wherever possible.

If this approach were to be taken, we believe some of the posturing which has characterized both initial demands and counter-offers—posturing which tends to mislead both employees and the public—might be reduced and bargaining in good faith facilitated. If more attention were paid and more acceptance given to the data of the Pay Research Bureau, similar improvements could be made. Accordingly, we recommend

49. That the purpose of the Pay Research Bureau continue to be that of supporting the collective bargaining process, to assist in the resolution of employer-employee disputes in the Public Service of Canada, and where appropriate to provide data to assist the collective bargaining process generally in the public sector.

50. That the independent character of the Pay Research Bureau which has always been operationally independent of the government, the employer and the bargaining agents in the Public Service of Canada, continue to be maintained under the administrative control of the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

51. That the Advisory Committee on Pay Research established to assist the Pay Research Bureau in the determination of program priorities and methods continue in this role and that the Board encourage the involvement of all Public Service bargaining agents and all Public Service employers in the work of the Committee with a view to widening the support which the Bureau provides to the collective bargaining process.

52. That the Pay Research Bureau's activities, methodology and information receive greater publicity so that its value and importance may receive wider recognition from employees in the Public Service of Canada as well as from the general public, thereby influencing the collective bargaining process and assisting in the resolution of employer-employee disputes.

53. That wherever possible and without detracting from its primary purpose, the Pay Research Bureau be encouraged to make available its reports for public distribution.

54. That the Pay Research Bureau be empowered to cooperate with similar agencies in other jurisdictions in Canada towards the most efficient and effective gathering, presentation and distribution of employment data. (This recommendation recognizes the necessity of close collaboration with other jurisdictions to ensure that mutual needs are met, methodologies are aligned and that the cost of expanded activities and or additional resources are recoverable or payable. The Committee is hopeful that such expanded activity could take place over time if in fact this is what governments, employers and bargaining agents desire).

55. That, in order to achieve the aim of the above recommendations, the Public Service Staff Relations Act provide for a Pay Research Bureau, subject to the direction and regulation of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, to collect, analyze, present and make available data relating to terms and conditions of employment and related matters in public and private employment.

56. That, recognizing the complexity of the issues faced by the Public Service Staff Relations Board in the discharge of its responsibilities including the rendering of arbitration awards within the terms of reference established by Section 68 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the Public Service Staff Relations Board be encouraged to undertake to improve the arbitration process.

MANAGERIAL AND CONFIDENTIAL EXCLUSIONS

This is an issue upon which there was division between the representatives of the employer and of the employee associations. Your Committee heard two main opposing arguments:

- (a) That many exclusions were unnecessary and designed to reduce the strength of bargaining agents; and
- (b) That the employer's capacity to manage the service efficiently was seriously compromised by the restricted size of its "management team".

Your Committee believes that if collective bargaining is to work it is essential that each side in the relationship have proper representation, and that the law and its administrators must ensure that individuals are not caught in circumstances which generate significant conflicts of interest.

Your Committee concludes that persons exercising effective control over employees, especially in relation to other persons who are members of a bargaining unit, should be properly identified as management and should be excluded from bargaining units and from membership in unions which represent employees as bargaining agents.

Your Committee, to give expression to its conclusions with respect to the central issue of where, in the widely varied operational environments of the Public Service, the line between "employee" and "management" should be drawn, recommends:

57. That the paragraph of the Act which defines "person employed in a managerial or confidential capacity" be amended to read as follows:

"persons employed in a managerial or confidential capacity" means any person who

- (a) Is employed in a position confidential to the Governor General, a Minister of the Crown, a judge of the Supreme or Federal Court of Canada, the deputy head of a department or the chief executive officer of any other portion of the Public Service;
- (b) Is employed as a legal officer in the Department of Justice;
- (c) Is employed as an officer or employee on the payroll of the Treasury Board;
- (d) Is directly involved on behalf of the Public Service Commission in a formal process of
  - (i) Appointments
  - (ii) Consultation, or
  - (iii) Redress

prescribed by or under the Public Service Employment Act;

- (e) Effectively participates in the determination of government policies or programs, or participates in the approval of plans of organization;
- (f) exercises effective control over employees;
- (g) (i) Is directly involved on behalf of the employer in the process of collective bargaining or consultation prescribed by this Act or exercises appointing authority on behalf of the employer; or
  - (ii) Is primarily engaged in the administration of personnel policies or programs other than a person whose duties are of a routine or clerical nature;

(h) Is primarily engaged in the administration of personnel policies or (e), (f) or (g) are directly accountable in respect of the duties described in such sub-paragraphs; or

- (i) Is engaged in confidential duties under the exclusive direction and control of a person or persons identified in sub-paragraphs (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g) or (h), other than a person in a support capacity whose confidential duties relate solely to the processing of grievances at the first level in the grievance procedure established under this Act, and includes any other person who, in the opinion of the Board, should not be included in a bargaining unit by reason of a conflict between his duties and responsibilities to the employer and any interest he might have as a member of a bargaining unit.

INCOMPETENCE AND INCAPACITY AND DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Evidence submitted to your Committee reflected the difficulty in drawing the line between behaviour requiring disciplinary action and involuntary infractions which may be traced to incompetence or incapacity. The 1967 legislation divides the third party involvement in these matters between the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The authority of the Public Service Commission under the Public Service Employment Act relates to circumstances where the employer proposes to release or demote an employee for incompetence or incapacity. The authority of adjudicators under the Public Service Staff Relations Act applies to disciplinary action.

This overlap has led to a variety of legal arguments respecting the jurisdiction of the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act in a particular case. Moreover, there is confusion as to the procedure to be followed by management. In their appearances before your Committee, the bargaining agents sought the elimination of this divided authority by bringing releases for incompetence and incapacity within the jurisdiction of the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

Your Committee has studied the problem and supports the elimination of this divided authority, but recognizes that this consolidation should not interfere with the Public Service Commission's appointing authority.

We therefore recommend that:

58. Where the action of the employer results or will result in the termination of employment of an employee from a position in the Public Service, and the reasons alleged by the employer are misconduct, abandonment of position, incompetence or incapacity, the employee should be entitled to grieve the termination action.

59. Where the employee's grievance has not been dealt with to his satisfaction at the final level, he should be able to refer it to the Public Service Staff Relations Board for adjudication.

60. The adjudicator should be empowered to rescind the termination where he upholds the employee's grievance, or substitute other action if the employer's action was not well-founded but he should not be empowered to recommend or effect an alternate appointment.

61. The Public Service Commission should on request reappraise every employee whose employment in a position in the Public Service has been involuntarily terminated to assess whether the employee is suitable for appointment to another position.

62. An employee found suitable for appointment following re-appraisal should be entitled to have his name entered on any appropriate eligibility list and for a period of time (e.g. one year) enter closed competitions.

63. Where the employee is appointed within the period referred to in Recommendation 62 above, ordinary rules of continuity of employment should apply to him.

64. None of the procedures referred to above involving redress of grievance and opportunity for re-employment should apply to an employee who is offered and accepts another position in lieu of termination.

UNION VOTING PROCEDURES

Union voting procedures, particularly strike and ratification votes, have received considerable attention. The present Public Service Staff Relations Act is silent with respect to the conduct of votes by bargaining agents.

The Ontario Labour Relations Act (Section 63) places an obligation on unions conducting a strike or ratification vote to ensure that "ballots are cast in such a manner that the person expressing his choice cannot be identified with the choice expressed". The Ontario Act does not protect the rights of all members of the bargaining unit to vote.

Your Committee recommends:

65. That where a bargaining agent conducts a strike vote, or submits a proposal for a collective agreement to its membership for approval,

(a) The vote should be carried out by secret ballot in accordance with procedures prescribed by regulations of the Public Service Staff Relations Board; and

(b) A breach of the regulations of the Board in this respect should constitute a contravention of the Act, and the union or persons concerned should be subject to the appropriate penalties;

66. That where a bargaining agent conducts a strike vote or submits a proposal for a collective agreement to the members of the unit for ratification, every member of the unit should be entitled to vote, and any act by a union or union official, or any other person, to prevent a member of the bargaining unit from voting should constitute an offence under the Act.

Recent events have also aroused great public concern with respect to the role of conciliation boards and their reports in the resolution of strikes in the Public Service. We have considered at length how to ensure that the contribution which a conciliation board makes might be enhanced. A conciliation board report, whether it is unanimous, a report of a majority of the board, or a report of its chairman, contributes to a settlement.

Your Committee recognizes that, following the publication of a conciliation board's findings, the employer may make an offer which is an improvement over the conciliation report.

The question facing your Committee in relation to the issue was whether or not the statute should require a conciliation board report to be placed before the members of a bargaining unit for approval or rejection, and, if so, when. Your Committee recognizes this as a problem but was not able to agree on an acceptable solution.

CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Government departments and agencies engage casual employees to help meet work fluctuations, for special short-term projects, as replacements for employees on leave or training, for seasonal requirements, and for other similar purposes. Presently, casuals are appointed by the Public Service Commission and are covered by the Public Service Staff Relations Act after six months of employment. Up to six months, casual employees' terms and conditions of employment are governed by Regulations made pursuant to the Financial Administration Act. On the whole, the benefits and the protections of the Regulations are not as generous as those provided by collective agreements.

In 1969 the Treasury Board directed departments to extend to casual employees the benefits of collective agreements from the first day of employment where it is known that the period of employment will exceed six months.

The bargaining agents in their representations to your Committee opposed the six month exclusion from the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Mr. Finkelman initially proposed a reduction to 120 days in any continuous period of 12 months and that students hired during their school vacation period be excluded from collective bargaining. Following representations by the Public Service Commission respecting the appointment process concerning casuals, Mr. Finkelman revised his recommendation from 120 days to 60 days.

Your Committee concludes that there is a continuing need in the Public Service of Canada for persons to discharge temporary duties of indefinite duration. What is left to determine is the status of casual employees; the method of termination of employment and their terms and conditions of employment.

Your Committee recommends:

67. That students hired during their school vacation period be excluded from collective bargaining.

68. That the review of the Public Service Employment Act recommended at Recommendations 1, 2 and 3 determine the process applicable to the appointment of casuals.

69. That the matter of length of casual service and its relationship to permanent or indeterminate appointment also be dealt with by the review recommended at Recommendations 1, 2 and 3.

70. That the employer be able to release a casual employee without notice and without redress.

71. That after working 60 days in any continuous period of 6 months, casual employees be subject to the terms of the appropriate collective agreement.

72. That after working 60 days in any continuous period of 6 months, a casual employee will qualify for any retroactive pay due for days worked during the retroactive period.

Respectfully submitted,

Sidney L. Buckwold,
Joint Chairman.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 2, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

RULES OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to draw to the attention of honourable senators the new edition of the Rules of the Senate, copies of which have been placed on the desks of senators and distributed to their offices.

This edition of the rules incorporates the amendments that were set out in the Report of the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, presented to the Senate on October 29, 1975, and printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of that day.

As honourable senators may recall, the report containing the proposed amendments to the rules was adopted by the Senate on November 26, 1975. It was later decided, by order of the Senate on February 4, 1976, that the amendments, as published in the new edition, should become effective on March 1, 1976.

In order to distinguish this edition of the rules from the previous rule book, honourable senators will note that the cover has a new design and a format that incorporates for the first time a reproduction of a drawing of the Senate maec.

The book also contains a new index in both French and English, with each version being printed separately on pages of a different colour. Senators will note as well that Appendix II is separated from the first half of the book by a coloured divider. It should also be noted that the list of "Related Enactments" in Appendix I has been brought up to date, and the appendix has been expanded to include the text of certain provisions in the statute law that govern or relate to procedure in the Senate.

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Blais and Francis had been substituted for those of Messrs. Collette and Marceau on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service.

TEMPORARY IMMIGRATION SECURITY BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-85, respecting immigration security.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of Information Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975.

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, Volume III, Annual Statements of Life Insurance Companies and Fraternal Benefit Societies, for the year ended December 31, 1974, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter I-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Fact Sheets on New Energy Conservation Measures, issued by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on February 25, 1976, together with Press Release thereon.

Lists of shareholders in the Chartered Banks of Canada as at the end of the financial years ended in 1975, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, Chapter B-1, R.S.C., 1970.

List of shareholders in the Montreal City and District Savings Bank as at October 31, 1975, pursuant to section 101(1) of the Quebec Savings Banks Act, Chapter B-4, R.S.C., 1970.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY OF CANADA

CONGRATULATIONS ON ELECTION OF LEADER

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate the official Opposition on its new party leader. On behalf of the government and the government supporters in this chamber, may I wish the new party leader and leader of the official Opposition in the other place a long and happy career as Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: I assure honourable senators that the wish of the Leader of the Government will not be realized. I feel quite confident that as a result of the election of the new Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the Government will be forced to change places with me in approximately two years' time.

Senator Langlois: Wishful thinking.

Senator Flynn: In any event, I thank the Leader of the Government for his sentiment. I am sure he expresses the sentiment of all honourable senators in wishing success to the Leader of the official Opposition, the alternative government which is so desired by the whole of Canada.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT'S POSITION RESPECTING FINAL ACT OF HELSINKI CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I ask leave to present a motion concerning an urgent and important matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), I move, seconded by Senator Yuzyk:

That this House supports the Canadian Government's position that, as expressed in the House of Commons on December 2, 1975 by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe signed at Helsinki in no way confirms the territorial status quo in Europe, and that in particular the status of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, as it is at present recognized by Canada, has in no way been altered thereby.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Carter, seconded by the Honourable Senator Yuzyk—

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

MARINE SAFETY

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERIES—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, this past weekend has been one of tragedy for fishermen in British Columbia. The first day of the opening of the herring fishing season saw lives lost and vessels sunk. I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate, who also comes from British Columbia, what steps the government is taking to ensure maximum marine safety in our fishing waters?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate very much the fact that advance notice of this question was given.

The matter of marine safety is of concern to all Canadians, whether hazards occur on the east coast, the west coast or in our Arctic waters. Indeed, I would remind honourable senators that the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate is a voluntary search master for the Atlantic on the east coast, so honourable senators can see that the government is very concerned about this general question.

In reply to the Honourable Senator Austin, I repeat that I appreciate the fact that he has given me advance notice of his question. The Canadian Coast Guard is steadily increasing its activities in the field of marine safety and in search and rescue operations. This is reflected in the search and rescue budget, which has increased from about $700,000 in 1967 to more than $3 million for the coming fiscal year.

To summarize briefly the history of search and rescue in Canada, specific facilities and organization for this purpose were virtually nonexistent in Canada prior to 1951. The RCAF undertook most search and rescue assignments as they were required.

In July 1951 a government directive established the RCAF as coordinator of all search and rescue operations, both air and marine. As a result of this directive, a rescue coordination centre was established in Vancouver and fully manned 24 hours a day with personnel trained in search and rescue procedures. In 1960 this centre was transferred to its present location in Victoria.

In 1960 the Canadian Coast Guard was given specific responsibility for marine search and rescue activity, and in that year orders were placed for the construction of special search and rescue cutters. At the same time, a Coast Guard Rescue Officer was appointed.

In 1963 the Coast Guard took delivery of two 95-foot search and rescue cutters, the Ready and Racer. The following year saw the establishment of the present Kitsilano Coast Guard base at Vancouver. At this time, two smaller cutters, the Mallard and Moorhen, were transferred from the RCAF to the Coast Guard.

In 1968 Canadian Coast Guard resources were boosted with the arrival of the SRN5 Hovercraft from the United Kingdom, which was stationed at Sea Island. In 1970, a third 95-foot cutter, the Rider, was acquired. In the same year, three steel self-righting lifeboats were obtained. Two of those lifeboats replaced the wooden boats then stationed at Tofino and Bamfield, while the third was assigned to Bull Harbour to meet the increasing demand in the North Vancouver Island area, particularly during the summer fishing season.

The Inshore Rescue Boat Program was begun in 1972. This involves the use of 16-foot inflatable boats manned, in part, by university students during summer months. The purpose of this program is to meet the increasing demand to provide assistance to the multitude of small pleasure craft frequenting the sheltered water of the lower Strait of Georgia. Since 1972, the program has been expanded to four Inshore Rescue Boat units stationed at Victoria, Nanaimo, Pender Harbour and Ganges.

Supplementing the Canadian Coast Guard Search and Rescue Organization, we benefit greatly from the service of about 80 volunteer rescue agents, strategically located along the west coast. These volunteers play an important part in the search and rescue field, primarily as a communication link between the Rescue Coordinating Centre in Victoria and the area in which an incident has occurred, or is believed to have occurred.

Understandably, the thousands of miles of shoreline along the British Columbia coast virtually rule out the possibility of ever having the resources available to meet every incident. For this reason, all government-owned vessels, including naval ships, are called upon to play an active role in any marine emergency. Added to this, we must all recognize the legal and traditional requirement of all mariners to aid those in distress at sea.

The Canadian Coast Guard is currently reviewing, on a national basis, its present resources, and is exploring possible new roles both in search and rescue and, very importantly, in the field of prevention of boating accidents. One of the areas which, I understand, will get immediate attention, is that dealing with a proposed voluntary coast guard auxiliary. We are expecting implementation guidelines in this regard by May of this year.

I appreciate the tolerance and indulgence of honourable senators in respect of the lengthy nature of this reply, but I am sure they recognize the great importance of this entire problem to those who live on the west coast of Canada.

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question to that which has already been asked with regard to search and rescue, not only on the west coast but around all the coasts of Canada.

No doubt we are all interested in the numbers of cutters and hovercraft that are employed in search and rescue, but we appreciate as well the fact that aircraft are much more successful in search and rescue because it is much easier to survey a large area from the air than it is from the surface. I am wondering if the Leader of the Government could tell us what the air element of search and rescue on our coasts consists of.

Senator Perrault: While I must take that question as notice because of its technical nature, may I say that because of the inevitable world trend towards the establishment of a 200-mile zone of economic interest along the coasts of nations abutting the oceans of the world, it seems obvious that the role of Canada's air arm, the Coast Guard and the naval arm may well have to be enhanced in the future. I shall endeavour to obtain a more adequate reply of a specific nature to the question posed by the honourable senator.

Senator Flynn: It is quite obvious that Senator McDonald did not give the Leader of the Government the same advance notice as did Senator Austin. In view of the length and detail of the reply the Leader of the Government gave to Senator Austin, he probably received notice about ten days ago.

Senator Perrault: Nevertheless, now that I have notice of Senator McDonald's question I can prepare a lengthy reply to be given at some future date.

Senator Flynn: No doubt.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

FERRIES OPERATING BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN FARES—QUESTION

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, now that we have heard from the west coast, could I ask the Leader of the Government if it is the intention of the government to increase next year the fares on the ferries operating between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick? If so, will the increase be within the guidelines of the anti-inflation program? Realizing that the Government of Canada lost the court case with the Province of Prince Edward Island respecting their responsibility for the operation of the ferries to Prince Edward Island, could the leader find out for us if it is the intention of the government to raise the fares on the ferries going to Prince Edward Island?

Senator Perrault: As yet no decision has been made on that matter. However, I can assure all honourable senators that paramount in the mind of the government is the importance of providing adequate service to those Canadians who live on Prince Edward Island, and those people who live in other centres of the Atlantic provinces, including Newfoundland. Inevitably, of course, when any government undertakes the task of reviewing and establishing economic rates and tariffs, at the same time assessing the importance of protecting the public interest, at some point a decision must be made where a balance should be struck. As yet no decision has been made.

INCREASE IN BUS FARES IN SAINT JOHN—QUESTION

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I live in a town which has a bus service whose fares have gone up 100 per cent. Is that within the anti-inflation program limits? I cannot understand it. They went up from 25 cents to 50 cents. Has the government any ideas about that? I just do not understand.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that the establishment of bus fares and tariffs is a provincial responsibility. I can only suggest to the honourable senator that he should turn to another level of government of another political persuasion for an answer to his question. Perhaps if the Government of the Province of New Brunswick determines to ask the Anti-Inflation Board in Ottawa to rule on the increases in fares, and whether or not they are within the guidelines, that is an entirely different matter, of course, and I do not have an answer to that at the present time.

Senator Riley: I would remind the Leader of the Government that it is not a provincial matter; it is a municipal matter.

Senator Flynn: It is the same thing.

Senator Riley: When one speaks of provincial affairs, it is not the same thing as municipal affairs. In this particular instance, it is a municipal matter. The fares have been increased by 100 per cent. Perhaps the government has an answer for that. I do not know.

Senator Perrault: Senator, I will certainly seek information on this point. The Public Utilities Commission of the province has power to establish municipal bus fares, and the fares charged by provincial carriers as well.

In any case, may I take that question as notice and endeavour to obtain whatever information is available as to whether there is any federal responsibility involved.

Senator Riley: It is not correct. I was chairman of the Public Utilities Commission and we had no authority over the buses in Saint John. We simply did not have authority over the bus fares charged in Saint John. If you are going to have anti-inflation regulations, use them.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I say that the federal anti-inflation guidelines, so described, apply to all Canadians and to all aspects of Canadian economic and social activity, whether or not a group or an industry comes technically within them.

If there has been an increase of 100 per cent in bus fares anywhere in this country, as would seem to be the case on the basis of the information given by the honourable senator, that new fare structure would exceed the anti-inflation guidelines. However, without obtaining further and more detailed information, it is impossible for me to give a definitive answer. I ask the honourable senator to give me any further details he may have, and I will certainly undertake to obtain the government's position on this matter.

Senator Forsey: May I ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question? Surely, even if the situation is as Honourable Senator Riley describes it, the provincial legislature would have jurisdiction to place the municipal bus fares in Saint John under the authority of the provincial body. So, once again, it would appear to me—and I ask guidance and correction, if necessary, by the Leader of the Government—the remonstrances of the Honourable Senator Riley should be addressed to another government, and another level of government.

Senator Perrault: This was my original suggestion because the municipal governments are the—and I hate to use the word—creatures of the provincial governments. Under the anti-inflation program it is proposed that all provincial governments and provincial crown corporations be subject to the anti-inflation guidelines program.

I understand that the Maritime provinces have asked the federal government to supervise the application of the guidelines to their employees and provincial crown corporations. I would think that ultimately municipal bus fares would come under the federal program as a result of the agreement between the Maritime provinces and the federal government. However, as I say, I must obtain further information in order to provide a more adequate reply.

FORESTRY

DEVASTATION OF FORESTS OF EASTERN CANADA BY THE SPRUCE BUDWORM

Senator Burchill: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would refer to the proceedings of the Senate of July 9, 1975 when I joined with my colleagues from the province of New Brunswick and senators from other provinces in deploring the fact that the federal government had declined to share in the expenses incurred in the battle against the spruce budworm in New Brunswick.

● (2030)

Following that discussion I should like to put on record the information that arrangements have now been concluded to spray ten million acres or more of forest land in New Brunswick during 1976 at a cost of $18.9 million. Of that amount the province of New Brunswick will pay $7 million, industry will pay $6.3 million, and negotiations have been concluded by which the federal government has made available $6.5 million from funds which were allocated to DREE.

I am sure the people of New Brunswick, who regard their forests as the lifeblood of the provincial economy, will greet this announcement with great satisfaction and appreciation.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, does Senator Burchill know what type of spray will be used?

Senator Burchill: I can say that I noted, in the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Natural Resources for New Brunswick, words to the effect that DDT will not be used. I cannot go further than that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE (TOTAL ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator O'Leary, for the second reading of the Bill S-23, intituled: "An Act to amend the National Defence Act and the Criminal Code (total abolition of capital punishment)".—(Honourable Senator Prowse).

Senator Petten: Stand.

Senator Argue: I wonder if I might direct a question to the Government Whip? This motion has been standing in the name of the Honourable Senator Prowse since June 10 last. I know that Senator Prowse has not been well for a good part of the intervening time, but I doubt that he would wish this motion to stand indefinitely, thus preventing the normal conclusion of the debate. Surely, this gestation period of nine months should lead to something more than a continuing adjournment. In my opinion, the Senate would be wise to allow a closing of the debate, and to take a vote on second reading.

Senator Flynn: Ask leave to withdraw the bill, since there is a bill in the other place.

Senator Argue: I do not agree to that at all. This bill was introduced in good faith. It is a good bill. It stands on its own. I do not think the Senate should play second fiddle to the House of Commons in this or any other matter. We certainly have the right and privilege to move the second reading of a bill dealing with a public question. This bill is completely in order; nobody is suggesting it is out of order. I think it would be wise and proper for the Senate to deal with it in the normal course of events, and I hope it would pass. In fact, I am confident it would pass, and if the Senate were to vote resoundingly in favour of the abolition of capital punishment, I know of nothing more helpful to strengthen the hand of those who wish to see the law of the land make provision for the complete abolition of capital punishment. It is my hope, therefore, that I might have the opportunity to close the debate.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, Senator Argue wanted to ask me a question, but I think he went a little further. However, in answer to the first part of his question I think I should say that in deference to Senator Prowse I must discuss it with him. I do not know when he will be back, but I undertake to discuss it with him.

Senator Argue: Thank you. That is fair.

THE SENATE

TELEVISION AND RADIO COVERAGE OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Greene, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the desirability of permitting complete television and radio coverage of the proceedings of the Senate and of the public proceedings of all Senate Committees.—(Honourable Senator Robichaud, P.C.).

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, I expected Senator Greene to be here today. I did not want to discuss this inquiry in the Senate until I had had a chat with him. I would ask, therefore, that this order stand for a week, until March 9, when Senator Greene will probably be back.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Michaud calling the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.—(Honourable Senator Petten).

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Fournier (Restigouche-GloUCESTER).

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Fournier: Honourable senators, I am grateful to Senator Michaud who moved this motion calling the attention of the Senate to "certain economic conditions existing in the province of New Brunswick".

In his remarks he also referred to an open letter from the clergy of the Roman Catholic Church sent to the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of New Brunswick dealing more particularly with the economic and social situation in the northeast of the province.

This brief which sets forth the situation in a clear and quite earnest alarming manner, according to the letter, was largely endorsed by a good majority of the religious and civil authorities as well as by people of all faiths and denominations.

I fully support this document myself. Coming from the area and being aware of the situation, I feel duty bound tonight to raise the matter in this house. I would have liked to quote many extracts from this document and comment on them, but to save the valuable time of my honourable colleagues I ask leave of this house, with your permission, Madam Speaker, to append this letter to the record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of letter see appendix p. 1854).

Senator Fournier (Restigouche-GloUCESTER): If I wish to comment on the situation in the northeast of New Brunswick, it is because I consider it very serious but not irrevocable if it is dealt with as it should be. I understand that problems exist from coast to coast in the poorer areas, especially in the Maritimes.

Some will argue that the situation is not new and not any worse there than elsewhere. The situation is indeed much more critical there than elsewhere. When we see that the unemployment rate in the northeast is twice the provincial average, and even three to four times higher than in a certain other area, we must admit this is not normal and we must look for the causes. After they have given a great deal of attention to some relatively well-off area compared to the others, it is hard to understand why our governments sometimes go on making the big capital investments in that same area rather than somewhere else where every reason would warrant it. As an illustration, here is a typical case in New Brunswick. When it came to choosing a site for a nuclear power plant in New Brunswick, a $600 million investment, the ideal site first selected in Gloucester county was overlooked in favour of Pointe Lepreau near Saint John. It was mentioned in the study that the Gloucester site had much less seismic exposure, was better from an environmental point of view, close to an abundant source of labour with an unemployment rate around 20 per cent, whereas Saint John had only 2 per cent unemployment. Such decisions are hard to understand. The small group of people who fear and oppose a nuclear plant in Gloucester can now sleep tight, because the Hatfield government is nowhere near building a second plant in New Brunswick.

I shall not delve into all our problems, unless it be to seek or suggest solutions. What strikes us most is such poverty in so rich a country, as stated in the clergy's brief, and so much unemployment where so much could be done.

Indeed, the northeastern part is not without natural resources and resources of all kinds, as will be seen further on. When there was talk about creating the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in 1969 we, from the least favoured areas, had great hopes, thinking that a department especially created to look after regional disparities was going to solve a great many of our problems. Unfortunately, after more than seven years of existence, one is almost forced to admit that economic conditions in that area are not much better than before.

Could it be that this department made the same mistakes in New Brunswick as other economy-gearred departments made in the past all over Canada, focussing all their attention and spending money on centralizing industry and promoting large centres? I will simply give another illustration from our province, in addition to the one I gave for the nuclear plant. In New Brunswick we have two urban centres, namely, Saint John and Moncton, which are relatively important for the province. I admit that those cities need to be helped and have their share, but not at the expense of the rest of the province. Now, if we figure out the grants and moneys spent on infrastructural works alone we realize that that is where big investments went.

It seems to me that if one is sincere and really wants to eliminate regional disparities one should start by setting some balance and arriving at a more accurate notion of progress. It is time for our economists to stop believing that progress only means development of large urban centres and centralization of industry. Is it not true that we find today that this kind of development brings malaise and increasingly complex problems like those experienced in large cities like Montreal, Vancouver and Toronto?

Our urban centres are important and industry is necessary but for real progress we have to consider our country as a whole and also think of our primary industries from coast to coast. We must give back to our primary industries, to our agricultural, forest, mineral, tourist, fishery resources and so on, the position they deserve.

For real progress, we must stop exporting a large part of our raw materials and process them ourselves as much as possible and encourage industries that will produce manufactured or semi-manufactured goods from our resources. But the main consideration to ensure the happiness and prosperity of our people is to see that the industry is organized to the advantage of the people around it as well as for the benefit of the corporation that operates it.

I mentioned earlier that to have a prosperous country, we should start by promoting and protecting our primary industries; I shall add that the first and maybe the most important industry is agriculture. In fact, when agriculture is prosperous in a country or a province, this country or province is generally prosperous. There is no better yardstick of economic well-being.

In my area in the northeast, unfortunately we neglected agriculture, which was relatively prosperous before. Yet we do have good farm lands. The counties of Gloucester and Restigouche alone have enough good farm land to feed and maintain a population three times as large. Since our colleague Senator Michaud did very well in making that point, I shall not comment any longer on the subject. I would simply tell him I agree entirely with the representations he made to both agriculture departments, federal and provincial, for the true provision of a next generation of farmers, a better system of farming education, and for his suggestion to use presently unoccupied facilities the Memramcook Institute, to which I would add the Northeast Technological Institute.

Another area that is very important to our region, because it has access to the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Chaleur Bay, is coastal and offshore fishing. At least 65 per cent of the fish caught in New Brunswick come from that fishing area. For the time being fishing is somewhat risky because of the decline in certain species of fish. It is to be hoped the Hon. Mr. LeBlanc, our Minister of Fisheries, will succeed in his conservation program, but without any harm or injustice to the bona fide lobster fishermen who have always been involved in that kind of fishing.

The professional people and the trades people who are protected by associations—public servants, police officers, teachers, permanent railway employees and company executives paid on a yearly or monthly basis—could understandably be requested to cease any commercial fishing and surrender their licences. But for those working on an hourly basis with no job protection, whether full-time employees or not, I suggest the licences should not be cancelled this year so that their cases can be seriously examined.

As regards the 200-mile limit, if the minister is successful in that feat of strength, he will have given the best possible gift to every fisherman in the Gulf, in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces, for the benefit of our future fisheries.

Before important reserves of ore were discovered in the area, it is safe to suggest that our forest and pulp industry certainly was the most important source of revenue in the northeast. We have in the area 85 per cent of all wooded Crown lands and more than half of the pulp mills in the province. You can easily imagine the importance that the industry should normally have for our area.

Unfortunately, things do not seem to go as well as we would like. The large number of pulp and paper mills which have settled there do not seem to have brought all the wealth which was anticipated. Studies made a few years ago showed that our forest resource management was not of the best quality. It was found that a good part of our wooded areas were not put to sufficient use and were wasted because of aging. Another important problem at the moment is the damage caused by the spruce budworm, this insect that we have never been able to eliminate but that we seemed to be controlling until two years ago. In the last couple of years the disease spread at an epidemic rate and this insect seems to have become a national and even an international threat since it is now attacking neighbouring provinces and the New England states. I am happy to have heard tonight Senator Burchill announce that this year forests will be sprayed better than in the last two years.

Following this study on forest resources, the provincial government decided to launch a pilot project in the Bathurst area, a sort of complex equipped with a large sawmill which would use all the wood and eventually supply several related industries which would make manufactured or semi-manufactured products and send byproducts and waste to the pulp plants in the form of wood chips. Moreover, all the surplus lumber of this mill would not be sold on the local market but would be shipped elsewhere so as not to hurt financially the small sawmill operators.

The project seemed very good and well conceived and the provincial government had no difficulty in selling this idea to the public, and even to the federal government, which invested nearly one million dollars in it and found a company, called Brunswick Mills, to operate it.

But after less than one year of operation, it was established that the forest does not provide trees of the quality and size required, that too great a percentage of production had to be thrown away because of rotten wood, and that the lumber could only be sold on the local market. You can imagine the problems and the disarray which the owners of small mills experienced when that lumber was sold on the local market.

I hope anyway that the Brunswick Mills project will succeed and that the government and citizens of New Brunswick will not incur a financial loss as was the case for Bricklin.

We could have so easily used the $20 or $30 million wasted on Bricklin to help small industries in our province.

I cannot complete my remarks without raising the subject of mining. We have in northeastern New Brunswick some of the largest ore bodies of base metals in North America. To illustrate my point allow me to quote one paragraph from an article written in The Canadian Mining Journal of February 1974:

The Bathurst mining camp has some 33 primary sulphide ore deposits and many are expected to achieve production in the future. A metallurgical breakthrough such as hydrometallurgical extraction is needed to promote the region into one of the larger mining camps in the world.

Two years ago I spoke on the same subject in this chamber. After having said that Canada was the world's leading producer of zinc, and New Brunswick the second largest producing province in Canada, I stated, in part, as follows:

The first thing that we ought to expect in New Brunswick is a zinc smelter. It is absolutely unthinkable that all our zinc should be shipped outside the country as concentrate.

That was two years ago and one year later a feasibility study on zinc smelting in northern New Brunswick recommended a smelter. This study was completed in April 1973, almost three years ago and, for some reason, was never made public by the New Brunswick provincial government. The Minister of Natural Resources for New Brunswick seems to be in favour of a zinc smelter and admits that there is a place and need for one, but has been unable up to now to move his government and the Noranda company to take action. We are actually shipping out of the province approximately 400,000 tons of concentrate, sufficient to supply two smelters. Even if we built one, we would still have large quantities to ship for export—sufficient to keep our market in Europe open. It is important, therefore, that the decision to build should be taken now, in order for the smelter to be ready by 1979 at the latest, and before it is decided to build another smelter in Europe to use our production.

As I said at the beginning, to permit the companies to take our nonrenewable resources and ship everything abroad without refining is a crime, an injustice to our people and a loss to our province. For the next 40 to 50 years at least I would say that the economic future of the northeastern region will depend in great part on mining, and it is up to us to make the best of it.

[Translation]

There is another point I would like to make briefly, before closing. It is very important for our region; it is the tourist industry.

A couple of weeks ago, while reading "L'Aviron," a local paper from Campbellton, I noticed a press release from the Tourist Association of New Brunswick relating to an agreement on tourism. One could see in block letters the heading: "Federal-provincial agreement an injustice for the northeast". And, further down, it said that the Association called as unacceptable the latest tourism agreement signed in December 1975. The federal-provincial agreement is, indeed, an injustice for the northeast. The release describes it as unacceptable because only 8 per cent of the budget is earmarked for the northeast region.

This seems to me a little stupid, indeed; however, I do not have with me the number of people and the area involved.

But, if we go back to other agreements, the northeast seems to always get the short end of the stick, as was the case for transportation on highway 11, for instance.

As a matter of fact, it will be recalled that the federal minister refused at the time to sign the agreement because he claimed that highway 11 was not one of the priorities of the province. It must be kept in mind that under these federal-provincial agreements which come under provincial jurisdiction, it is up to the province to establish its priorities and to decide where and how the moneys must be spent, although the federal government usually contributes the largest share; for instance, under this agreement, 80 per cent or $7.9 million out of $9.9 million.

In conclusion, I shall say a few words regarding transportation.

It is common knowledge that transportation is vital to all the Maritimes, but it is even more so to the northeast because our highway system is the most inefficient and probably the worst throughout the Maritimes—to such an extent that it is a deterrent for all the tourists who would like to come and visit us.

The CNR railway service has always been good in our area. But now most people travel by plane so that our passenger trains are half empty, and I am afraid that we will soon lose our passenger railway service which until now has served us well but does not look too promising for the future. And since the air service is far from adequate in our area, I am very much concerned about the immediate future.

Therefore, I suggest that the Minister of Transport conduct an immediate study so that we may avoid the worst in the future. If nothing is done within five years, the situation could become critical.

Our greatest mistake was not to build an airport in this area; we should have all worked together in the northeast in order to have a good service, a good airport, instead of which all municipal governments were bickering to get their own municipal airport.

The future of passenger service in our country belongs to aviation. With the new types of short-landing aircraft, it should be possible to set up an adequate transportation system to serve the less populated and remote areas.

As regards shipping, in the northeast we are lucky enough to have a port which could become one of our better Canadian ports if industry is finally attracted to our region.

I dealt with this subject two years ago, so I shall not bring it up again. But we have the only seaport in the northeast that can supply and harbour ships ranging from 25 to 80,000 tons without the help of ice-breakers, etc. So that port is available for deep-sea marine operations. Unfortunately, we do not have enough industries at present to supply and develop it, unless the mines are developed.

Senator Riley: Would the honourable senator allow just one question? You have mentioned unemployment rates in your province. What is the unemployment rate for your constituency? You said that the rate was 2 per cent in Saint John. What are the rates for the constituencies of Gloucester and Northumberland?

Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester): I do not have the rates for all the constituencies. But the rates of 20 per cent for Gloucester and 2 per cent for Saint John I mentioned earlier applied at the time it was decided to build the nuclear plant in Saint John. So, those were the approximate rates at that time. Usually, during the winter, the rate for Gloucester may go up to 30 per cent. During the recent summer the rate was about 15 per cent. But I am sure it was considerably more than that this winter. Unfortunately, I do not have the percentages for the other individual constituencies.

Senator Riley: At the present time, what are the percentages in Gloucester, and in the constituency of Northumberland, but more especially in Gloucester? Do you have the figures? Truly, it is a tragedy. I am going to make a speech on the tragedy in Gloucester. First, I want to get the figures, the percentage as related to the whole of Canada. What is the proportion of unemployed workers in the constituency of Gloucester in New Brunswick?

Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester): As I told you, honourable senators, the percentages I quoted in my speech referred to the situation at the time the decision to establish a nuclear plant in Saint John was made. The figure was 20 per cent for the constituency of Gloucester; in Saint John, it was a little less than 2 per cent. At the present time, however, I do not have the percentages for the entire province but generally the figure for northeastern New Brunswick is twice as high as that for the whole of the province. The percentage for the province was about 14 to 15 per cent not very long ago but I do not have the figures for the individual constituencies.

TEMPORARY IMMIGRATION SECURITY BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill C-85, respecting immigration security.

[Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester).]

He said: Honourable senators, the Temporary Immigration Security Bill now before us for consideration will make it possible for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration immediately to refuse admission to Canada of suspected terrorists as soon as they are identified at ports of entry or in Canada. The government considers this an essential piece of legislation in view of the forthcoming Olympic Games and Habitat, the UN-sponsored international conference in Vancouver.

The bill will empower the minister to order the deportation of any person other than a Canadian citizen or landed immigrant—those are key words in the bill—who in the minister's opinion, is likely to engage in any violent criminal activity if admitted to Canada or permitted to remain therein. Such a deportation order would not depend upon the usual preliminary formalities of a special inquiry or the production of evidence of the applicant's inadmissibility.

Under the present law, no one can be ordered deported at a port of entry and sent away from Canada without first being given an opportunity to examine and contradict evidence against him. In the case of suspected terrorists, such evidence most often comes from sensitive or protected sources. Neither the incriminating information nor its source can be revealed without rendering that source public, and thereby possibly endangering national security.

The additional authority which the government now seeks to confer upon the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is already available to him for similar situations which might occur within Canada. This temporary security bill will extend the minister's existing power to order the deportation of visitors—I emphasize the word visitors—within Canada to encompass applicants for admission at ports of entry.

This bill, as honourable senators will have noted, will expire on December 31, 1976. It has been designed to meet immediate and pressing security considerations, to enable Canadian officials to deal effectively with possible threats related to the fast-approaching XXII Olympiad and, as I mentioned earlier, the UN-sponsored Habitat conference on the west coast.

During the current year the government intends to present Parliament with new legislation dealing with immigration which will embrace the concerns of this temporary bill. As the minister has already mentioned in the other place, existing legislation will not be affected by this temporary measure.

I remind honourable senators that the bill received quick passage in the other place following an understanding among the various parties. Due to the urgency of the situation and the importance for Canada to take preventive measures at this time in view of the important international gatherings to be held in this country, I hope that the Senate will give speedy consideration and passage to the bill.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—ORDER REINSTATED AND DEBATE ADJOURNED

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, with the permission of the Senate, I would like to refer to the inquiry of Senator Michaud.

Senator Asselin: Is it an urgent matter?

Senator Riley: It is an urgent matter.

Senator Asselin: Could it not be left until tomorrow?

Senator Riley: With the permission of the Senate, I would like Senator Michaud's inquiry reinstated on the Order Paper now so that I can move the adjournment of the debate.

● (2110)

Senator Langlois: It has been debated.

Senator Asselin: It is finished.

[Translation]

Senator Riley: Not yet.

[English]

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, on a point of privilege, perhaps the matter was dealt with rather rapidly. I think it escaped the attention of a few honourable senators that the debate on the inquiry introduced by Senator Michaud was to be terminated this evening. Senator Riley, I know, wants to say a few words on this inquiry at a later date, as do I. For that reason, I would ask the indulgence of honourable senators in allowing Order No. 5 to be reinstated.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that Order No. 5 be reinstated on the Orders of the Day for later consideration?

Senator Perrault: For consideration tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Riley, seconded by the Honourable Robichaud, P.C., that this debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to say I do not agree with the assertion by Senator Robichaud that the debate was concluded too rapidly. I think Her Honour gave adequate notice that the inquiry would be considered debated if no other honourable senator rose to speak on it.

Order reinstated and, on motion of Senator Riley, debate adjourned.

CANADA YEAR BOOK

1974 EDITION

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the 1974 edition of the Canada Year Book.

He said: Honourable senators, this is not a subject of primary importance or one having any priority. I simply want to put forth a few observations on the 1974 edition of the Canada Year Book.

There have been many notable and commendable changes to this publication. The 1974 edition was released a few weeks ago. It is our annual review of social, economic and political developments in Canada. Our annual review in this form began in 1905, although there had been issues printed on a sporadic basis from Confederation to that time.

I should like to call attention to the reduction in the number of pages. In 1972 there were 1,600 pages. This was reduced to 950 pages in 1973, and further reduced to 914 pages in 1974.

The quality of the Canada Year Book has been improved. The 1974 edition has been intelligently edited and incorporates some excellent innovations. It is educative and in good taste. Having said that, I should like to point out that the last two editions have also changed in format and have placed added emphasis on the use of charts and graphs. There are a number of new chapters, and the one on history now includes a complete background on all of Canada's developments. The chapter on health has been rewritten and made much more informative. There is a chapter on energy, which replaces what was formerly the chapter on the electric power, covering all forms of energy. The new edition also reflects the latest changes in the federal housing programs.

There is a chapter on the Constitution and the legal system, embracing the court structure and law enforcement agencies. There is a newly named demography chapter which incorporates the former chapters on population, vital statistics and migration, and a chapter on family incomes and expenses which, I think, is most useful. There is a chapter on scientific research, which incorporates data on federal expenditures in the areas of natural and human sciences, and activities in those fields conducted by federal and provincial organizations, including economic planning agencies. Finally, the chapter headed "Selected Economic Indicators," summarizes the national accounts. The other chapters have been generally upgraded and streamlined.

The Chief Statistician, Dr. Sylvia Ostry, and her editorial staff, are to be commended for the remarkable editorial improvements and the high quality attained in the latest edition of the Canada Year Book.

There are some constructive observations which can be made about the 1974 edition. I believe it can be further improved by updating the charts, the data, and the statistics which, in many cases, are out of date. Because of the great value of the Canada Year Book, it is important that the information it contains be as current as possible. It is a very useful volume, and I am continuously making reference to it but I have found that many of the charts are out of date. I realize the difficulty in publishing current data, but there is certainly room for improvement here.

The 1974 edition was issued, as I said earlier, towards the end of 1975 or early in 1976, but it does not contain any information on 1974 proper. I would point out that there are about a dozen chapters that have no information whatsoever later than 1972. Some of these are on crime reporting programs, police, personnel, provincial government, executive councils, federal commissions, government defence, training programs and operations. Even the chapter on labour has information only up to 1972. There is a chapter on mines and minerals that is updated only to 1972. Another on transportation has a number of references dating up to 1972.

I believe this can be improved, and my purpose in raising the matter tonight is to see whether something can be done, with some work and perhaps some difficulty, to achieve improvement. In my estimation it must be done, and now that computers can be used there are fewer and fewer excuses for not furnishing these statistics. The last chapter, on economic indicators, is excellent; it is updated to recently.

The delays in releasing this book make it obsolete in a way. It is a costly book; I would assume it must cost about $10. I believe it is a most important book, which should be upgraded. The gap between the information it contains and the date of issue is often too large and it does not relay to those who use it what it should.

Senator Bourget: Does the honourable senator not realize that a book such as this cannot contain up-to-date information such as he would like to have? It would be very difficult to prepare such a voluminous book containing all the up-to-date information. That is how I view it. Of course, I am not against what Senator Desruisseaux has said.

Senator Desruisseaux: I honestly believe that the book is issued too late and that much of the information it contains could be related more nearly to the date of its release. I do not wish to ask for the impossible. I am merely trying to prompt the statisticians to produce figures that will help us a little more than those presently contained in the book. I have cited some of the chapters. In that on health and welfare there is information not much later than 1971 and 1972. However, in other chapters there is nothing since the last census. I suggest that, wherever possible, what I ask for should be done, and in that way I believe this book can be improved. We will see what happens next year. They have been going on the right track; I should like to see them continuing in that way and provide us with this information if they have it.

Senator Bourget: I am all for improvement.

[Translation]

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I think we should congratulate Senator Desruisseaux for calling our attention to this matter. The remarks he made are certainly timely. We have always, at least since my childhood, considered the Canada Year Book as an impressive volume in respect of its binding, typography, printing, etc. Although the format has been changed a little, it is still a well-bound volume, with all the techniques of typography, printing, and so on. However, as emphasized by Senator Desruisseaux, we are living in the computer era; the computer can provide us with the information much more rapidly than the old printing technique.

Then, pursuant to Senator Desruisseaux's remarks, I wonder whether we might not suggest to the people who bring out the Canada Year Book to consider a format that would be easier to handle and more in line with the present time.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, may I put a question to Senator Desruisseaux? Is it not so that translation requirements do delay the production of such documents to a certain extent? This takes time, I think. On several occasions I have heard from several people who may not have a thorough knowledge of this matter but who are familiar with it that delays are often caused by translation problems.

I shall never object to translation, either from English to French or from French to English. But, all the same, this takes time. The job of the translator is a very difficult one. The work must be done very carefully and there must be as few mistakes as possible. And all this takes time, I believe. I think it is the one of the main causes of this delay which we all lament. But, I shall ask the honourable senator the question: Am I poorly informed or is it a real problem?

Senator Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, of course translating requires time. We have had several occasions to complain about that. But we French Canadians do insist on having a copy in French at the time the English version is published. I think this is logical.

Senator Forsey: I agree.

Senator Desruisseaux: I know there are some important technical problems. But I do not see why they do not give simultaneous translations when they have the English text. They send it out to have it translated and they proceed chapter after chapter, I assume. I do not know. I was in journalism for twelve years. I imagine that is pretty well how it goes. But I think in most cases as soon as an English text is ready, it is sent and translated. On the other hand, if the whole book is sent at the same time to be translated, it would be another reason to complain, but I do not know the procedure used.

My only purpose in talking about it tonight is that for two years I noted the progress made by the Canada Year Book, which is our bible, as it were. It is our economic and social bible which depicts the developments that we go through. An effort must be made to do what seems impossible, to provide the most recent information.

Some chapters are perfect. I had noted some, but I misplaced my notes. I could have mentioned them to you. On the other hand, others are pitiful. Of course, the Bureau of Statistics is not to be held responsible. All those providing it with information become involved in a case like this. For example, I do not see why they might not proceed in such a way that when information of a statistical nature is sent to a department—like the Department of Labour, for example—it is also simultaneously forwarded to Statistics Canada so they can get started on the preparation of the next book. However, it is a lot easier to criticize than to accomplish.

My purpose in making these remarks is constructive; it is to try and advance their procedure, if you want, by challenging them a bit.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 3, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976.

THE ESTIMATES

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the supplementary estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March 1976.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES—POSSIBLE MOVE OF HEAD OFFICE TO CALGARY—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, there are reports in British Columbia that Pacific Western Airlines proposes to move its head office from Vancouver to Calgary. This is a matter of some importance affecting employment in our air industry, and it is of real concern to several hundred people.

Can the Leader of the Government advise whether the government will allow PWA to move its head office, and whether representations have been made to the controlling shareholder, which is the Government of the Province of Alberta, with respect to this matter?

Senator Flynn: Have you given notice?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that representations in some form have gone forward from the Province of British Columbia to the Canadian Transport Commission with respect to the recent announcement by Pacific Western Airlines that the company intends to relocate its head office, and ultimately its servicing facilities, to Alberta.

Senator Benidickson: Is it owned by the Province of Alberta?

Senator Perrault: Senator Benidickson is asking whether Pacific Western Airlines is owned by the Province of Alberta. Yes, to a substantial extent that is true. As the majority shareholder, the Government of Alberta, I understand, has taken the position from the date of its acquisition of shares that because, in its view, the Province of Alberta is not "a person," neither it nor its crown-controlled entity, Pacific Western Airlines, is subject to any rulings of the Canadian Transport Commission.

I understand that the matter was taken to the courts and a ruling was handed down approximately two weeks ago contrary to the position taken by the Province of Alberta, that, in fact, the Province of Alberta, for the purposes of CTC legislation and CTC jurisdiction, is "a person" and thus Pacific Western Airlines is subject to CTC rulings and regulations.

It is my understanding that this opinion may well be challenged in a higher court.

Senator Flynn: Of Canada?

Senator Perrault: However, it is the view of the government that the CTC does have jurisdiction over air carriers like Pacific Western Airlines. Consequently, the relocation of servicing facilities from British Columbia to Alberta, so far as it might well affect the efficiency and quality of the service offered to those along routes presently serviced by Pacific Western Airlines, should, in the view of the government, come under CTC review in the ultimate.

I do not wish to comment further because I understand that determination is now being made as to whether or not the jurisdiction of CTC vis-à-vis Pacific Western Airlines and the Province of Alberta is to be carried to a higher court. There is concern, however, at the CTC about the ultimate implications of such a move.

● (1410)

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, the problem is that the Government of Alberta can effect the change of the head office before the CTC proceedings have been carried through and a fait accompli might be left on the table so far as British Columbia interests are concerned.

I might point out to Senator Benidickson that this was a shareholder-owned company and the Province of Alberta made a takeover bid for a control bloc, at which time it said it would not affect the operation and management of the airline. That assurance may or may not be carried forward.

I would like the assurance of the government leader that the Province of Alberta will be approached to ensure that it is not directing the management of PWA to make a change in the head office.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have learned, as a result of conversations earlier today, that there may be further information available with respect to this entire matter by the middle of next week. The concern expressed by Senator Austin is a concern felt, I understand, by the CTC—a concern that, if a move should be effected during the period when the decision regarding the powers of the CTC to regulate Pacific Western may well be referred to a higher court, the CTC could be faced with a fait accompli. The honourable senator has raised a very valid point. I hope to make another statement on it by the middle of next week.

Senator Flynn: Was this matter discussed in the Liberal caucus this morning and, if so, was the Alberta viewpoint expressed?

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, the matter was not discussed in any caucus this morning, and I am concerned—

Senator Flynn: On a point of order, my question was not directed to Senator Austin; it was directed to the Leader of the Government. I cannot ask a question of another senator.

Senator Perrault: Mr. Clark was not in our caucus this morning, so that viewpoint was not available.

Senator Walker: Do you mind if I ask a question now, Senator Austin? Are you through?

Senator Austin: I wanted to make the point that the Province of Alberta has not yet had its purchase of shares approved by the CTC; yet, it seems to be moving the head office to Alberta. That is a matter of very considerable urgency and importance.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, we seem to be getting into a debate on a question, which is strictly prohibited by our rules.

Senator Perrault: I rise to defend the honourable senator. The matter which is the subject of questioning this afternoon is an appropriate line of questioning, and I think the Chair would consider it to be so.

Senator Grosart: Except the rules say there shall be no debate, and any second comment, other than a question, is a debate.

Senator Argue: Change the rules.

Senator Bourget: Again!

Senator Argue: They are outdated.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY CABINET MINISTERS— QUESTION

Senator Walker: Honourable senators, in view of the very serious allegations against three federal cabinet ministers, Messrs. Lalonde, Chrétien and Drury, by an honourable Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec, of deliberately interfering with the due course of justice, would the Trudeau government consider the setting up of a royal commission to investigate these charges involving, as they do, a shocking attack on the independence of the judiciary, one of our last bastions of democracy?

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator has often questioned the veracity of press accounts of various incidents which occur on Parliament Hill. I would remind him that the basis of his question is a story which appeared in a well-known national newspaper this morning. The government is concerned with obtaining the facts of the situation as they exist. We do know that thus far the Honourable Mr. Chrétien, President of the Treasury Board, has stated that unless he receives an apology within three days, legal action will be launched against one of the jurists in question.

The honourable senator made reference to there being "three cabinet ministers involved" in this "shocking" allegation. We do know that one of the individuals alleged to be "involved" was not a minister when the incident was alleged to have taken place.

If I may express a personal view, if these incidents occurred in 1969, as has been alleged in the press reports, remarkably, it appears to have taken seven years for the accuser to muster a sufficient sense of outrage to express himself as he is reported to have done in the public reports made available this morning.

Senator Walker: Obviously my friend is not a lawyer. If he were a lawyer he would appreciate the seriousness of these charges. This should be investigated, first, to uphold the honour of the cabinet, which will be difficult because two of its members have admitted making such statements; secondly, and most important of all, because it is a reflection on the judiciary.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator—

Senator Walker: Just a moment. I know my friend is very anxious. He is a new boy and a new leader.

Senator Argue: Better than being an old boy.

Senator Walker: He has to defend everyone, particularly the Liberal Party. Let me tell you this. If these facts are true—and I have the greatest confidence in the person who makes the allegations—

Senator Denis: Question!

Senator Walker: I am answering the question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. If it is true—and it is true, or it would not have been made by this distinguished member of the judiciary—you are in really hot water, and I wish you would not palm off this question in the way you do so many other questions, but will go into it and give me the answer. You could not have read the article, because it included all the correspondence between the minister and the judge. It is a shocking thing if any of it is true. Unlike other questions that come up in this house, do not try to palm off this one in that way. We lawyers want to know and want it gone into thoroughly.

Senator Perrault: I appreciate the honourable senator's long and learned dissertation on this subject.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Almost as long as your answer.

Senator Perrault: I want to assure honourable senators that the government is conscious of the necessity of observing the highest legal and parliamentary traditions and the highest standards with respect to this matter. The allegations and accusations will not be allowed to rest on the table. An active investigation is under way at the present time, first of all, of course, to determine the veracity of the allegations that have appeared in the press.

Senator Walker: Naturally.

Senator Perrault: I am sure the honourable senator agrees that a determination of the facts must be basic to any investigation, because he has a profound sense of justice, which he has expressed so many times in this chamber. I assure all honourable senators that the government is aware of its responsibility and is not going to allow the matter to rest. It would be intolerable and untenable under our system of law and under our parliamentary system to allow these allegations and accusations to go unanswered. However, for the honourable senator to suggest that somehow the government is engaged in a "cover-up", or is less than sincere in determining the truth, represents a substantial distortion of the facts, and I hope that he will wish to withdraw these inferences.

Senator Walker: Knowing the number of cover-ups that my friend knows about, I am not going to say anything more.

Senator Perrault: Name them.

Senator Grosart: Order! This is why we have rules against this sort of thing.

Senator Perrault: I will not dignify with a reply the suggestion by the honourable senator that the Leader of the Government here is aware of a number of alleged "cover-ups." I cannot believe that the honourable senator wishes to pursue that kind of baseless allegation. The Senate should be outraged by the impropriety of such remarks. I hope that we can terminate this exchange. Indeed, I am sure that even the senator's honourable leader would never support that kind of arrant nonsense.

Senator Walker: We will leave it where you want me to leave it, but if you want me to name some of them I will.

Senator Perrault: In view of those remarks, perhaps the honourable senator will demonstrate parliamentary courage by going to the front steps outside the Senate and making any allegations against me there, where no parliamentary immunity exists. I challenge him to do so. If he is unwilling to do that, I suggest that he desist from his line of injurious, ridiculous nonsense.

Senator Flynn: I rise on a point of order to try to settle this problem. The Leader of the Government gets excited very easily and then he makes remarks that are completely out of proportion. I would hope that he will soon learn when to sit down and just smile. If he thinks it could be helpful, I will volunteer to give him a lesson after the sitting.

Senator Perrault: We need no lecturing from the honourable senator this afternoon or at any other time.

Senator Flynn: It is quite obvious you don't see the need.

Senator Perrault: I suggest to honourable senators that we do not need anyone standing up in this chamber and sanctimoniously making serious kinds of allegations against any other honourable senator while cloaked in that great mantle of parliamentary immunity. If the Honourable Senator Walker has any serious charges to make against anyone on this side, or anyone in the government, he should have the courage to do it outside of this chamber.

• (1420)

Senator Flynn: I would suggest that the Leader of the Government is blowing this question way out of proportion. There was no allegation that—

An Hon. Senator: You said "cover-up."

Senator Flynn: Of course, and I will repeat that if you want—"cover-up." I have no hesitation in saying that this government has been trying to cover up many things.

Senator Perrault: Name them.

Senator Flynn: I will if you want me to.

Senator Perrault: All right, go ahead.

Senator Flynn: In this particular instance we are dealing with a serious matter, and I would have hoped that the Leader of the Government would not have tried in a speech to debate it, and especially try to cover up the incident by saying "We are going to investigate it. We are going to do what is necessary. Everybody in the government is deemed to be innocent." That is not true. I do not believe that.

Senator Perrault: Nobody said that.

Senator Flynn: I will not accept that.

Senator Perrault: Nobody has stated that there is guilt or innocence here.

An Hon. Senator: Sit down.

Senator Perrault: It has been stated that an earnest effort is being made to ascertain the facts.

Senator Flynn: How do you know?

Senator Perrault: I want honourable senators to know that very shortly we shall know the facts.

Senator Walker: How do you know?

Senator Flynn: Sit down.

Senator Walker: You are a country boy from the hills of British Columbia and you are out of order most of the time.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would like to ask Senator Walker a question.

Senator Flynn: You cannot.

Senator Grosart: Order! Order!

Senator Asselin: No, you cannot ask a question.

Senator Flynn: Your leader would not want you to put your two feet in it.

PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR COME-BY-CHANCE REFINERY— QUESTION

Senator Austin: I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would like to know whether the government has had representation from the Province of Newfoundland regarding financial assistance for the Come-By-Chance refinery, and whether this government or the government of the Province of Newfoundland has a policy with respect to the continued operation of that project?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice, and I will endeavour to obtain the information as quickly as possible.

TEMPORARY IMMIGRATION SECURITY BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for second reading of Bill C-85, respecting immigration security.

Hon. George Isaac Smith: Honourable senators, I am not sure whether I am being very prudent in venturing into the rather heated atmosphere to which we have just been subjected. Nevertheless, I do not believe I should put prudence ahead of action, and I will see if I can safely get by.

I would begin by saying the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate may well look alert because I shall have to say some uncomplimentary things about this legislation, which he may wish to reply to.

I would begin my comments about this bill by saying that I recognize the dangers the bill is intended to prevent and the responsibility of the government and of Parliament to do whatever can properly be done to ensure the safety of those people from other countries who come to our country to attend the Olympic Games and the Habitat conference, which, as I understand it, is the basis for this litigation.

Of course, we cannot help but remember the terrible incident which occurred at the Olympic Village in Munich in 1972. I am sure we would all be very anxious indeed to do whatever is necessary to prevent the occurrence of any such incident in Canada. At the same time, honourable senators, I suggest that we have a responsibility to ensure that whatever we do is consistent with the principles of decency and fairness which I am sure we all regard as the basis upon which all acts of the government and of the Parliament of Canada must rest.

The problem with which this bill is intended to grapple is a serious and difficult one, which ought to receive the most careful consideration from Parliament. It may be that we have now reached the time when the utmost haste is required in order to enact this bill into law, and to give the minister in question the powers with which it deals. If so, I find it very difficult to know why it has been left until this time. No one can plead surprise.

The date of the Olympic Games has been known for many years. The events of Munich have been known since 1972. The date of the Habitat conference has been known for many months—perhaps even longer than that. The need to afford protection to the people who come to Canada for these two occasions surely also has been known to the minister and his officials and to the government for a long time, for terrorism is nothing new, unfortunately.

I feel I must point out, therefore, that it is most difficult to find any good reason for asking Parliament to pass such a drastic measure as this without its first having the opportunity to consider the matter fully, and without its being constrained by the pressures exerted by the exigencies of time.

Honourable senators, consider for a moment, if you will, the powers this bill would give to the minister. They are contained in clause 2, which reads as follows:

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration may make a deportation order against any person who is not a Canadian citizen and has not been lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence and who, in his opinion, is likely to engage in acts of violence that would or might endanger the lives or safety of persons in Canada or in other violent criminal activity if admitted to Canada or permitted to remain therein.

Obviously no one wants such people to remain in Canada. There is no question about that. But this clause, if I may paraphrase it, gives the minister the power to deport a person who, in the minister's opinion, is likely to do certain things. It should be noted in passing that although the clause refers to the opinion of the minister, it is inevitable that in practice in most cases this would mean the opinion of the officials of the minister's department. Moreover, the clause does not require the minister to have any grounds on which to form his opinion. I repeat that it does not require him to have any grounds. All he needs to do is to form an opinion—although, obviously, he would, as a reasonable person, require some grounds. I emphasize again, however, that, so far as the statute goes, the minister is not required to have any grounds at all. As I have said, all he is required to do is to form an opinion. The minister does not have to disclose the grounds on which he forms his opinion; nor do those grounds have to be reasonable grounds—and, indeed, I understand that the minister has rejected the suggestion that the grounds on which he forms his opinion should be reasonable grounds.

Consider for a moment the kinds of information he is likely to receive and the sources from which that information might come. It might be in the nature of dossiers, information and reports acquired not only by police officials but also by various kinds of informers in other countries. It might originate from adverse political sources in other countries, without being based on fact at all. It might be information which could be and likely would be distorted or coloured by the political opinions of many kinds of people in a variety of countries.

The bill would seem to indicate that there is some sort of protection against an arbitrary wrong decision, in that it states in clause 3:

The provisions of the Immigration Act and the Immigration Appeal Board Act apply mutatis mutandis to this Act.

But what good is the right of appeal, supposing for the moment it actually exists? The minister has only to state that he has formed the opinion that the person concerned is likely to engage in the activities prohibited by the bill. He cannot be required even to disclose the nature of his information, or to say that he has considered certain information and believes on reasonable grounds it is sufficient to justify his opinion.

I can understand, naturally, why the minister should not be required to disclose the source of his information. I accept the argument, and I accept it without reservation, that to disclose the source of his information might well be substantially contrary to the national interest. I am not advocating, or arguing in any way, that he should disclose the source of his information, or say anything which might in a substantial degree contribute towards disclosing the identity of the source; but he cannot even be compelled to state the nature of his information, or that he believes it, or that he thinks that it is reasonable.

Again I say, honourable senators, that clause 3 of the bill, which apparently purports to convey a right of appeal, does not in fact provide the slightest kind of protection to the person concerned, and does not give the appeal tribunal the slightest opportunity to review the soundness of the minister's decision.

Further with regard to the right of appeal, as I read section 11 of the Immigration Appeal Board Act, as amended by chapter 27 of the Statutes of 1973-74, the only persons who have the right to appeal are permanent residents of Canada, persons in possession of a valid immigrant visa or a non-immigrant visa issued to them outside Canada by an immigration officer, persons who claim they are refugees protected by the convention relating to the status of refugees, signed in Geneva on the 28th of July, 1961, or persons who claim they are Canadian citizens. It does not seem very likely that someone who would be dealt with under the provisions of this bill, a person suspected of being a terrorist, would fall within any of those categories. Therefore, I say that on this ground too—that is, on the ground of the actual existence or possible existence of an appeal—the provisions of clause 3 of the bill really add nothing.

I understand the minister claims that this bill simply extends to certain additional persons the powers he now has to deport persons who are already in Canada. In this respect I understand he refers to the power under what he calls a "section 21 certificate." This must be a reference to section 21 of the Immigration Appeal Board Act. That section provides in certain cases for a certificate signed by the minister and the Solicitor General and filed with the appeal board submitting that in their opinion—and I draw particular attention, honourable senators, to these words—based upon security or criminal intelligence reports received and considered by them, it would be contrary to the national interest for the appeal board to interfere with an order for deportation.

A certificate signed by the minister and the Solicitor General is what is referred to here, stating that their opinion—that is, the opinion of both these gentlemen—is based upon security or criminal intelligence received and considered by them. That is a very different thing from saying that simply because the minister forms an opinion he shall have certain powers. After all, the provisions of section 21 of the particular act—I am not talking now about the bill—at least require some safeguard. They require, I repeat, a certificate signed by the minister and the Solicitor General, stating that in their opinion, based upon security or criminal intelligence received and considered by them, it would be contrary to the national interest to allow these people to stay in Canada.

This procedure at least requires the agreement of the Solicitor General, together with a statement that both ministers have come to a certain conclusion, and that they have come to that conclusion based on a specified kind of report or intelligence which they have considered. It provides some protection and assures that the matter will be considered and certified by a person whose duty it is to see that justice is done, namely, the Solicitor General. Though far from perfect, it is indeed better than being able to act upon the arbitrary, unfettered opinion of the minister.

He said that this is only temporary legislation, because it is provided that it will expire on December 31st, 1976. As I said very shortly after I began, it is my understanding that the minister says that this bill is concerned primarily with threats relating to the forthcoming Olympics and the Habitat conference. Habitat is, I believe, scheduled to end on about June 11, 1976. The 1976 Olympics, I am advised, will be over by July 31, 1976. But the bill provides that it shall expire on December 31, which is at least five months after the Olympic Games have come to an end.

I can understand that in order to protect people coming to Canada for these events—both participants and spectators—it might well be necessary to have the power to deal with dangerous persons who seek entry to Canada before the events in order to plan and arrange whatever act they intend to perpetrate during the events. I can further understand why it is desirable to have the power in this bill effective a considerable time before the events take place. However, honourable senators, it is not easy to see how such people, such suspected terrorists, can be a threat in Canada to participants in or spectators at these events long after the events have ceased, and those who have come in either capacity have gone home again. Thus I cannot see the necessity for the minister's retaining these powers after all who have taken part in the events, or who have come to see them, have left Canada.

I submit, honourable senators, that this bill represents dangerous legislation in that it would give arbitrary power to a minister without providing any protection whatsoever against the abuse of such power, or the manner in which such power may be exercised. I am not alleging that whoever may happen to be the minister to exercise these powers will do so in bad faith or without appropriate ability. I simply say that even if it were the ablest minister or the most experienced judge in the land, I would still not want him to have these powers.

I accept the necessity for special protection against persons who might try to gain entry into this country to draw attention to themselves or the causes they espouse by committing terrorist acts in circumstances which would give them the maximum publicity—the type of publicity which normally attends Olympic Games and which can be expected to attend the Habitat conference. But I submit, honourable senators, that in trying to protect against these dangers, we should also try to ensure as much as possible that there is a limit to the arbitrary nature and the duration of these powers to the greatest extent possible without interfering with their effectiveness.

I believe there are three ways in which this legislation can be improved. The first is that it should require the minister to have reasonable grounds for his opinion. By that I do not mean that he has to prove to the world that he has reasonable grounds, but the legislation should ensure that he has such reasonable grounds. The question as to what would constitute reasonable grounds is something to which he would need to devote his attention in making his decision. So far as inserting this condition into the bill is concerned, it could be done quite simply by writing in the words "on reasonable grounds" after the words "in his opinion" in clause 2. Such an addition, I would think, would tend to make the minister's officials more careful.

The second improvement would be to require a certificate signed by the minister and the Solicitor General stating, in the words of section 21 of the Immigration Appeal Board Act, that in their opinion, based upon security or criminal intelligence reports received and considered by them, it would be contrary to the national interest to allow a particular person to enter. There is nothing in this particular requirement which would tend to disclose the source or even the nature of the information upon which these two gentlemen would act, except the requirement that it should come from a security or criminal intelligence source, which would constitute some sort of guarantee that it had a certain degree of validity, and that they had considered and exercised their judgment on the reports which had come to them from such a source.

The third improvement, I submit, would be a shortening of the period during which the legislation is to be in effect. As I have indicated, it seems to me that, in order to achieve the stated purpose, it need be in effect no longer than it is necessary to protect the participants and spectators at the two events in question during the time of those events, and during whatever reasonable period of time thereafter is necessary to allow those people who are going to leave the country to do so. This, I believe, would allow an expiration date of at least as early as August 31—a date which I understand would allow all participants plenty of time to be out of Canada, and which, in any event, would ensure that there was no gathering of people, no events in a certain place, which would supply the terrorist with the kind of publicity he wants.

In closing my remarks, I once more say that it seems to me that this is a dangerous type of legislation. I am prepared to support legislation which gives the minister powers which are necessary to deal with such special circumstances as it may be necessary to meet. Also, in my opinion, the bill which is before us can be improved in the fashion I have mentioned—that is, by making it necessary for the minister to have reasonable grounds for his opinion, by requiring a certificate signed by the Solicitor General, and by terminating the legislation at the earliest reasonable date after the participants in the two events have had an opportunity to leave Canada.

I do not oppose second reading of this bill, but I suggest that after second reading it should be referred to committee with a view to making these or other improvements.

Senator Croll: Would the honourable gentlemen permit a question?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I shall do my best with it.

Senator Croll: Is the honourable gentleman aware that for 100 years, until the establishment of the Immigration Appeal Board, the Minister of Immigration held all the arbitrary powers which it is now proposed to give him? I do not recall his ever being seriously charged with misusing them.

Senator Flynn: Do you want us to go back 100 years?

Senator Smith (Colchester): My memory is not as long as that of the honourable gentleman, but I am aware that for a considerable number of years those powers have been subject to appeal.

Senator Croll: Well—

Senator Flynn: No, no; do not argue.

Senator Croll: I am not arguing at all, but merely indicating that for 100 years in this country there was no appeal. There was opportunity for appeal under the Immigration Appeal Board Act. During that time the minister had all the powers, and I do not recall ever hearing any charge of misuse. Why should we now suspect that those powers would be misused during these six months?

Senator Smith (Colchester): My more specific answer is simply that it was decided some years ago that it was unsafe to leave these powers without appeal. The situation has not changed, and if it was unsafe at that time it is unsafe now. As I say, my memory does not go back as far as that of some, but I remember the decisions under the Immigration Act being the subject of controversy from the time of my earliest knowledge of that act.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear. There has been case after case in the courts.

Senator Flynn: Yes, when Senator Croll was the supporter of civil liberties.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might say a few words with respect to this bill?

Senator Rowe: I have a question for Senator Smith, if Senator Buckwold would yield for a moment.

While listening to Senator Smith's well reasoned, in my opinion, arguments—although I do not support them all—two questions occurred to me. One is that his suggestion that a month's grace be allowed to the minister or to the authorities strikes me as providing a little too short a period in any case. I think we have to face the real possibility that there will be serious attempts by undesirable elements to get into Canada during the period of the Olympics, when there will be a great opportunity to enter this country illegally. However, is a month not too short a period for the cleaning up, so to speak? There is the possibility that these undesirable elements will immerse themselves in the populations of our large cities, or in various parts of the country, Canada being so vast. Would it not be better to provide for a period of several months?

It seems to me from recollection that most special acts of this type are almost by formula terminated at the end of the calendar year, but not with any intention of invoking their provisions right up to that point in time. However, it seems to me that there is a practice of terminating legislation of this type, which is temporary and brought in at a specific time during the year, at the end of the calendar year.

Senator Smith (Colchester): In reply to the honourable senator's first question, I suppose it is really a matter of judgment as to how long after the events have ceased people might want to stay here. However, as I understand the object of the legislation, it is to prevent terrorists from entering Canada in order to carry out terrorist acts at Habitat, which ends on June 11, if my information is correct, and at the Olympics, which will be over by July 31. This legislation is not designed to deal with undesirable elements who may remain in Canada after those dates.

Senator Rowe stated that it is customary for temporary legislation to terminate at the end of the calendar year. I am not aware of any such custom, although I certainly would not dispute what he said. However, even if there is such a tradition, I submit that this is not the type of legislation which ought to be allowed to exist for longer than is absolutely necessary for the carrying out of its stated object, which is to prevent terrorist acts at the Habitat conference and the Olympic Games.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator agree that it is not only on entry that the deportation order can be made? In my opinion, the language of the section is sufficiently wide to indicate that the deportation order can be made in respect of persons not excluded by the section at any time by the minister while the act is in force. In other words, it could be made against people who have secured entry and who still may be guilty of an offence.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is the whole basis of my objection. I am saying that once the stated object has been met—namely, the prevention of terrorist acts at these two attractions for terrorists—the ordinary law is sufficient to deal with any problems in the same manner as it is at present, and as it will continue to be afterwards.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): But it is not restricted to entry.

Senator Smith (Colchester): No, that is my point. If you read the arguments made by the minister in the other place, you have to come to the conclusion—at least, I did—that the object of the legislation is to achieve just what I said, and not to achieve some other object for which the ordinary law has been considered sufficient over the years.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Buckwold for giving way to me, although I fully expected that he would proceed.

I rise to support very strongly what Senator Smith has said. I am very uneasy about this legislation. Like Senator Smith, I am in full accord with the essential purpose of it, but I think it is legislation which has very serious features which are of questionable desirability, if I might put it in almost "Mackenzie Kingly" terms. I can't help feeling that this is another case of a "simple bill", words which are graven upon the heart of the Honourable Senator Laird. Everybody who was present when he introduced that "simple bill" some time ago will recall, I think, that it turned out to be far from a simple bill and needed some very careful examination in committee, which it got, with generally satisfactory results.

● (1450)

As I looked at this bill and at the proceedings in the other place, it seemed to me that they had been far too quick about the thing in the other place, far too easy about it, and that this was one eminently suitable opportunity for the Senate to give a little sober and considered second thought to this legislation.

I can't help feeling that the substance of what Senator Smith (Colchester) said by way of objection can be summed up in the words mutatis mutandis in section 3:

The provisions of the Immigration Act and the Immigration Appeal Board Act apply mutatis mutandis to this Act.

I looked at the Immigration Act and I looked at the Immigration Appeal Board Act and I found section after section after section where I couldn't help asking myself, "How would this apply with this new legislation; what exactly does mutatis mutandis mean?"

You could always say, with respect to a particular section, "Well, this is really wiped out by this new legislation," and to another, "This isn't wiped out." But this would require very careful consideration, in my judgment, and explanations from officials in the department who are familiar with the working of the thing and could tell us the precise effect of this in relation, for example, to section 7(1)(c) of the Immigration Act, section 11(2) of the Immigration Act, section 14, section 24, sections 30 and 31; and sections 11, 13, 18 and 21 of the Immigration Appeal Board Act.

There appear to be, on the face of it, at least to the lay eye—and I am fortified in my doubts by the expert opinion of Senator Smith—a number of cases where the effect of this is obscure and where it is necessary the thing should be cleared up.

We are told this is very urgent legislation, and no doubt it is, but I don't see that it is so very urgent that we couldn't afford to send this bill to a committee and give a day or two's consideration to it there with the minister and the officials present to explain to us the precise effects.

If this bill is not passed today, the roof is not going to fall in, terrorists are not going to come swarming in the day after tomorrow. The events which it is supposed to deal with are still some distance in the future, and I frankly cannot see any reason why this has to be rushed through in one day, which is apparently the intention—certainly it was rushed through in one day in the other place, a very dubious proceeding and one which I am surprised that that vigilant defender of the rights of Parliament, Mr. Stanley Knowles, did not take strong objection to.

The last time that I can recall when this kind of thing was done at breakneck speed was an amendment to the Immigration Act in 1919 to deal with the Winnipeg strike. It took a great many years to get that off the statute books, because, of course, it wasn't a temporary measure like this. But I think it was generally admitted by nearly everybody, and by most people very soon after the passage of that legislation at breakneck speed, that it was a mistake to have done that.

I think this is something that should have further consideration. I think an eminently suitable place to have that consideration is a committee of this house, presumably the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. And I am the more anxious that this should take place because of something in the speech of the Deputy Leader of the Government yesterday, which so far no one has commented on.

Well, I suppose nobody has had very much chance, seeing that only Senator Smith has spoken. Perhaps Senator Buckwold is going to take this up.

There is this passage at page 1820 of yesterday's Debates of this house:

During the current year the government intends to present Parliament with new legislation dealing with immigration which will embrace the concerns of this temporary bill.

Well, I don't know what "embrace the concerns of this temporary bill" may mean, but if the intention is to bring in some permanent legislation, something of the same sort, then I think the sooner we examine what is being done here the better, and the easier it will be for us to deal with the permanent legislation when it comes along if we have already cleared up what effect this kind of legislation would have upon the existing acts, the Immigration Act and the Immigration Appeal Board Act.

I very much hope that the government will see its way clear to sending this bill to a committee where it can be examined with the care and the detail, and with the precision and exactitude, which it seems to me to require.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I will not express an opinion as to whether the bill should go to a committee. That, presumably, is something for the powers that be on the government side to determine.

Senator Flynn: No, no—the Senate.

Senator Buckwold: Or the Senate. But I do want to express some personal opinions on this bill because I think that in the expressions of those who have just spoken—and I refer to Senator Smith (Colchester) and Senator Forsey—the real implication has evaded them. These are terrible times and very horrible things are happening in this world. Senator Smith has indicated that this is dangerous legislation. I suggest that these are also very dangerous times, and I submit that the gentlemen who have spoken, and I think very wisely, have disregarded—

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Buckwold:—the fact that there are conditions today that did not exist in previous times.

Senator Flynn: Not at all.

Senator Forsey: No, no.

Senator Flynn: Unfair.

Senator Buckwold: I do not think that is unfair. The exigencies of the situation today are such that immediate action must be taken by a responsible minister.

Senator Flynn: He has said that.

Senator Buckwold: I say immediate action, and that action must be taken in a few minutes if necessary. For those of us who have been made aware of some of the nefarious activities that could go on in this country as a result of the influx of persons to international events of great magnitude—and I refer to Habitat and the Olympic Games, and other events—such action on the part of the minister is imperative. The eyes of the world will be on Canada during this next while, and there is no doubt that people somewhere are plotting as to how they can achieve international notoriety by some outlandish and horrible act.

I suggest to honourable senators that the government has responded to this in the only way it could by giving the minister the opportunity to have those people thrown out, deported, at once—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Buckwold:—without having to go through the whole procedure. I agree that this is for a limited period. I do not think it would be the intention of the government to have this as a permanent feature.

Senator Forsey quoted the Deputy Leader of the Government as saying that in the future this will embrace the concerns of the government on immigration. I am not sure what the minister will be embracing, but it may be more than concerns.

I suggest that if we listen to Senator Smith, who gave us three suggestions—namely, that the source of information should be literally made available.

Senator Smith (Colchester): No, I did not.

Senator Buckwold: I am sorry. You used the words "reasonable grounds". Certainly the minister will have reasonable grounds. It will not be because he does not like someone's name or what somebody says. Certainly there will be reasonable grounds. Secondly, he suggested that it should be signed not only by the minister but also by the Solicitor General, which again could result in a very significant delay at a time when minutes can be precious. Thirdly, he suggested that the period be shortened, and I appreciate the remarks of Senator Rowe that there could be some months of follow-up activity as a result of the presence in this country of people who are undesirable, and that could lead to very serious consequences.

My honourable friends, I suggest that the times are such that legislation like this is needed. It is emergency legislation because the times are emergency times. I submit that the bill be dealt with in the light of the things that I have brought to your attention and not considered as part of a laissez-faire attitude, that everyone must be given their due course. I say this because things are different, when we talk about terrorism in the world today.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps the honourable senator might permit a question. Why do you say that the two suggestions I made—that there be reasonable grounds, and that there be a requirement for a certificate signed by the Solicitor General—would result in any serious delay taking place?

Senator Buckwold: I can envisage a telephone call and an action in two minutes if the information is such that the minister feels that it is important for the safety and security of this country, or visitors to this country, that action be taken. That is how desperate the situation could be. That is the very purpose of this legislation. If not, there are other procedures that could have been followed in order to achieve this end, had we wanted to allow the normal processes to take their slow course. I suggest that the emergency is such that this bill is required to meet it.

Senator Forsey: May I ask the honourable senator a question? He talks about the delay involved in getting a certificate from the Solicitor General, and he seems to imply that if one of these undesirables presents himself at a port of entry, in the absence of this legislation he can be whisked through before you can say "Jack Robinson". Surely, that is not what happens at a port of entry.

In the days when Newfoundland was a separate country, I used to have to go through immigration procedures when I came into Canada from Newfoundland, and I can assure the honourable gentleman that there was no business of my whizzing through—and I was only a youngster at the time, only a minor, an infant in law. There was no business of my whizzing through before you could say "Jack Robinson". These people have to be examined.

There is a telephone call and all that, but I cannot understand the idea that before the man is off the telephone line, this terrorist will be at large and rushing up to the Olympics in Montreal. Surely he is not telling us that that is the way the ordinary procedures of the Immigration Department are carried out. I never heard of such a suggestion in my life. Surely the length of time that it takes for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to walk from his office in this building to the office of the Solicitor General—which, I believe, is in the West Block—is not going to cause disaster, red ruin and combustion, and the breaking up of laws. Surely he is not suggesting that this is the kind of procedure—lightning speed procedure, one-fiftieth of a second, or one one-millionth of a second, computer speed procedure—that goes on when people seek admission to this country?

Senator Walker: Question.

Senator Buckwold: I do not know what the situation was when Newfoundlanders were foreigners. It may be—

Senator Carter: They still are.

Senator Buckwold: It may be that, as a babe in arms, Senator Forsey had difficulty in convincing the immigration officer—

Senator Forsey: Answer the question.

Senator Buckwold: —that he was not here to destroy the country.

I would just point out that there might be times when it would be difficult to get the Solicitor General. He may be out of the city. He could be anywhere. I am certain this was very carefully considered by those who drafted the bill. It was determined that there could be an emergency situation where even that kind of delay could result in loss of life or serious damage taking place in this country.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wonder if the honourable senator would permit another question? Would not the person about whom the inquiry is being made, or in respect of whom the fear is held, be in custody in any event?

Senator Forsey: Of course he would.

An Hon. Senator: No.

Senator Buckwold: Not necessarily. This is not necessarily going to happen when someone is at a port of entry. They could be in the country, and they should be removed very quickly.

I am sure Senator Langlois, in closing the debate on second reading—

[Senator Forsey.]

Senator Flynn: The list is already drawn up. These individuals will not be identified by the immigration officers at ports of entry. The list has already been prepared. The certificates could be signed in advance by the Solicitor General, or his deputy. We have to be realistic about this.

Senator Buckwold: I very much appreciate the assistance given me by the Leader of the Opposition. It is very helpful.

Senator Flynn: You needed it.

Senator Buckwold: It was very helpful. Again, I do not want to wind up the debate on second reading. I think I have made my contribution. I feel quite strongly on this. I do not think there is a real appreciation on the part of some honourable senators with respect to the emergencies that could arise.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Smith (Colchester): On a point of privilege, I think I might be permitted to say that it seems to me there is no realization of the necessity of preserving individual liberties on the part of the senator who has just spoken.

Senator Forsey: On a point of privilege, honourable senators, I wish to point out that both Senator Smith (Colchester) and I were very careful indeed to say that we saw the necessity of some legislation of this sort. We were not saying everything is normal; that this is the nineteenth century. We were most careful to preface our criticisms with a most explicit admission of the grave circumstances and grave dangers which are present. I strongly object to the suggestion that I, at least—and I think Senator Smith (Colchester) may want to make the same objection—was unaware of the gravity of the times and that we were, in effect, trifling with this subject.

An Hon. Senator: Let's get on with the job.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Langlois speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Flynn: Make it short.

Senator Walker: Adjourn it.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, after the lengthy and numerous exchanges which have taken place between both sides of the house, there is little left for me to say.

When I introduced this bill last evening, I underlined that it applies to two categories of persons, namely, persons at ports of entry wishing to come into Canada and persons who are already in Canada but known to be persons who would likely engage in criminal activities in Canada. This bill does not concern itself with normal, well-intentioned visitors to this country; rather, it is aimed at dealing with terrorists.

Senator Smith (Colchester) expressed surprise that this bill was introduced on the eve of the two important international gatherings which are to take place in Canada in the course of this year. However, I wish to remind honourable senators that international terrorism on a world scale is a new phenomenon. Until recently, we had not experienced events such as those which took place in Munich in 1972, or which have been taking place in many other parts of the world involving kidnapping and murder. It is a new brand of terrorism, something to which we have not been accustomed. It is in the face of such reality, bearing in mind the two important international gatherings which are scheduled to take place in Canada in the course of the year, that this legislation was introduced.

I share Senator Smith's (Colchester) concern that such a bill should be introduced, bearing in mind the principles of fairness and justice. All bills should be introduced in that kind of spirit. However, notwithstanding that there is some possible danger inherent in the application of this legislation, we have to view it in the light of the type of terrorist activities that are taking place the world over. In my opinion, it would be far more dangerous not to have this legislation in order to deal with such events which could occur in our country during the coming months.

Senator Smith also raised a point in connection with the expiry date of this legislation, December 31, 1976. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration covered this point in his speech on the motion for second reading of this bill in the other place. If I may, I should like to read from page 11288 of the House of Commons Debates of February 26, where the minister said:

This is emergency legislation, but we have made the commitment—and I feel very definitely that the commitment will be met—that we will be placing before this forum the more profound immigration bill and new policies which are being developed now. Unquestionably, this area of concern will have to be dealt with. I want the House to have the opportunity to deal with it in a broader context than this particular situation permits, or the time or emergency permits, and indeed I want to bridge that period but with a definite expiry date which is December 31, 1976. With this time-frame and these conditions and events, we had in mind the setting of the date. We looked at 60 days, or even precisely the end of the Olympics. We felt we needed a clean-up period—

This was covered, I think, by some honourable senators this afternoon.

—and thought it would be wise to provide for the other bill to come in, at which time the matter in broader context than this will be placed before the House.

I think this also covers the point raised by Senator Forsey. He alluded to my remarks last night, when I made a brief reference to the coming piece of government legislation, the new Immigration Act, and I said this:

During the current year the government intends to present Parliament with new legislation dealing with immigration which will embrace the concerns of this temporary bill.

Having these conditions in mind, and also the fact that a new Immigration Act will be introduced later on in the year, and because we need a clean-up period after the Olympics, nobody would, I suggest, venture to work on the assumption that as soon as the Olympics end all those undesirable persons are going to walk out of the country on the same day. There might be some cleaning up to be done, and we want the minister to have the power and be able to carry out this obligation of ours.

I now come to the assertions that were made this afternoon with reference to the Draconian powers contained in this bill. Again I should like to refer the Senate to what the minister said in the other place, at page 11285 of the Commons Debates of February 26, 1976:

I already have the power, Madam Chairman, arbitrarily at my discretion, to deport persons after they have been admitted to Canada. As the act now reads, at the border, at the port of entry, it requires our officers, who would not be in possession of this evidence for reasons already placed before you, to admit in the absence of a reason not to. So I would be in the silly position of having to let a person in and then having to trump up or find a reason later to apprehend him and turn him around. But I can do that now without appeal, so there is no change whatever in the appeal structure.

This power, which bothers all of us—this question of arbitrariness—already exists in another form, too, in our immigration law, and that is in the application of section 21 of the act. Even where the appeal right does exist, as it does now for landed immigrants, for refugees, for Canadian citizens where there is a doubt about their papers or the validity of their claim to citizenship, and for non-immigrants with a visa, we can and still do—and unfortunately have had to in some 40 cases in the last eight or nine years—submit to the Immigration Appeal Board what we call a section 21 certificate, which in fact is a guillotine on the use of the Immigration Appeal Board's compassionate and humanitarian jurisdiction. It is based totally on a statement by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, with the co-operation and collaboration of the Solicitor General, that evidence available to us of a security and intelligence nature indicates that this person should not be granted that compassionate jurisdiction because of a threat to the security—criminal, subversive or terrorist—of the state.

On the same page he went on to say—

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wonder if the honourable senator would permit me to ask a question at this point.

Senator Langlois: Would the honourable senator be kind enough to allow me to read this quotation from the speech of the minister in the other place?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Certainly.

Senator Langlois: He said:

As I say, Madam Chairman, the principle has been established. One can argue that it is Draconian, but it exists in almost every state in the world that I know of. In Britain the Home Secretary has more Draconian powers than those I am asking for here. The same applies in the United States, I believe in Sweden, and I think in all countries that we are inclined to agree fit into our pattern of democratic, civil libertarian traditions. We are certainly not stretching beyond that.

Your question, please?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I was going to ask the honourable senator if he would agree that the provisions he just read with reference to the certificate of the Solicitor General are not precisely what I suggested?

Senator Langlois: Yes, indeed. The honourable senator must bear in mind what the minister said about the application of section 21. He called it a "guillotine." I do not know what additional safeguards this could give. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, we are not dealing with bona fide visitors to this country. We are dealing with well-trained terrorists who are about to come into our country, and we are turning them out at the border, at the port of entry. If the honourable senator is ready to take the chance of waiting for a certificate from the Solicitor General, who might be out of the country, or at the other end of Canada—

Senator Smith (Colchester): The man is in custody.

Senator Langlois:—before this man is prevented from coming into the country, he will find that on many occasions the country is full of terrorists before such certificates can be obtained. As the honourable senator himself pointed out, we have to be realistic, because we are not dealing with ordinary, well-intentioned visitors. We are dealing with future visitors who are intending to come into Canada to commit criminal acts. Surely such a person would not cross the border carrying a banner saying, "I am a terrorist from such-and-such a part of the world, and I want to come into Canada to create disturbance, to create trouble." We will have to be very, very alert and ready for action.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps the honourable senator would permit me another question. In order to make the deportation order effective, is it not necessary to have the person in custody?

Senator Langlois: In custody?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes. How are you going to deport him if you do not have him in custody?

Senator Langlois: How can you arrest a person who is not admitted to Canada? He is still at the border; he is not in Canada.

Senator Smith (Colchester): We are talking about deportation orders.

Senator Langlois: We call it deportation because it would also apply to visitors who have already come into Canada. The main purpose of this legislation is to prevent these people from coming into Canada, to stop them at the border before they are admitted to this country.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is right.

Senator Langlois: That is why alertness and the possibility of immediate action is absolutely necessary to deal with this kind of person.

I pass now to the suggested amendment of Senator Smith, which was also proposed in the other place. Although the honourable senator did not give the wording of his amendment, I assume it is similar to that proposed in the other place, an amendment suggested to clause 2. It purported to add the words, "on reasonable grounds" after the words "who, in his opinion," to make it read:

• (1520)

—who, in his opinion, on reasonable grounds, is likely to engage in acts of violence—

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

These words were to be added to clause 2.

The minister's reason for turning this suggestion down was that he had consulted lawyers in this respect, he had sought legal advice, and had come to the conclusion that for good reason he could not accept this amendment.

As I underlined yesterday, the information upon which the minister could be called to act would be information obtained from very sensitive and often protected sources, and which could not be divulged without exposing the security of the country.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am not asking him to expose anything.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, one does not add words to a clause for the sake of adding words. In practice, the minister could be asked to divulge and explain his "good reasons." Then he would not be able to put his "good reasons" forward without divulging the source of his information. That is exactly why he objected to the amendment in the other place.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is not what I am saying.

Senator Langlois: If the minister is called upon to justify his actions, how would it be possible for him to act on the spur of the moment, so to speak, at the time the man presents himself at the port of entry? If we add this provision to this piece of legislation, I am afraid we might completely destroy the possibility that the minister might have of acting promptly and in good time.

There were some other amendments which have been dealt with through exchanges which took place this afternoon between honourable senators. I do not think it necessary to deal with them. They have also been dealt with in the other place, as senators who have read the Debates of the House of Commons know.

I now pass on to the remarks made by Senator Forsey, who mentioned that this was not a simple bill. No one on this side of the house, or on the other side of the house, has made such an assertion either yesterday or today. It is not a simple bill. It is a short bill but it is a bill which is complicated enough. It is not my intention to treat it as a simple bill.

Senator Forsey also made reference to clause 3 of the bill which reads:

The provisions of the Immigration Act and the Immigration Appeal Board Act apply mutatis mutandis to this Act.

When I introduced this bill last night I said this bill did not affect in any way the existing laws of Canada. It does not affect any right that may exist in certain cases. We are not changing the existing laws of Canada. Any person who may feel aggrieved or limited in his freedom of movement in Canada due to this legislation can afford himself of any other legal recourse now existing in this country. Again I state, we are not changing any existing laws of Canada. The Immigration Act would apply mutatis mutandis, if it is applicable to a particular case.

Senator Forsey: In what case?

Senator Langlois: We may have a visitor to Canada with a visa, and probably in a case of that kind—I am not an expert on immigration law—there might be some provision of the Immigration Act which applies to him. We are not changing that. We are not taking anything away from the existing legislation which deals with persons entering Canada with a visa, persons coming to Canada as landed immigrants or, for that matter, any resident of this country be he a Canadian citizen or not.

Now, the following question was asked by Senator Forsey and Senator Smith (Colchester), "Why are we pressing for this litigation at this time? The Olympic Games are still three or four months away. Why are we so anxious to have this legislation passed by Parliament?" As I explained last night, there are preventive measures which must be taken now. We cannot wait until the Olympic Games have started in Montreal to take those steps. I must add that at present the Immigration Department and the law enforcement agencies are very much on the alert in order to prevent the entry into Canada of would-be terrorists. It is for this reason that the government wants to have this legislation on hand.

Senator Forsey: Today?

Senator Langlois: In the House of Commons, by agreement of the parties, the debate took about two hours.

Senator Forsey: I said, do you have to have it today?

Senator Langlois: Not today. When I discussed this very matter last evening with the Leader of the Opposition outside the house, I reminded him that in the other place the bill was discussed in Committee of the Whole. It was not referred to a standing committee of the house but studied in Committee of the Whole in the presence of the minister. I asked the Leader of the Opposition if he wanted to proceed in the same manner in this chamber. I stated that if he wanted to have this bill studied in Committee of the Whole with the minister present in the Senate, I could make arrangements. However, I would have had to make them last night so we could deal with this bill today. I did not pursue that any further because the Leader of the Opposition was to contact me and give me his reaction to my suggestion. He did not call back.

This morning, however, having this in the back of my mind, I made some inquiries as the possibility of the minister's being present this afternoon at a Committee of the Whole. I was told the minister was out of the country; he was in Europe on a very important trip and would not be available this week. I do not know when he will be returning. It is likely he will not be available for a good part of next week.

It is unfortunate that we are in this position but, as I stated earlier, this bill was thoroughly discussed in the other place and with Commons agreement it was passed within a matter of hours.

I am at the disposal of honourable senators to answer any question they want to put forward. I am entirely in the hands of the Senate, of course, but I would urge that this bill be not sent to a committee. If we could have had the minister present in Ottawa this afternoon, we probably could have arranged for a committee meeting tomorrow morning with the minister present, but apparently we have missed this opportunity.

I would urge honourable senators to give consideration to my suggestion of disposing of this bill this afternoon.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, may I ask one further question? When the deputy leader was referring to a proposed amendment in the house, I may have failed to catch what he said in full but I do not think he read part of the amendment which was suggested there, which would have covered this point about revealing sources. If he will look at page 11285 of the Debates of the other place for February 26, he will find near the top of the first column, that the mover of that amendment not only said "on reasonable grounds," but would have added the words:

• (1530)

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to require the production before any court or tribunal of any sources of information whose disclosure the minister certifies would be prejudicial to the security of Canada.

I venture to suggest that that might cover this question of revelation of sources which seemed to disturb so considerably the mind of the honourable deputy leader—and I think with reason. That particular amendment, if it could be considered in Committee of the Whole or by a standing committee of this house, might dispose of the particular difficulty he had in mind.

Senator Langlois: I am sorry if I omitted to quote the whole amendment as moved in the other place by Mr. Brewin. My honourable friend is correct in asserting that the additional paragraph he just quoted was added to the original motion so that the words "on reasonable grounds" would be added to clause 2.

In the debate which followed the introduction of this motion in the other place, however, I believe the point was made that if the minister were required to establish the reasonable grounds, inevitably he would have to divulge the information, thus giving the source of information, which was exactly the position the minister took in the other place. He said that if he were called upon to do that he might well be prejudicing the security of Canada.

Senator Forsey: Surely there is a distinction between the information and the source of the information.

Senator Langlois: The point is that if you give the information there is a grave danger that the information itself will divulge its source.

Senator Flynn: I rise on a question of privilege, honourable senators. The honourable deputy leader mentioned that he had not obtained any answer from me with respect to whether the bill should go to committee. As far as we on this side are concerned, the speech which Senator Smith (Colchester) gave this afternoon contained the answer.

Senator Langlois: I was speaking of last night.

Senator Flynn: But I am referring to today.

Senator Langlois: I am sorry you were not present, senator, but in your absence I said that I had telephoned you last night, suggesting that if it was your intention, and that of your colleagues, to have this bill sent to committee, or to Committee of the Whole with the minister in attendance, I could make the arrangements then—that was last night. I said that, as I understood it, the agreement was that you would return my call on that. Because you did not call me last night, I could not make the arrangements last night, but this morning, with that conversation in mind, I checked to see whether the minister would be able to be present today, but I was informed that he had already left for Europe.

Senator Flynn: But I told you last night that someone on our side would adjourn the debate, and that I would let you know our position as soon as I had consulted my colleagues.

Senator Langlois: You realize that I was not putting any blame on you at all.

Senator Flynn: Yes. I simply wish to make it clear that in my opinion you have had an answer, albeit this afternoon.

Senator Langlois: Yes, but by then it was too late.

Senator Flynn: It was too late for the minister, perhaps, but surely not too late for his officials.

Senator Langlois: Incidentally, I would not wish to imply that even if I had been able to contact the minister last night I could have delayed his leaving. I am simply making the point that in any event it was too late this morning when I thought of taking action on the matter, because he had already gone.

Senator Flynn: Send it to committee, then.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Langlois, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., that this bill be now read the second time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Forsey: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois: With leave, honourable senators, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Senator Flynn: No, no. Why not send it to committee? At least we can have the officials of the department to explain the procedure. There is no justification for refusing to send the bill to committee.

Senator Grosart: Certainly not. It should go to committee.

Senator Flynn: If no one else will, I will move that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee—whichever committee the deputy leader chooses for me. Would he suggest the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, or perhaps the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science?

Senator Lamontagne: Science Policy.

Senator Grosart: Surely it should be the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

On motion of Senator Langlois, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

[Senator Langlois.]

SCIENCE POLICY

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF CANCELLATION OF MEETING

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, before we proceed to the next item on the Order Paper I wonder if I may have leave to make a brief statement.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, I wish to announce that owing again to unforeseen circumstances—perhaps due to lack of forward planning of this house—the meeting of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy which was scheduled for 3.30 this afternoon has been cancelled.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE (TOTAL ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator O'Leary, for the second reading of the Bill S-23, intituled: "An Act to amend the National Defence Act and the Criminal Code (total abolition of capital punishment)".—(Honourable Senator Prowse).

Senator Petten: Stand.

Senator Flynn: Until next fall!

Order stands.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Keith Davey moved the second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators on both sides of this house will be pleased that this is a non-partisan, non-controversial issue which will be presented in a most low-key way by an obscure and non-partisan backbencher.

Senator Flynn: The reason for your choice.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, in closing the debate which followed the tabling of the report of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, I made the following remarks:

Magazines are special. Magazines constitute the only national press we possess in Canada. Magazines add a journalistic dimension which no other medium can provide: depth, wholeness and texture. Magazines, because of their freedom from daily deadlines, can aspire to a level of excellence that is seldom attainable in other media. Magazines, in a different way from any other medium, can help foster in Canadians a sense of themselves.

Magazines are more important, I would suggest, in Canada than in most other countries. I think it is fair to say that without this legislation there is not one national Canadian consumer magazine the prospects for survival of which are certain. Simply stated, Bill C-58 amends section 19 of the Income Tax Act by deleting from it subsections

(2) and (4). The effect of these subsections as they stand is to accord to certain foreign magazines, of which the most important are Time and Reader's Digest, advantages in the field of advertising which are otherwise reserved to Canadian magazines and denied to all other foreign magazines. Canadian firms advertising in Canadian magazines are allowed, in calculating income tax, to deduct the cost of those advertisements to the extent of 100 per cent. Under the present law they can do the same with the cost of their advertisements in Time and Reader's Digest, which are foreign magazines. Bill C-58 also adds a subsection to section 19 to the same effect:

• (1540)

—for an advertisement directed primarily to a market in Canada and broadcast by a foreign broadcasting undertaking.

I propose to examine the bill in more detail, but I would first offer some background to the Senate.

The problem which the government finally intends to deal with has been around for a long time. In 1922 the Canadian Magazine Publishers' Association sent a telegram to each member of Parliament requesting tariff protection, an initiative which precipitated a national debate on the subject.

In 1931 the Bennett government imposed a tax on foreign periodicals based on their advertising content. Circulation of American magazines dropped off, and that of Canadian magazines rose. United States publishers began to jump the tariff wall and set up subsidiaries in Canada. In 1935 the Mackenzie King government removed that tax and most of the American subsidiaries closed shop. In 1943, Reader's Digest established a subsidiary in Montreal and Time began printing a Canadian edition in Chicago. In 1956, the St. Laurent government imposed a 20 per cent tax on the gross advertising revenue of Canadian editions of foreign magazines.

In 1957, the Diefenbaker government repealed that tax, and then established the Royal Commission on Publications—the O'Leary Commission.

In 1961, the O'Leary Commission recommended measures to ensure that Canadian magazine advertising dollars go to support Canadian-owned magazines. The Diefenbaker government proposed to implement the recommendations. The American State Department opposed the proposals. In 1962, Time established an editorial office in Montreal.

In 1965, the Pearson government made advertising in Canadian editions of foreign magazines non-deductible for corporate tax purposes. Time and Reader's Digest were exempted in spite of the O'Leary Commission's recommendations that they be included.

In 1971, the report of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media said that the 1965 legislation should have included Time and Reader's Digest. As you know, in 1975 the Secretary of State announced that he would introduce legislation to end the exemption.

The nub of the issue, honourable senators, is advertising revenue, and the simple fact that Canadian editions of American magazines have an unbeatable head start in the battle for advertising revenue. Editorial material attracts circulation, which in turn attracts advertising. The Canadian editions of American magazines get most, if not all, of their editorial content free of charge. Doris Anderson, the editor of Chatelaine magazine said it well in a recent letter to the Globe and Mail, which I quote as follows:

One of the major problems is the fact that 95 per cent of all magazines sold on Canadian newsstands are foreign imports; that in addition to this overwhelming competition two of the most powerful magazines in the world have enjoyed a special status as Canadian magazines. This means they have been able to import most of their editorial material at little or nominal cost from the parent publication and then compete for advertising against Canadian magazines who must start from scratch with 100 per cent original Canadian material.

The advertising dollar revenue really tells the story well. In 1950 the total advertising revenue for magazines in Canada was $9.9 million. Time and Reader's Digest between them had 28.3 per cent of that total. By 1968, which was the base year used in the special Senate Committee on Mass Media study, the figure had risen to $24.1 million, and Time and Reader's Digest had 56 per cent of that. In 1974, the last year for which I have been able to find information, $39 million was spent on magazine advertising in Canada, and Time and Reader's Digest between them had 48.2 per cent of that revenue.

Let me put it differently to explain it to you. From 1950 to 1974 Time's Canadian advertising revenue was up 800 per cent. The comparable figure for all other Canadian magazines was 185 per cent. Not surprisingly, annual circulation figures reflect this same reality. From 1950 to 1973, Time's circulation in Canada rose from 6.2 million annually to 26 million, an increase of 319 per cent. The annual circulation of all other Canadian magazines went from 36.1 million to 50 million, up 32 per cent.

Senator Walker: Excuse me. Would my honourable friend answer a question? When did Time start publishing its Canadian edition?

Senator Davey: I think I said that Time began printing a Canadian edition in Chicago in 1943.

Senator Walker: Thank you.

Senator Davey: The deletion of subsections (2) and (4) from section 19 of the Income Tax Act will leave four main criteria for determining whether advertisers may deduct their costs for tax purposes.

First, to qualify as Canadian, a periodical must be printed, published and edited in Canada.

Secondly, it must be 75 per cent owned by citizens of Canada.

Thirdly, the periodical may not be published under a licence granted by someone who publishes a magazine outside of Canada.

The fourth criterion, as contained in section 19(5)(a)(ii)(F), which states that if a periodical's contents are substantially the same as the contents of one or more foreign periodicals it is not a Canadian issue, has occasioned much controversy.

Honourable senators, the fact is that since 1965 this rule has been fully applicable to most foreign periodicals circulating in Canada. Of course, the press in the interim has remained free and unfettered. The government has not, and the government will not, determine content for periodicals. Magazine content, to qualify a magazine as Canadian, does not necessarily have to be written by Canadians or on Canadian subjects. I think that is extremely important. It must, however, be different from foreign counterparts. In fact, a periodical which contains not a single story by or about Canadians could still qualify for advertising tax benefits under section 19, so long as that content is not substantially the same as that in another periodical.

The purpose of this was clear: it was to prevent widespread importation of editorial material marginally altered for appearance's sake to qualify as Canadian content. It is not unusual for Ministers of National Revenue to give interpretations on tax matters, and so, not surprisingly, the minister has given an interpretation of what is meant by "not substantially the same." He has decided that the content of a Canadian magazine is not substantially the same as that of a foreign issue if the combined editorial and pictorial content is at least 80 per cent different. In my opinion any lesser percentage would allow foreign periodicals to continue to dump editorial material into Canada. Presumably, of course, this interpretation could be appealed to the courts.

There has been a great deal of press hysteria about this particular point. Probably the chief agent of that hysteria has been the Globe and Mail. Honourable senators will recall the clear conflict of interest that I suggested the Globe and Mail was involved in when editorializing against Bill C-58. The publisher of the Globe and Mail is the chairman of the board of FP Publications. Not only, as reported in FP newspapers from coast to coast, did FP try to negotiate a deal with Time Canada, but FP owns 24 per cent, and likely effective control, of Ronald's Federated, a company which prints Time and Reader's Digest.

With your forbearance I can only repeat one paragraph from a letter I sent to the editor of the Globe and Mail. I said:

To compare this, as you do, to the government moving in to regulate how much New York Times wire service copy should be carried in the pages of the Globe is simply absurd. The two situations have nothing in common. A truer comparison would be if The Wall Street Journal had decided to launch a daily to compete with your Report on Business, threw in four or five Canadian stories, but took away half your advertising. I wonder if your editorial would have taken a different line in such circumstances.

● (1550)

There is one other interesting footnote about the Globe and Mail as far as this particular issue is concerned, and I would like to quote from a column written by John Slinger in the Toronto Sun of December 23:

Been a bit of a commotion over the weekend at The Globe and Mail which, normally, will have no truck with arbitrary measures. Seems the Globe got a copy of a letter sent to Prime Minister Trudeau by 35 local writers, photographers and whatnots who depend for a bit of their living on selling material to Canadian magazines. The letter supported the government's legislation to banish Time magazine. Four of the people who signed the letter write for the Globe, two on a full-time basis. They are Christina Newman, Martin Knelman, June Callwood and Jack Batten. In signing the letter, these people were taking a line directly opposed to the Globe's editorial line. An agent of the Globe's editor, R. J. Doyle, had to phone each of the four and ask if they would delete their names so the letter could be printed in the paper. It was an absurd request, since the letter had already gone to the prime minister, and the four, quite sensibly, refused.

I am grateful to one of the people who signed that letter for sending me a copy, and I would like to read it into our record. It is, as I said, to the Prime Minister, and it says:

Dear Sir:

As writers, photographers and artists who consistently depend on magazines for a portion of our livelihood, we heartily endorse Bill C-58. We believe that Canadians are worth writing for and about and that they will support magazines that reflect their lives and their society.

Once Bill C-58 has passed, Canadians will welcome Time and Reader's Digest in their genuine role, as foreign publications. Canadian magazines will, for the first time in 30 years, have the opportunity to compete for advertising dollars, unhampered by the kind of cultural dumping which has limited their ability to flourish and grow.

That letter is signed by 35 people, including the four I mentioned.

This legislation, honourable senators, which in my judgment is at least as important as the Canadian content regulations of the CRTC, has worked in the past, is working now, and will work in the future. In 1967, the American business press giants were poised, set to pounce into Canada. Their intentions were thwarted by the legislation I referred to at the time and, as a result, as honourable senators know, we have in Canada today a big, vibrant commercially successful and editorially excellent business press. Even since this legislation was announced, we have a Canadian news magazine which, it is to be hoped, will become a weekly once this bill is proclaimed. Perhaps in passing it should be noted, their huge readerships aside, that Maclean's and Chatelaine did not make a profit in 1974 or in 1975.

I think it is also perfectly fair to suggest that the prospect of this legislation had much to do with the revitalization of Saturday Night. As well as that, honourable senators, to my certain knowledge, there are several other Canadian magazines ready to become operative as soon as we have created the necessary commercial climate with the passage of Bill C-58.

Time Canada did indicate its willingness to meet the bill's ownership requirements, but apparently in any restructuring of ownership one prominent partner was to have been Thomson newspapers. In other words, honourable senators, Time Canada and Thomson newspapers would propose to concentrate even more fully the Canadian mass media structure. Because the government chose to ignore one of the central recommendations of the Senate Committee on Mass Media, the call for a Press Ownership Review Board, a staggering 89.8 per cent of Canadian daily newspapers are now involved in some form or other of common, group or concentrated ownership—89.8 per cent. This should be a matter of grave concern to Canadians.

I shall not expand further upon this point but shall leave the subject by quoting with approval the late A. J. Liebling who wrote in the New Yorker:

Diversity and the competition it causes does not insure good news coverage or a fair champion for every point of view but it increases the chances.

Unlike the United States, honourable senators, we have, at last and at least, disentangled the cross-ownership of print and electronic media. It would be regrettable, it seems to me, to replace that kind of cross-ownership with a cross-ownership of Canadian daily newspapers and news magazines.

There are as well, I believe, editorial reasons for repatriating Time, and with your forbearance I should like to quote a passage from the Mass Media Committee's report which I think sums up this particular situation rather well. Honourable senators who were members of that committee with me will recall this passage, I am sure.

Geography, language, and perhaps a failure of confidence and imagination have made us into a cultural as well as economic satellite of the United States. And nowhere is this trend more pronounced than in the media...

We are not suggesting that these influences are undesirable, nor that they can or should be restricted. The United States happens to be the most important, the most interesting country on earth. The vigour and diversity of its popular culture—which is close to becoming a world culture—obsesses, alarms, and amuses not just Canadians, but half the people of the world.

What we are suggesting is that the Canadian media—especially broadcasting—have an interest in and an obligation to promote our apartness from the American reality. For all our similarities, for all our sharing, for all our friendships, we are somebody else. Our national purpose, as enunciated in the B. N. A. Act, is "peace, order and good government", a becomingly modest ideal that is beginning to look more and more attractive. Their purpose is "the pursuit of happiness", a psychic steeplechase which has been known to lead to insanity.

An article which appeared in the December 1974 issue of the Canadian Journal of Political Science, I thought, put the question rather well, and perhaps I might quote from the conclusion of that article:

In light of over-all policy on mass media, is there any justification for allowing Time and the Reader's Digest to engage in by product circulation in Canada? Does their contribution to Canada provide such a justification? There seems to be no singular contribution made by the Canadian editions of Time and the Reader's Digest that could not be made by allowing Canadian editions of Business Week, Newsweek, Playboy or True Confessions, which are restricted to overflow circulation. On this basis there is no consistent reason for exempting Time and the Reader's Digest from government policy. Their preferred status under the Income Tax Act reflects the influence on Canadian political decisions that these publications have exerted or have had exerted on their behalf.

Honourable senators, I commend this particular article. It is entitled "Interest-Group Tactics and the Politics of Foreign Investment: The Time-Reader's Digest Case Study," by Professors Litvak and Maule of Carleton University and you will find it in the Canadian Journal of Political Science of December 1974.

I concede here today, as I have conceded in many other places and on many other occasions, that Time has provided us over the years with an excellent window on the world, but, as I have also said repeatedly, it has been a window with American-tinted glass.

This morning at the Ottawa airport I purchased the new, the March 8, issue of Time. Although it is the United States edition, it does contain yet another letter from the president of Time Canada Ltd., Stephen S. LaRue, and I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to several passages in this letter. As I say, this is in the American edition and I am curious to find out if this particular letter is in the American edition circulating in the United States. Mr. LaRue says in the letter:

Canadian readers will now receive the U.S. edition of Time. Though it will continue to contain Canadian advertising, the magazine will no longer contain a Canadian editorial section.

● (1600)

Neither in this issue—which, as I say, is the American edition, and on sale on the newsstands here today, and which is proof positive that Time will still be available once this legislation is proclaimed—is there anywhere in the news content any reference to Canada. Apparently nothing of consequence happened in Canada last week and nothing much is expected, because when we look down the masthead we find not a single reference among reporters in cities all over the world to anyone in any Canadian city, even Ottawa.

I should like to read further from Mr. LaRue's letter:

From that beginning, Time Canada evolved into the most distinctive of our separate editions and became a valued voice in Canadian journalism.

That is what Mr. LaRue says. I think it is only fair to observe that Time Canada was also the most profitable of all Time's separate editions. No doubt that underlines the report which some of you read, I am sure, in this morning's Globe and Mail in the Report on Business section, as follows:

With the March 15th issue, advertisers in Time magazine in Canada will buy their advertising space at less than half the rate charged before the passage of Bill C-58—

I would suggest that Time Canada has been on to a pretty good thing indeed.

Again, in his letter, Mr. LaRue says:

Its editorial staff of 33 covered Canadian political, economic and cultural affairs for Canadians and regularly prepared and published Canadian cover stories.

Well, as far as cover stories go, I can do no better than quote Geoffrey Stevens, himself a former employee of

Time magazine. He told us in a recent column what can and does happen, and I am sorry that I do not have the date:

Two weeks ago, Time Canada's plans to run a cover story on the Ontario election were over-ruled by an assistant managing editor in New York who insisted Canadians should find Patty Hearst on the cover. That's intolerable.

That is Geoffrey Stevens saying it is intolerable.

Then finally, with respect to the question of the Time's editorial policy in this country, I would like to quote the prestigious Christian Science Monitor in one of its February 1975 editions, in which it says:

Ottawa proposes not to expose Canadians to fewer foreign ideas but to ensure that they have the option of reading more Canadian ideas. The government, concerned mainly with protecting the financial health of the bona fide Canadian magazine industry, would eliminate only Time's Canadian edition.

This edition, which is sold to Canadian advertisers as a Canadian magazine, contains about five pages of content actually written and edited in Canada. The balance is editorial material lifted directly from the U.S. parent edition—a practice described in some other industries as a form of dumping.

Foreign publications of every stripe and nationality may circulate in Canada, providing they do not carry Canadian advertising. There are no tariff barriers or covert hindrances to the flow of information, ideas and even pure propaganda into the country—if unsupported by Canadian ads. If the Canadian edition were eliminated the parent edition of Time could circulate freely in Canada on the same footing as any other foreign publication.

Honourable senators, I think it should be a source of pride here that this legislation owes its genesis to the work of one of our most illustrious colleagues, Senator Grattan O'Leary. Here is perhaps the most oft quoted passage from his celebrated report:

Only a truly Canadian printing press, one with the "feel" of Canada and directly responsible to Canada, can give us the critical analysis, the informed discourse and dialogue which are indispensable in a sovereign society.

The committee which I had the privilege to chair simply endorsed the principle expounded earlier and much more eloquently by Senator O'Leary. There was at this point in the report one voice of dissent. It was the voice of my gracious co-chairman, Senator Beaubien. Perhaps I could speak about that dissent. Here is the way we handled the matter in the report:

At this point we must take note of a dissent—the only one in our entire report. On every other point we were unanimous; the only issue on which the Committee was divided was its recommendation with regard to Time and Reader's Digest. Fourteen of us agreed. But Senator Louis Beaubien disagreed, and the rest of us respect his right to do so. Indeed, we are anxious to have his dissent on our record.

Senator Beaubien is in full accord—

I hope he still is.

[Senator Davey.]

—with the desirability of helping the home-grown industry. He feels, however, that cancelling the exemption under 12A of the Income Tax Act would produce small benefits compared to the economic dislocation of the employees, shareholders, and others connected with Time and Reader's Digest.

Honourable senators, I prefer—I did then—the logic which was stated clearly in an editorial in the Montreal Gazette of Wednesday, March 5, 1975, which reads as follows:

Certainly Canadians have an opportunity with the two Canadian editions to fill a wide range of jobs. But they work for American superiors implementing made-in-U.S. policy on editorial content. To intimate that all these jobs would be lost to Canada if the Canadian editions were terminated is simply an expression of no confidence in Canadians' ability to produce their own publications if afforded a fair commercial opportunity.

Honourable senators, obviously, by their very nature, magazine digests require special consideration. The Reader's Digest is a case in point. The government has announced that the "80 per cent different" rule on content can be met by this magazine's increasing its Canadian content, and if articles obtained from its U.S. parent are edited and/or condensed in Canada. The Reader's Digest must also, however, meet Canadian ownership requirements. A similar exemption was created in 1965 for periodicals whose principal function was the encouragement of the arts, letters, scholarship and religion. For exactly the same reason this exemption must also be removed. There are now competent Canadian magazines in most of these areas and, no doubt, others would be available and prepared to fill any voids. Incidentally, there is one such foreign magazine, Modern Medicine and Medical Digest, virtually operated by Southam Business Publications Ltd., which could, apparently, meet all the criteria simply by changing its ownership to 75 per cent Canadian, and I understand that such a change is under way.

Now, as has been pointed out repeatedly, after the legislation passes, Time magazine, for example, will still be able to circulate freely in Canada, but it will enter the country for what it really is, an American magazine like Newsweek, Harper's, McCall's, the Ladies' Home Journal, and hundreds of other American magazines which freely circulate in this country. However, we should be clear on one thing, that even with the passage of this legislation the Canadian magazine industry is in trouble. It faces another problem of staggering dimensions—the overflow circulation of American magazines, foreign magazines flooding into this country, chiefly American magazines, competing no longer for advertising revenue, but competing for circulation dollars, for readers' time and attention, and, incidentally, flooding the country with American mores.

The dimension of this flood of foreign magazines, chiefly American, coming into this country is seldom appreciated. It is estimated that currently Canadians purchase 150 million American magazines annually, compared to 50 million Canadian magazines, which is a ratio of three to one. It continues to be a depressing statistic that Canadians spend more money annually on Playboy than they do on the 17 largest Canadian native magazines altogether. Canadians purchase twice as many copies of True Story as they do of Saturday Night.

● (1610)

We are the beneficiaries in this country of more than 100 million American comic magazines each and every year. This is a problem to which some of us will certainly have to address our attention. It is a very difficult problem. Most of us, and I am one, read and enjoy a great many of those magazines—

Senator Flynn: Playboy especially!

Senator Davey:—and I certainly agree that there must be a free flow of information. I would not want to set up any form of cultural iron curtain. I do not know what is the solution. It is an extremely difficult problem. Sooner or later some government will have to come to grips with the problem. Perhaps the answer lies in postal surcharges or legislation relating to magazine distribution. I do not know. Meanwhile, this legislation, Bill C-58, will at least even out the competition and put on our newsstands Canadian magazines which can compete on merit with American productions.

Before discussing briefly the broadcasting dimension of this bill, may I suggest that the choice is extremely clear. A few may agree with the following editorial which appeared in the Fredericton Gleaner on January 27, 1975:

No Canadian news magazine will ever be comparable to Time. No Canadian news magazine will ever have the resources, the hundreds of correspondents around the globe, the spit and polish of Time's professional staff. Time will still come to Canada in its American edition. People cannot do without it. And the fact that its Canadian section is dropped will not deter its subscribers from buying it. For Canadians do not want a news magazine that is strictly Canadian.

However, aside from that editorial's obvious errors in fact, most honourable senators will prefer the logic of that illustrious Toronto Progressive Conservative, Richard Roehmer, who said recently in a speech, I believe, to the Young Men's Ad and Sales Club:

Time has a special tax exemption in Canada and with it goes a special responsibility. That responsibility is to editorially reflect Canada and the Canadian viewpoint. This it fails and refuses to do. Instead, as it grows richer and more arrogant in Canada, it insists on shoving the American point of view at all its readers in Canada.

It is time that Time, the most nationalistic publication in the most nationalistic country in the world, was given the opportunity and the incentive to be repatriated. Canadians could still subscribe to Time. Time might even choose to print its editions in Canada. But it would be read for what it is and not what it today pretends to be in order to make the big buck out of those "taken-for-granted" Canadians whose country is rarely even mentioned in the Time U.S. edition.

And we have seen that in its edition today. Mr. Roehmer completed his remarks by saying:

I am a Canadian citizen and taxpayer concerned with the culture and goals of this nation, not anti-American, but rather for my country.

Although the bill's broadcasting component has received much less attention than its magazine component, I believe it is equally important. The principle is exactly the same. Canadian advertisers who now pay in excess of $20 million annually to American television stations will no longer be able to claim this as a deduction when computing their income tax.

This particular principle, I am proud to say, was, first expounded in the Senate Committee's report on Mass Media. It began with the following observation about television advertising, found at page 207 of the report:

We may reflect, however, that if commercials are not the finest flowering of the television art, they at least represent one kind of pinnacle. They are, for the most part, the ultimate in presenting a totally false picture of reality. We are all familiar with examples: the toothpaste that makes people blow kisses to you; the hair oil that makes the gals pursue you; the tonic that transforms your wife from apathetic drudge to a hot-eyed temptress; the constantly screamed message that if you will only consume something, your pimples will vanish, your stomach and head and feet and back will cease to ache, your sexual life would be the envy of Haroun al-Raschid.

We then went on to say:

Canadian broadcasters, particularly television broadcasters, are also faced with competition from across the boarder. In some fairly notorious cases, the competition comes from stations deliberately created to live off Canadian advertising, and not designed to provide any service to the United States communities in which they are nominally licensed. It has been argued, and we believe correctly, that without the existence of KVOS in Bellingham, Washington, Vancouver could support a third television station... There is also substantial penetration of the Hamilton-Toronto area by the three commercial Buffalo stations... as well as the situation in Windsor, Ontario, where there are five commercial U.S. television signals available... from transmitters directly across the river, in Detroit.

It seems, in any case, that the growth of Canadian television service in areas penetrated by U.S. television signals is likely to be impeded unless Canadian advertisers are given some motivation to keep their money in Canada. Also, it may be noted that certain Canadian laws or regulations—those dealing with food, drugs and alcoholic beverages, for example—may be avoided if advertisements are placed with American rather than Canadian stations, a practice we feel is not in the public interest. We recommend the extension of Section 12A to cover Canadian advertising placed with American broadcasting stations.

Honourable senators, shortly after our report was tabled in the Senate, the CRTC made an identical recommendation to the government.

In our report we were extremely critical of private broadcasting. We said:

For many years, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters has been the voice of private broadcasting in Canada, and we were particularly interested in what this organization had to contribute to our study of broadcasting and its place in the fabric of Canada's mass media. With reluctance, we were driven to conclude that the private broadcasters, no matter how sophisticated their individual thought, seem by group interaction to achieve a level perhaps best described as neanderthal.

Much, I am happy to say, has happened in the interim. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters, under the leadership of its chairman, Allan Waters, and its president, Dr. Pierre Camu, has finally begun to move into the twentieth century. Thus it is refreshing to quote with favour from a Canadian Association of Broadcasters' document, which says:

In countries like Canada which assign frequencies to privately-owned, commercial broadcasting companies, dependent on the sale of advertising for economic survival, there is a requirement that licensees must provide a high level of service to their community as a condition of their exclusive use of a part of the public domain: i.e., the frequencies assigned to them. Unlike American border stations, Canadian licensees have the responsibility under the Broadcasting Act "to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada".

In determining the number of broadcasting stations that could be licensed for a specific community, one of the factors that the Canadian Radio-Television Commission must consider is the number of stations that the advertising revenue from that community or region could support. The CRTC's concern for each licensee to be able to live up to the level of service required by the licence demands that the Federal Government, the CRTC and broadcasters act to prevent broadcasters not licensed by the CRTC from taking advertising revenues in Canada. The loss of such revenue undermines the Canadian broadcaster's ability to produce in quantity, popular, high quality entertainment programming.

Of the $20 million involved annually, $17 million represents national advertising revenue and $3 million is local advertising revenue. Nine million dollars of this money is spent on the three Buffalo stations, and it is estimated that about $7 million has been spent on the Bellingham station. The annual growth rate of these figures is reported to be 15 per cent. For example, the three Buffalo stations derive 30 per cent of their revenue from a market they were not licensed to serve, from a market served by Canadian stations playing under altogether different and more stringent ground rules.

There are two cogent arguments against this legislation as it relates to broadcasts. One is that Canadian companies could be penalized versus their multinational competition whose U.S. affiliates could still purchase time on U.S. stations. But it seems to me that this is an ongoing problem which exists anyway, and, although I may be naïve on this point, I think that some multinational corporations in Canada are sensitive about their self-imposed standard of Canadian corporate citizenship. The more persuasive argument is that most Canadian television stations are now sold out most of the time anyway, so why penalize the national advertisers?

● (1620)

The government has taken this argument into consideration, but has not as yet set a date for implementation of the broadcasting provisions of this legislation. Personally, I think they should be implemented immediately. In Toronto, both CITY television and the Global Television Network are beginning to attract audiences, but neither one is getting sufficient advertising, and certainly none of the Toronto stations are 100 per cent sold out 100 per cent of the time.

The problem of purchasing television time in Vancouver has been somewhat more difficult, but a third station will soon be on the air and no doubt that will be the time to fully implement this legislation.

It is to be hoped that much of this revenue will find its way into Canadian broadcasting, public and private, to help offset the financial incursions of cable and that the CRTC will ensure that broadcasters so benefiting will use at least some of that revenue to improve the quality of their service.

Honourable senators will no doubt want this bill referred to committee and, if so, perhaps it will be possible for the committee to deal with it expeditiously and, at the same time, hear some of the people who did not have an opportunity of appearing before the committee of the other place. In this connection, I should like to read from a letter I received from the Canadian Periodical Publications' Association, as follows:

Criticisms of the Bill have received widespread coverage, while those of us who have supported this legislation have been rarely heard.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, Senator Davey is a great friend of mine and it was wonderful to hear him lay it on the line, as he sees it, by referring to one newspaper after another—but he has lost the whole point. Time came in, of course, in the 1940s, at which time it had no advertising. It was a new magazine. When he compares its percentage increase in advertising from nothing up to a phenomenal figure, that would be so with any magazine. Until we had the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest, we had no magazine industry in this country which was viable as advertising media for the advertising market. The magazine industry in Canada was in a slump. It was in such a slump that when Senator Davey chaired the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media in 1971, the Canadian Magazine Bureau would not have anything to do with it, except to come to oppose the taking away from Time its right as a Canadian magazine, namely, to sell advertising, the cost of which could be deducted by the advertisers for income tax purposes.

Reader's Digest, by the way, has been poleaxed, or put out of the way for the time being. Hog-tied though it is, it is not going out of existence; it will continue to exist. For that reason, I shall not talk about Reader's Digest today.

Time, however, is the greatest influence in Canadian news magazines that we have ever had, and everyone knows that. Who here, for instance, would read Maclean's magazine? In contrast, it is as dull and unoriginal as Tom Sawyer is to a modern reader. As far as being a news magazine, it is a farce. Let's be frank about it. We all know that. Why don't we admit it?

Is the Canadian public not entitled to what it wants? Approximately 98 per cent of the Canadian public, according to the polls, wanted both Time and Reader's Digest continued on the same basis of operation as at the present time. Surely the view of the Canadian public should be considered in this case, rather than the view of the small elite group for which Senator Davey speaks. They are the only people who want it. The newspapers do not want it. I do not know of any newspaper in Canada that wants this legislation. There may be some and, if so, I stand to be corrected. The only people who really want this are Maclean-Hunter Limited, that gargantuan publishing company, and Toronto Star Publishing Limited.

Let's be realistic about this. On February 25, after Bill C-58 received third reading in the other place, Time announced it was pulling out. Why? The answer is that the Senate has never refused a House of Commons bill in the last 13 years, that I remember. Thanks to people like Senator Hayden and his committee, and other committees, they have been amended, but none has been refused. So Time, rather than wait for passage of the bill through the Senate, just stopped publishing in Canada.

I hope that will not affect honourable senators in voting on this bill. I shall be asking for a vote on this measure so that those opposed and those in favour can stand and be counted.

Time magazine is gone; it is poleaxed; it is executed. No more will we have a modern news magazine. Maclean's has been making huge efforts during the last year to show that it could fill the bill, but we can see how hopeless those efforts have been.

How did this all come about? The seven-year campaign by Senator Davey is largely responsible for it, first, as Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, when he failed to get action—the recommendations of that committee, so far as Time and Reader's Digest were concerned, were pushed under the table—followed by another campaign, urged on now by the fact that Toronto Star Publishing Limited, a company with which he has been associated, and his father before him, for over 50 years—

An Hon. Senator: Come on!

Senator Davey: Senator Walker, I have never been associated with the Toronto Star.

Senator Walker: I know. You have said that before, but you act as a PR man in connection with the Toronto Star all the time.

Senator Davey: Senator Walker, that is not correct, and I am sure you would want to be correct. That is not a fact.

Senator Perrault: Withdraw it.

Senator Walker: Well, if my friend says that is not correct, I will withdraw it, because he is a man of honour at all times.

The Mass Media Committee was a failure as far as this aspect was concerned, so the whole thing has been put together again and he has induced—I would say that it was he; I do not know who else would do it—he has induced the Honourable Hugh Faulkner, Secretary of State, to introduce Bill C-58, and if he did not, I give my friend the honour and invitation to name who did.

The next point I want to make is that with the Cabinet now, what Davey wants, Davey gets, and he can very well sing that old refrain, "Come what may, I will get my way." And so far he has. The bill has passed the House of Commons after the most formidable opposition. It took almost nine months to get through—a tremendous amount of time—but through it is, and Senator Davey had his way. I think you all should be proud of having such an influential man over there, a man who can act with such consummate skill.

Reader's Digest, in spite of Senator Davey, got a reprieve. Canada got a reprieve, too, in 1812 at the Battle of Chateauguay, from the French Canadians. So did the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest this time. They didn't realize down there in Quebec what a formidable character Senator Davey was, and they didn't realize what formidable opposition Maclean's, MacLean-Hunter and the Toronto Star are. They said, "No; no; no," and "no" it is. Reader's Digest has been spared. It has been spared to come again another day; it will continue to be published. Why? Because it is the greatest French Canadian magazine in Canada today, an outstanding contribution to our Canadian culture and literature.

Time almost made a deal. It was willing to comply with a 75 per cent Canadian shareholding, which is going a lot farther than many American companies would, and agreed that 50 per cent of its content be Canadian. What sort of news magazine would it be with 50 per cent of its content Canadian? There is not enough news in Canada to make 50 per cent of a magazine such as Time Canada. It would be dull reading, I suggest, with the greatest respect. That was the figure suggested by the National Revenue Department in an earlier case. But, prodded by Senator Davey, prodded by Mr. Faulkner, prodded by the new Minister of National Revenue, they were not satisfied with that. They wanted them out of business. They wanted them out once and for ever, so they put it up to 75 per cent Canadian content. And, of course, naturally Time moved out.

● (1630)

We get all the Canadian news from Time at present in six pages. It is wonderful news. You might think I had a brief for Time. I do not even know Time. My only connection was that I once telephoned the president and threatened to sue him for a client of mine, and he withdrew and apologized very nicely. I have not heard from him since. I do not know anything about them.

Senator Buckwold: Obviously.

Senator Walker: Thank you very much. That was very clever. I used to think you were a wit. Now I know I was only half right.

Senator Croll: You have used that one before.

Senator Walker: But it is very appropriately placed, isn't it?

Senator McElman: You are an authority.

Senator Walker: There is my friend from New Brunswick again. It is very nice to hear him. However, I wish he would speak up because I cannot hear him, and he will appear in print without any answer.

Senator McElman: I was saying that your inference concerning Senator Buckwold comes from an authority.

Senator Walker: That is right, and I put you in the same class if you are making me an authority.

Hugh Faulkner is either obtuse, hard-boiled or frightened of the mass media czar, Senator Davey. It is true that Senator Davey is an important man, but who is Senator Davey against 98 per cent of Canadians who want to retain Time Canada and Reader's Digest? A man who has the drag to subjugate the working of democracy. That is what it amounts to. What motivates Senator Davey to flout commonsense, to flout fair play? Is it the Toronto Star?

Senator Croll: Yes.

Senator Walker: Thank you, Senator Croll. Or is it also Peter Newman, the editor of Maclean's? Or is it the great Maclean-Hunter publishing company, which has more than 50 per cent of the Canadian magazine industry at the present time? It has a monopoly of the Canadian magazine industry, plus radio and television stations. With Bill C-58 passed the legislative guarantee of lack of competition ensures that Maclean's maintains a monopoly position. If it is bad now, what will it be after Time Canada drops out? It has been trying to prove itself for years. What will it be like when this bill passes this house?

The career of Time Canada terminated without effectively benefiting as a result the growth of indigenous publications—in other words, magazines originating in Canada. Only the monolith—for the information of the honourable senator from New Brunswick, “monolith” means a whole. It is a massive hole, a great hole.

What is the result of Newman's, Davey's, Faulkner's, Cullen's and Trudeau's Bill C-58? They are all very clever. The first result is the disappearance of the only truly modern Canadian magazine that we have. That is the first loss, and an important loss to the Canadian public. Secondly, it is proof positive that the federal government is bent on destroying competition, as distinct from equalizing competition, because with Time Canada out there is nothing to keep the already monopolistic Maclean-Hunter from grabbing a much bigger field than ever.

Thirdly—this may not matter to Senator McElman—what of the tens of thousands, none of whom are employed in New Brunswick, of employees and shareholders who are enjoying the benefits of free enterprise and free competition in other American subsidiaries at the present time? What will happen to them? What future have they got? Are they not going to be frightened because of the tendency of this government to go up the garden path to a closed economy? Are we becoming a banana republic? What has happened to Canada-United States relations, Senator McElman? What has happened to our good-natured good neighbour policy with the United States?

Honourable senators, turning my attention away from my student for a few minutes, did you ever consider that the United States imports 80 per cent of Canada's entire production? On the other hand, Canada imports 3 per cent to 5 per cent of the production of the United States. I can say—and you can say too, because you have been in the United States on business or on pleasure—that the Americans do not trust us any more. They have watched us nationalize the potash industry without apparent reason.

[Senator Walker.]

They have watched us play pretty sharp with oil. Now they watch us throw out Time Canada, and put Reader's Digest in a straitjacket. It is not beyond possibility that some day they will reply in kind. Perhaps we should not worry about that. However, we had that experience when the Smoot-Hawley tariff was passed in the late twenties, when Canadians had a dreadful experience. It made us realize how much we are dependent, not so much on the Canadian subsidiaries, but on the importation of our production by the Americans.

I suggest that this thing is so serious that we should have a delegation of three from the Senate to interview the Prime Minister. Let us get his three best friends in the Senate to do it. There is no question about who they are. I will put them in more or less alphabetical order, Senator Davey, so that you will not be offended, although you are hard to offend anyway.

First, Senator Austin. He is a very close friend, the latest appointment to the Senate. Secondly, I would suggest his greatest friend, who helped to get him elected originally in Mount Royal, a very close personal friend, his dear friend Senator Giguère. Thirdly, Senator Davey.

I would ask them to go to see the Prime Minister and ask him what he meant by this article which appeared in Maclean's magazine of October 20, based on an interview when he was discussing the subject of nationalism and the measures to which it can lead. This is good; I agree with him here. The Prime Minister said:

I'd say the test of them—

That is, the measures that should be invoked.

—is always: are they by and large good for the mass of the people or are they something which is brought in to protect a small elite group?

Those are his own words—“to protect a small elite group.” Will you take this committee of three of his most intimate friends?

● (1640)

Let us take the Prime Minister's perfectly proper enunciation and apply it to Bill C-58. Is this bill good for the mass of the people? Ninety-eight per cent of the people think not but, of course, as the Prime Minister has often said, the people do not know and he has to tell them. I ask you, is it good for the people? They want Time to remain as it is, as do all who like good newspapers, good news magazines, with six pages of Canadian news and editorials.

Is Bill C-58, to quote the Prime Minister, something brought in to satisfy a small elite group? Of course, it is something to satisfy a small elite group. Who else does this bill protect but the owners of the Star and the owners of Maclean's, and the Maclean-Hunter empire. Surely that is clear.

Now, honourable senators, you have your mission. I know you will see the Prime Minister at 9 o'clock in the morning, and see you he will because of the great affection that he has for you all.

Let us turn to the Davey report on the Mass Media back in 1971. In all humility, may I refer you to my speech on the subject as reported in Senate Hansard of February 3, 1971, almost at the beginning of the day. Let me first read from the Davey report, page 159, where he says:

There is no question that both magazines have been good corporate citizens. It is also clear that their financial success is not solely attributable to the competitive advantage they enjoy. Both are excellent products—perhaps the most skillfully edited mass magazines in history.

That is pretty good for the man who is so violently opposing them today.

Walter Gordon, the great economic nationalist, for whom Senator Davey had a marvellous party—1,500 people at a big hotel in Toronto, with imported wines. Everything was imported. It was a marvellous affair.

Senator Davey: They were Canadian wines.

Senator Walker: Canadian wines, I see. It shows you that the people who were there must have been overcome by the exuberance of what they had before the wines came. Of course, they were telling me this to make me jealous because I was not invited.

Walter Gordon, the great economist, who has been quoted by my friend tonight, said that further consideration was given to whether or not Time and Reader's Digest would maintain what they had as Canadian magazines, as Canadian corporate citizens—what they had had for a whole generation. What he decided there was in spite of the recommendation of the O'Leary report. The O'Leary report was never implemented, but it is going to be implemented now.

I suggest to you, if Senator O'Leary were well enough to be present, even he would say he has changed his mind on this issue. This is what Mr. Walter Gordon, the economic nationalist, the great friend of my friend across the way here, and also a director of the Star newspaper, said on June 14, 1965, as reported at page 2385 of House of Commons Debates:

This government—

And he meant the Pearson Government.

—after giving the matter further consideration, decided that the measure proposed by our predecessors was a sound one. This decision was announced in the Throne Speech of February, 1964.

In other words, Mr. Diefenbaker, instead of embracing the O'Leary report and its recommendations, made the exceptions for Time and Reader's Digest.

At page 470 of Debates of the Senate for February 3, 1971, where Mr. Gordon's remarks are also quoted, I said:

Here we have section 12A passed by the House of Commons at the instance of that great economic nationalist, the Honourable Walter Gordon—

Honourable senators, that is the law you are asked to upset today, the law that was passed by the Pearson Government and which was carried through the house by the Honourable Walter Gordon, who was a minister of the Crown at that time.

In publishing a magazine, particularly a news magazine, the editor must go all over the world for his information. What difference does it make that Time and Reader's Digest, good corporate citizens, should take whatever copy they can from their parent companies? Isn't that what

General Motors does? Isn't that what any subsidiary corporation in Canada does? They take the best they can get and the Star newspaper, now the largest newspaper in the world—

Senator Davey: Probably in Canada, but not in the world.

Senator Walker: All right, not in the world, but with a circulation of half a million. It goes all over the world for its news. It has contacts all over the world—contacts all over Europe and all over the United States. I am suggesting to you that any magazine that can do what Time Canada and Reader's Digest have done would do the same thing if they had the opportunity.

I understand that even now Maclean's magazine is trying its best to get into the big league. They cannot exist without it. A news magazine cannot exist unless it has international ramifications. Why condemn Time because it is able to go to the parent company and get a lot of good information ready made? What harm does that do to the Canadian public?

Time Canada pays a corporation tax of more than 50 per cent, the same as any other company. As my friend has so rightly put it, it is a good corporate citizen. Time has been here for a whole generation, and you are kicking it out.

Time has the approbation—and again I am summarizing—of 98 per cent of Canadians. Time has a Canadian plant, and Canadian employees and editorial writers who must be fired. It is printed in Canada. All its Canadian editorials are published in Canada, and it pays over 50 per cent of its profits, as I stated, in corporation taxes. It gives us six pages of Canadian content every week. The nice thing about it is that with all the American tendency to rub us the wrong way, Time has been factually correct, fair to both sides, and makes fascinating reading.

Honourable senators, we are not a jury—although when I hear Senator McElman, it seems that he talks as a foreman does at times—but we are faced with a great problem. We have it in our hands to throw these publications out, but I ask you to search your consciences to see whether what we are doing is the fair thing in all the circumstances. I was going to speak at greater length, but the time is going on. Search your consciences, and let us have a free vote on this matter. In the meantime, perhaps that wonderful committee will be able to bring back its report.

Senator Davey: I wonder, Senator Walker, if I could ask one question?

Senator Walker: Yes.

Senator Davey: You made repeated reference in the course of your remarks to 98 per cent approbation. I am wondering if you could give me the details of that survey and study. I would like to look at it.

Senator Walker: It was the last time a survey was taken of Time and Reader's Digest.

Senator Davey: A survey taken by whom and when?

Senator Walker: I have no idea. I will get that for you, if you like.

On motion of Senator McIlraith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 4, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 9, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Before the question is put, I should like to give the usual brief outline of the Senate's work for the coming week. I shall deal first with the committee schedule.

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 2.30 on Tuesday afternoon to consider Bill C-85, respecting immigration security, which was referred to that committee yesterday. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has scheduled a meeting for 4 p.m. It will deal with Bill C-71, the Criminal Law Amendment bill, with the Minister of Justice in attendance. If the motion to authorize the committee to examine and report upon Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, has been adopted by the Senate, the committee will proceed to organize for that study.

On Wednesday, the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will meet at 9.30 to consider Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium, and Canada and Israel. Following that, it will hear witnesses with respect to its examination of Canadian textile problems.

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has called a meeting for 9.30 to examine supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976, which were tabled in the Senate yesterday. The Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region will meet at 3.30, and there will be a meeting of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy when the Senate rises.

Although meetings of subcommittees are not usually mentioned, I am informed by the Deputy Chairman, Senator Grosart, that there will be a meeting of the subcommittee of Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, on Wednesday next at 5 p.m.

On Thursday, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has scheduled a meeting for 9.30 to continue its study of Canadian relations with the United States, and the Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will meet at 10 a.m. to consider Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act. Also on Thursday, the Special Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments may meet at 11 a.m. I am advised that this is not definite, and the usual notice will be sent out in due course if the meeting is to take place. The Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region has called a meeting for 3.30 p.m. on that day.

● (1410)

In the Senate, the debate on second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, and other items now on the Order Paper, will be considered in their proper sequence. In addition, I understand that by the time we return next week we will have Bill C-61, The Maritime Code Act, from the other place.

Motion agreed to.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

INCREASE IN BUS FARES IN SAINT JOHN—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on March 2 Senator Riley asked a question concerning transit fares in one of the cities of New Brunswick. The allegation was made that the city in which the honourable senator resides has had bus fares increased by 100 per cent. The senator asked whether this alleged increase is within the anti-inflation program limits. I promised to undertake an inquiry, and I have obtained at least some information.

First of all, the fare increase was not 100 per cent. The bus tickets in that city were 35 cents, or three for $1. They have gone to 50 cents a ticket. More relevant to the inquiry is the fact that the agreement signed between New Brunswick and the federal government covers only compensation agreements in municipalities. Prices and profits are not subject to Anti-Inflation Board jurisdiction. Therefore, the bus fare increase is the responsibility of the municipal government, which would have to answer to the local people about this matter.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY CABINET MINISTERS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can now report further on the matter discussed yesterday afternoon arising out of a question posed by the Honourable Senator Walker.

I have been informed that the Minister of Justice will this afternoon in the other place report that a communication has been directed this day to Chief Justice Deschênes of the Superior Court of Quebec, requesting that the allegations made against certain members of the government be reviewed. Presumably after the Chief Justice has determined the kind of action he intends to take or to recommend it may be possible to make the text of that letter public. I have been informed that only after consideration by the Chief Justice would the government consider it proper to announce any further inquiry, if in fact the Chief Justice makes such a recommendation.

Senator Walker: Under what authority is the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec making this investigation?

Senator Perrault: It is felt that the matter should be referred to the Chief Justice in his capacity as Chief Justice because, of course, one of his associates has made this series of allegations, and the government has determined that this is the most appropriate initial action.

Senator Walker: Because the government is so determined, and because my friend feels that the Chief Justice should investigate it, that does not give him the authority. I am asking what possible authority has the Chief Justice.

Senator Goldenberg: I would point out to Senator Walker that the Chief Justice is responsible for the administration of justice by the Superior Court, and if there has been any interference with that administration the proper person to consider that is the Chief Justice of the court.

Senator Grosart: The question is being asked of the government.

Senator Walker: This has to do with the administration of justice. I am asking what right the government has to appoint the Chief Justice. Next, I am asking what authority the Chief Justice has to act.

Obviously my friend does not know and the leader does not know. Perhaps you would like to look it up. In the meantime, may I bring my friend's attention to his charge yesterday? The charge was that the incidents all took place in 1969. Perhaps by this time my friend has read the letter of the aggrieved member of the judiciary, Mr. Justice Mackay. The most important of all the allegations, of course, took place just a short time ago during the Ouellet trial when Mr. Drury interposed with Mr. Justice Mackay to aid his colleague in the Cabinet, Mr. Ouellet. There does not seem to be any dispute on that, even Mr. Drury has admitted a conversation with him.

Senator Perrault: I do not intend to resume the heat and disputation of yesterday afternoon.

Senator Walker: It was all one-sided.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator stated yesterday that perhaps there was a lack of knowledge about the law on this side. I would point out, however, that all of us have a profound knowledge of the fact that a man or woman is innocent until proven guilty. That is an essential fact here.

Senator Walker: Now, isn't that wonderful. You should go back to kindergarten.

Senator Perrault: It is not appropriate to your station, honourable senator, to rise in your place out of order and attempt to exchange insults with anyone on this side.

Senator Walker: I was simply asking a question.

Senator Perrault: I am simply suggesting to you that—

Senator Walker: "Simply"?

Senator Perrault: —one of the basic allegations made was about an incident alleged to have taken place in 1969.

Senator Walker: That is not what you said yesterday.

Senator Perrault: I said that some of the allegations went back to 1969, or words to that effect. What I said was, I think, relevant and appropriate. However, it has been clearly indicated now that the government is moving in a very appropriate fashion to determine where the truth lies, and action in the highest parliamentary and legal tradition will be taken by this government to make sure that there is no doubt left in the public mind.

Senator Walker: May I read what you did say yesterday, with the permission of Senator Argue, of course? At page 1825 of the Senate Debates of March 3, 1976, you said:

If I may express a personal view, if these incidents occurred in 1969, as has been alleged in the press reports—

You are wrong on all counts so far.

—remarkably, it appears to have taken seven years for the accuser to muster a sufficient sense of outrage to express himself as he is reported to have done in the public reports made available this morning.

So, do not try to be cheap and slip out of a statement that you made yesterday.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame! shame!

Senator Perrault: As an honourable senator who has served in a previous government, Senator Walker is setting a deplorable example for newer senators in this chamber by his use of such language. When I spoke yesterday afternoon, perhaps I should have said "some of them are as far back as 1969." Nevertheless, the fact is that one of the incidents which apparently has caused this sense of outrage in the mind and heart of this particular jurist occurred in 1969. That was seven years ago. Apparently it took seven years for him to determine to make the allegations reported in the media yesterday.

Senator Walker: The Ouellet case was just a few months ago. It is all very well for you people on your side who vote for the government and never vote according to your own convictions—it is all very well for you to say that the fact is this.

The incident that caused him to turn in the report was just a few months ago. It related to a chap called Ouellet, whom you sit with in the cabinet. You knew that, as well as you know anything, when you made that statement yesterday, which deceived the house. You said seven years.

● (1420)

Some Hon. Senators: Order. Order.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators,—

Senator Walker: I would not say you deliberately did it, but you deceived the house.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator is obviously a very badly frustrated senator this afternoon.

Senator Walker: Never mind me. Just answer the questions.

Senator Perrault: When one must engage in the shoddy parliamentary practice of imputing motives, one has a very weak case indeed.

Senator Walker: You are just as shoddy.

Senator Perrault: I feel sure that most Canadians, indeed, I rather suspect most members of the Opposition, are quite satisfied with the action the government is taking to determine the facts of the matter.

Senator Walker: Speak for yourself. Don't speak for the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, just as a preface to the question I wish to put to the Leader of the Government, in my opinion, as I said yesterday, he should know when to accept the fact that he has made an error.

Senator Walker: A gaff!

Senator Flynn: Because it is quite obvious that his reference to 1969 was entirely irrelevant, I am now asking him if the report of the Chief Justice will be made public. It may be a matter of administration, as was suggested by Senator Goldenberg to the Leader of the Government, because Senator Goldenberg apparently thought the Leader of the Government would not have the proper answer—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Flynn: —but it may be something else. And it would be well for us to remember that a member of the judiciary is not under the authority of the Chief Justice in matters other than administration. I should like the Leader of the Government to assure us that the report of the Chief Justice will be made public so that we may be given the benefit of his views on that very special point. Members of the judiciary, I repeat, so far as their privileges are concerned, do not come under the authority of the Chief Justice.

Senator Walker: Don't even try to answer.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have no further statement to make at this time, but there is always that possibility.

Senator Flynn: I hope.

Senator Grosart: Possibilities.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Davey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, for the second reading of the Bill C-58, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act".—
(Honourable Senator McIlraith, P.C.).

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I should like to ask permission to defer to Senator Cook today, reserving my right to intervene in the debate at a later date.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the Honourable Senator Cook leave to proceed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Walker: Honourable senators, I believe this is an appropriate time for me to intervene. Yesterday Senator Davey asked me the following question, which is to be found in the Debates of the Senate at page 1845:

[Senator Walker.]

SENATOR DAVEY: You made repeated reference in the course of your remarks to 98 per cent approbation. I am wondering if you could give me the details of that survey and study. I would like to look at it.

I told Senator Davey yesterday that I had no idea because when I was here yesterday I did not know when, but my answer today is that it was the Gallup Poll of January, 1975.

Hon. Eric Cook: Honourable senators, this is not a good piece of legislation. There are in my opinion very serious objections to it. Some of those objections have already been stated by Senator Walker and I am in agreement with him on those. One of my objections is that the legislation has not a very noble aim. It seeks to take away something—that is, revenue from printed advertisements—which has been peacefully and quietly enjoyed for a quarter of a century, from one corporation, for the purpose of, hopefully, investing the revenue in another corporation. The sin of the corporation which is to be punished is that it is a United States corporation. The virtue of the corporation which is to benefit is that it is a Canadian corporation. In my opinion this is not a clever piece of legislation, because I doubt very much that more than a few, if any, Canadian advertisers will switch to the Canadian corporation.

To sum up, unless Maclean's magazine can survive on its own merits, choking the Canadian edition of Time magazine to death will not help.

If the bill is passed it will be a major victory for the ultra-nationalists, the most vocal of whom seem to me to be the academic community and a number of bureaucrats. These people are always urging us not to sell our soul to the foreign investor, and they command us to stand firm against foreign capital. They point out that if we are prepared to put up with a reduction in our national standard of living for a generation or two we shall emerge bigger and better. It seems to me, however, that most people who talk this way are hypocrites. A reduction in our standard of living will make little or no difference to their secure way of life; rather, it will fall clearly and totally on the shoulders of the helpless, the old, the very young, the sick, the disabled, the unemployed and the unorganized. These Canadians are not in a position to give a damn whether the help and assistance they must get from the nation comes from employment and taxes generated from the operations of a Canadian investor or a foreign investor.

In my view we must stop this ultra-nationalist madness and adopt a rational, sensible policy towards the development and welfare of our country. A small first step towards this goal would be to defeat this bill.

On motion of Senator McDonald, for Senator Hayden, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE (TOTAL ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator O'Leary, for the second reading of the Bill S-23, intituled: "An Act to amend the National Defence Act and the Criminal Code (total abolition of capital punishment)".—(Honourable Senator Prowse).

Senator McDonald: Stand.

Senator Flynn: Until when?

Senator McDonald: If you would like a proposal from me, for ever.

Senator Flynn: Well, why not make it?

Senator McDonald: For the information of the House, Senator Prowse is not well.

Senator Flynn: I am not discussing that.

Senator McDonald: I will endeavour to get in touch with him in the next few days and find out if he wants the matter to stand until he returns or whether he is prepared to let it be removed from the Order Paper.

Order stands.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Michaud calling the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.—(Honourable Senator Riley).

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, with permission I would like this order to stand until Wednesday, March 17.

Senator Flynn: That is St. Patrick's Day.

Senator Asselin: You were ready to speak on Tuesday evening.

Senator Riley: I said I wanted to obtain some figures. You were not paying attention.

Order stands.

AN ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION FOR CANADA—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, February 10, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, Senator Petten adjourned this debate on my behalf, and, if it is agreed, I am prepared to proceed now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, first I want to congratulate Senator Desruisseaux who raised this very serious and very touchy subject—the matter of the policy of free trade in Canada.

I do not want to hold you back Senator Desruisseaux; do not feel obliged to stay.

I must say that when I saw that proposal on the order paper my first reaction was: "Well, well, Senator Desruisseaux, contrary to what I would have thought, is a free trader". Yet, knowing full well the area he comes from, understanding fully the normal attitude of Canadians and that businessmen, particularly in central Canada, are generally for high tariffs while we from the west and people in the Maritime provinces are rather free traders, I was a bit surprised to see this proposal. But when I heard his speech I understood his point of view. He is not a free trader. And, do you know, I fully understand his position.

Senator Desruisseaux: If you will allow me an immediate observation. You say that I am not a free trader. I think you should, and it would be good if you accept my point of view, say that I am not a free trader unless there is a reciprocal arrangement. That is not the same thing.

Senator Molgat: Thank you very much, senator, I accept your point of view. In that case we agree—perhaps not on the modes of application but certainly on the whole.

As I was saying, if I were a senator representing an area like yours, with an extensive textile and footwear industry, as well as a high rate of unemployment, it is quite possible that I would be less of a free trader than I am.

Senator Desruisseaux: No doubt about it.

Senator Molgat: Then, I fully understand.
[English]

However, as much as I appreciated my honourable colleague's speech, and as much as I think it is important that he should make that speech here and bring the matter forward, it seems to me that there is another side to the story having a somewhat different emphasis from that presented by him.

I see that as having three elements. The first is the one that we debated just briefly a moment ago—the question of complete free trade. The second is, what happens if we do not move? The third is timing.

I want to deal first with the question of complete, absolute, unequivocal, unilateral and sudden free trade. Obviously this is impossible. And those of us in western Canada who have been pressing for years and years for freer trade have never taken that position. We quite understand that there has to be a gradual progression in any process, and that there must be reciprocity, but what we have been pushing for is some forward action. It is our view that there has not been sufficient action, and what action has been taken has always been grudgingly rather than vigorously taken. It is our view that for the benefit of Canada we should be moving much more quickly. So when we see developments under GATT, we think that Canada should be in the forefront, pushing, one of those really leading the battle.

Canada has taken certain steps. There was the auto pact, for example, and western Canada supported that agreement although it did nothing for us. It has created substantial employment in central Canada but none in western Canada. And it has not meant any reduction in the price of automobiles or trucks. Nevertheless, we support it because we think that is the proper course to follow. Agreements to reduce tariffs by reciprocal arrangements on some industry basis or product basis is a good step forward.

We believe further that regional agreements can be made. This is where Canada should be moving—in agreements with the European Common Market, the United States and Japan, with whoever our main trading partners are. Senator Desruisseaux, in my opinion, put the case very clearly of the dangers of moving suddenly into free trade. My question, though, is: What happens if we do not move and if we do not move quickly enough?

I think we are faced with an entirely new world situation, and Canada must assess its position in the light of that situation. We have only to look at the development of the economic blocs throughout the world, such as in Europe where a Common Market has been developed which is now larger than that large economy to the south of us. The total population of the Common Market member nations is larger than that of the United States. Japan in the post-war period has developed a tremendous economy with a huge internal market and access to the world. That development is going on elsewhere. In Latin America there are now two groupings developing—the Central American common market and the Andean group. Groups of countries are being formed to work together. Australia and New Zealand have agreed to work together on a free-trade basis.

The second development taking place is a growing contact with the Communist world. I recognize that President Ford no longer believes in, or does not use, the word "détente", but bit by bit our contacts with both Russia and China are growing; our trade contacts are growing. It is inevitable that this will continue, and that those markets will open to western goods. Will Canada, however, be in a position to jump in there? Considering our present situation with an internal market of less than 25 million people and an economy geared to that, plus some world markets, but not world markets on the basis on which they are developing now, will we be ready to move into those new fields if we continue our present attitude?

Senator Desruisseaux: At what cost?

Senator Molgat: At what cost? That is right. But at what cost if we do not move? That is the other element of the story which, in my opinion, we must consider very carefully.

The third development taking place is the growth of new economic centres. Honourable senators, we only need to go into the retail stores in this country to find there goods from Taiwan, Hong Kong, Brazil and Singapore. The shoes, shirts and textiles, produced now in Canada are being produced in all those countries at a much lower cost.

Senator Desruisseaux: Shoes no more—hardly any.

Senator Molgat: Hardly any are produced here, because we simply cannot compete with these countries on that basis. We only need to look at the book we all received recently on South Korea to realize the developments in that country. Consequently, as Canadians we must change our attitude. In my opinion, there is no future for Canada in the production of footwear, shirts and the standard elements. We must move ourselves into the new technology, and we have the capability to do that.

Senator Desruisseaux: Why?

[Senator Molgat.]

Senator Molgat: Because we could serve our people and our country better by going into those new fields where we can compete on the world markets, whereas we cannot compete in what might be termed the standard technology field.

Another element is the growing importance of the multinational corporations, and those corporations today are tremendously powerful. They presently produce by themselves, just the multinationals, 10 per cent of the total output of the non-communist world. That is how powerful they are. Their production, the production of U.S. multinationals, is greater than the total U.S. production, and the danger in that for us is that these multinationals could move their production facilities, their research facilities, and their management, from country to country.

An Hon. Senator: And they do.

Senator Molgat: And if they do, and we have not had the chance to bring our management skills and trained people to the proper level, those multinationals will not be here. They will be elsewhere. We will not be part of that particular action and our people will suffer as a result.

Possibly the best way I can describe the changing situation is to quote directly from the Economic Council of Canada on the dangers that we face as Canadians. I am quoting from page 55:

In 1960 Canada's domestic market was close to or larger than sixteen others among twenty-three industrial countries and not substantially below the average size. By 1980, however, the Canadian market will be less than one-quarter of the average size of the economic units into which these countries will by then be grouped. Canada will thus find itself one of the very few industrial countries without free access to a market whose population numbers over one hundred million.

That is the risk. If we do not move along we will find ourselves with a shrinking market, with less and less access to world markets, because we will not have the economies of scale. We will be producing for a small number of people relative to the markets outside of us and we will not be competitive.

What will happen is this: There will be a growing demand for protection, and increasingly we will be looking inwards rather than outwards. That is a dangerous course for Canada. Those are the risks that I see in not moving. Those are the dangers that I see ahead if we do not move along.

A third question is: If we are going to do something, when is the best time to do it? What is the right timing? Is it now or should we wait? It seems to me that the situation is proper now. We are in the fortunate position of having the second best educated labour force in the world, second only to that of our American neighbours. We have highly trained people. We can move into other types of production where the skills, knowledge and training which our people have can be used effectively. The longer we wait, the smaller will be the gap, because other countries will improve their standards.

Another point is that our birth rate has changed very substantially. As a result, we are not facing the same kind of pressures. Well, we are right now but we will not be by the time whatever action we decide upon has taken effect. We will not be facing the same kind of pressures in the amount of employment. The figures I have indicate that between 1971 and 1974 the average yearly increase in our labour force was 250,000. In 1974 alone, 290,000 people came onto the labour force. Let us go further, to 1982 and 1985. The estimates are that the figure will have dropped to 170,000. It will have dropped from 290,000 in 1974 to 170,000 in 1984, a very profound change in our requirements as to the number of jobs.

Let us look at the other side, to the quality of jobs, and deal with the aspect of better jobs for our people, better paying jobs, and jobs where their skills can be better used.

Senator Desruisseaux gave us figures the other day which indicated the importance of manufacturing in the whole output of Canada. Those figures are also decreasing.

It is true that at the moment about 20 per cent of our total employment in this country comes from manufacturing, but that figure is decreasing. Again quoting from the Economic Council of Canada's report, at page 63:

Manufacturing, the principal sector of the economy affected by Canadian and foreign trade barriers, now accounts for only about 20 per cent of employment in Canada, and this proportion has been falling.

Further along it says:

Manufacturing industries in which tariff protection exceeded 5 per cent accounted for only 15 per cent of total Canadian employment in 1970.

So, basically we are at the position where approximately 15 per cent of our labour force could be affected. That is not a negligible amount, but it is a manageable amount provided there is proper government action to correct it.

Looking at these factors and at what is going on around us—looking at what has happened in Europe, the fact that just last year Ireland, Great Britain and Denmark decided to join the Common Market following great objection from many people, and bearing in mind that this is an accelerating thing—in my view the time is now, and we cannot afford to waste any further time.

It would be simplistic to suggest that there will not be dislocations, that there will not be great damage to certain individuals and certain regions. That is why any action taken must be done on a gradual basis. But the longer we wait, the more difficult it will be, because if we wait too long we will face a crisis and we may then be pushed against the wall or may have to act too hastily. We should therefore be looking at a gradual, steady move and be prepared to have proper government programs to protect those individuals who will be damaged and those regions which will be hurt. The longer we wait, the more danger there is.

I agree totally with the opening paragraph of Senator Desruisseaux's excellent speech, when he said:

[Translation]

... total free trade, as recommended by some economists and recently envisaged by the Economic Council of Canada to help expand our foreign trade, deserves serious consideration.

I fully agree, honourable senators. It is essential that we act now.

[English]

Is the Senate the proper body to do this? In my opinion, it is a good place to start. We have here the people with the knowledge and we have the mechanism. Whether it is to be done through the National Finance Committee or through a special committee, we should take this on right now as a specific task. We should go through this report in detail, arrange to have the members of the Economic Council appear before us, and start some action to see what should be done and where we should be going.

There is no question that as Canadians we must act, and I cannot express the need and the urgency of acting in this regard any better than the Economic Council of Canada, when they say in the final paragraph of the last chapter:

We submit, therefore, that Canada can certainly contemplate the idea of a really determined move towards trade liberalization. We would go further. We do not think that this country can afford to take any other action. Such a step is inevitable if Canada is to remain one of the world's advanced economic powers and at the same time satisfy its other national objectives. Freer trade, according to the Council's appraisal of the Canadian situation, is the policy most likely to contribute to a viable, dynamic, and growing economy in a country that remains politically autonomous and internally united.

• (1450)

Senator Desruisseaux: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Molgat: Certainly.

Senator Desruisseaux: I should like to preface my question by commending Senator Molgat on an excellent presentation in favour of freer trade. However, a number of questions arise from what he said. I agree with him that more studies in the area of free trade, and arguments for and against, should be encouraged.

In my region, which comprises a good part of southern Quebec, many industries have closed down because of low-cost imports with which we cannot compete because we do not have the same base for production costs.

Senator Grosart: Question.

Senator Desruisseaux: I am wondering whether the honourable senator is aware of these closings, the most recent one having taken place a week or two ago. That closing, I understand, involved a company in the glove industry.

Senator Molgat: I may not be aware of individual closings, but I am certainly aware that many industries, such as the glove industry, the textile industry, the shoe industry—what is left of it—have certainly been through a very difficult period, and I am conscious of the difficulties that this presents for the individuals concerned, both the workers in and the operators of these plants. However, I do not think that will change, except through much higher tariff protection, and if we move to much higher protection we may be creating other difficulties for our country in other fields.

In my view, the answer is to retrain those people affected for better jobs in more highly technology-oriented industries. I do not feel we should attempt to compete in those fields where, quite obviously, such countries as South Korea and Taiwan can produce the product at far less cost, and will continue to do so for the foreseeable future. I think our citizens are sufficiently educated to be directed into new industries, but such a course of action would take time and a government program.

Senator Grosart: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is Senator Molgat in favour of free trade in the area of magazines?

Senator Molgat: Certainly; I would not support any action involving tariffs. As far as I am concerned, there should be free trade in the area of magazines.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not propose to detain the Senate for very long this afternoon. I am constrained to rise, first of all, to compliment Senator Desruisseaux for bringing this important matter to the attention of the Senate and, secondly, to congratulate Senator Molgat for an able and very worthwhile contribution to this debate.

I was sitting with Senator Buckwold while listening to Senator Molgat's speech and I asked him where Senator Molgat got all his information, to which he replied, "Well, this is just western talk. We have it for breakfast." Certainly, the way it came out is evidence of the fact that he is familiar with this important subject—a subject that is really of the lifeblood of the economy of this country.

In the east we have heard about the westerners and their interest in free trade. John W. Dafoe made this Article No. I of the economic credo of the Winnipeg Free Press.

I should like to get Senator Molgat's reaction to a problem that was raised during the course of the committee hearings on Canadian textile problems. It seems that for as long as any of us can remember the Canadian textile industry has been in trouble. I think most of us can remember, from the time we were in high school, debate as to whether or not this industry should be saved. Of course, in one part of Senator Molgat's remarks he indicated that the old stock answer used to be, "Oh yes, if you are going to save it, fine, but you will have to do it through tariff action."

One of the problems which confronts us is presented by a new device that has been developed since the end of the last war whereby, under bilateral agreements negotiated with these developing countries, there is a volume restriction on imports. Canada, as well as the United Kingdom, members of the EEC, and certainly the United States, have all restricted volumes of imports, particularly in the textile field, regardless of whether they are imports of materials for further manufacturing or finished goods.

Quite unexpectedly, and in a very short period of time, the market is flooded and the work of the production lines in Canadian mills is just about destroyed. What the industry is asking is better control over that kind of production by the countries concerned, and that Canada should ensure that the agreed quotas are not exceeded by the exporting countries.

I do not purport to understand the industry's position fully, but I do think the idea being advanced by the spokesmen for the industry is clear. The people in this industry know that in today's climate, both in Canada and internationally, the idea of raising tariffs to protect an industry is not a practical solution, and is not a course of action that any government of the developed world can be expected to take. In other words, the spirit of the Kennedy Round, the spirit of GATT—perhaps necessarily; perhaps even reluctantly—seems to have permeated the thinking of all governments.

The device of restricting imports voluntarily and on a fairly broad basis is something that even the signatories to GATT accept as a feasible way of dealing with the flooding of markets, and even with dumping. It is suggested that Canadian authorities should be a great deal more energetic in making sure that these quotas are observed by the signatories to the agreements, and indeed that the agreements are made on a much broader basis for a longer period of time, so that the Canadian industry, which is really manpower-intensive in many respects, can flourish and be competitive as well. That is the argument.

We have been told that this is not a theoretical position that Canadian industry is advocating, that the British are actively pursuing the negotiation of bilateral agreements with Taiwan, South Korea, Hong Kong and any other country where there is danger of dumping or flooding in the textile field.

In the light of this kind of study, I wonder whether the honourable senator has given any thought to the proposition that this new device—and it is a relatively new device which in the past 20 years has been developed to the point of having some impact—might be something which the Canadian authorities could use for the purpose of maintaining an industry as a viable entity, competitive in the markets of Canada, at least, if not in markets abroad.

Senator Molgat: On a temporary basis I think the quota system is necessary to permit that gradual progress that we need in any change in our commercial or industrial structure. As a long-range solution I have doubts as to whether it is the right course, except possibly to maintain some basic industry from a national security standpoint. Sweden, for example, did this just recently in the case of footwear, when they restricted imports on the basis that they had to maintain a footwear industry for basic national security purposes. They could not leave themselves totally dependent on imports to put shoes on the feet of their people. There may be a certain level of quotas that could be looked at, where the question of national security is involved. Apart from that, as a long-range solution I do not think it is the proper course.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL LAW

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-83

Senator Perrault, pursuant to notice, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon the subject matter of the Bill C-83, intituled: "An Act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime", in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the Leader of the Government would indicate when it is expected that Bill C-83 will come before the Senate?

Senator Perrault: It is my understanding that there will be one more meeting to consider Bill C-71. The committee is proposing to set aside for a period of time its consideration of conflict of interest, and then, following Bill C-71, to consider the subject matter of Bill C-83.

Senator Grosart: My question was: When is it anticipated that Bill C-83 will come to us?

Senator Perrault: I am sorry, I misunderstood the question. I can give no estimate at the present time. There could be a fairly long debate in the other place. The honourable senator himself may have more information with respect to that question than we do on this side.

Senator Grosart: I would ask if there is a special reason why we should use this device for this bill. It is a device we have used before, but usually there has been an explanation as to why it was necessary to study the subject matter of a bill before the bill itself reaches us.

Senator Langlois: Because of our wisdom.

Senator Perrault: This is an important bill, as has been acknowledged by all parties in Parliament. I am proud of the fact that the expertise of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is such that it can make a valuable contribution to the national and parliamentary dialogue on the various features of the bill. This is why it is felt that a pre-study in the Senate is appropriate—because of the undoubted expertise of that committee and the great esteem in which it is held across the land.

Senator Langlois: We are wise guys on this side of Parliament Hill.

Senator Grosart: I am aware of that. But, with respect, I do not think the Leader of the Government has answered my question, because everything he has said could apply equally if the bill were considered by the committee in the usual way. This is an exception to our normal procedure, and I am asking what the rationale of the exception is.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there are, of course, a number of precedents.

Senator Grosart: I am not asking about precedents. I am asking why we are following this procedure with this bill. I am not objecting.

Senator Perrault: Because in the judgment of the government it is of great importance, and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs can make a valuable contribution. Indeed, some of the findings of the committee may be of value to the other place, as has been the case on so many other occasions.

Senator Grosart: That is a good reason at last.

Senator Langlois: That is the reason.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I just want to add a few words to what has already been said. I think the experience we have had in the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-71 shows that we often have good ideas but that they would probably be more readily accepted by the other place if we were to present them before the particular bill comes to us. I have in mind some of the amendments that have been suggested but which may not be accepted because we are studying Bill C-71 here after it has been passed by the other place. I am quite sure these same amendments would have been accepted if we had considered the bill before its passage by the House of Commons.

● (1510)

Senator Grosart: I knew that the Leader of the Opposition was well aware of the good reason. I was merely inquiring if the Leader of the Government was.

Senator Flynn: To be put on the record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 9, at 8 p.m.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

TEXT OF LETTER REFERRED TO BY HON. MICHEL FOURNIER ON MARCH 2, 1976

Diocese of Bathurst,

P.O. Box 460
Bathurst, N.B.

October 15, 1975

The Right Honourable Pierre Elliot Trudeau
House of Commons
Parliament Buildings
Ottawa, Ontario

Mr. Prime Minister:

We consider it our duty to express our sorrow and concern about the social and economic situation in the northeastern part of New Brunswick, such as we see it and live it. There is no doubt that the present disparities between our area and the southern part of the province, and even the rest of the country, are not improving and even have a tendency to increase. This is true in many sectors. We are well aware of the complexity of the present economic problem and of our lack of practical knowledge in this field. However, since human life is involved, we can no longer remain silent.

Unemployment is very high. Many people have only seasonal and casual employment. Any thoughtful man would be scared by the statistics. This fear gives way to panic when we see that our unemployment rate is twice as high as that of the province and three times worse than in certain areas of the southern part of the province.

The roads are inadequate, damaged and unable to meet the present needs of the industry and the population.

The migration of workers within the province is disastrous for family life. The father leaves home and comes back only for the weekend, and he often risks losing his culture and his language.

Yet, experts confirm that the area has a great wealth of known natural resources:

- the development of our mining potential has just been initiated;
- the rational use and development of our forests have just begun;
- valuable though underused farmlands and a troubled fishing industry require concentrated development efforts;
- finally, the tourism industry should offer greater development potential. The beauty of our beaches, lakes and rivers and the development of important infrastructures such as Sugar Loaf Park and the Acadian Village, are proven advantages.

In view of the nearly unlimited wealth of our natural and human resources, we cannot accept that a significant part of the population of the northeastern part of the province cannot find work there and is condemned to stagnation. We believe that a joint venture of both governments is possible and should be launched as soon as possible. The human welfare of the population must have priority over any political consideration.

Our solidarity with all citizens of the northeastern part of the province and our Christian beliefs prompt us to shout: We no longer want to see such poverty in such a rich area. One question is being asked continually like an ever growing obsession: How can it be possible to be at the same time so rich and so poor?

We, the Roman Catholic clergy of northeastern New Brunswick, make the following recommendations:

1. We recommend the development of other mines, which should not remain unworked for reasons which have nothing to do with the needs and rights of the people. These people have proven their discipline and their capacity for work in the mines.

2. We consider that a larger part of the processing of our minerals should be done locally. Considering that our province ranks second in zinc production and exports, all of it in the form of concentrates, we cannot understand the delay in implementing the project of a zinc refinery in Belledune. How can we explain the fact that other non-producing countries buy their zinc here and refine our production themselves?

3. We are convinced that governments must exercise good leadership on small or minor companies in order that every industry provide workers with proper working conditions. We want governments to establish standards that would be adhered to by new industries locating in our area so that workers here may not be considered only as cheap labour.

4. We welcome the introduction of a new forest development strategy and reforestation policy. We hope however that more efforts will be made to accelerate the implementation of such a strategy and to fight the grave damages done by the budworm.

5. We find that agriculture and fisheries must be better organized and adapted to meet new conditions created by both resource depletion and mechanization, with the resultant loss of a great many jobs. A vast program of manpower retraining is needed, especially in those segments subject to increased industrialization.

6. In conclusion, we stress one special regional priority, the inadequate road system. We are convinced that an adequate road system is an essential prerequisite for the region's economic and social revitalization. The spine of that system would be the new Highway 11.

The scandal in the slow progress of that highway is not understandable and is intolerable.

A new highway system would favour the location of industries interested in promoting better economic well-being among the people. While insisting on the need for that new highway, we do not want that its development be an excuse for postponing or stopping other social economic projects to promote self-initiative in various areas.

Although not economics experts, our Christian commitment requires that we see the problems and cry out loud our misery, in order to alert those holding power to "serve". We hope our voice will be heard before it is too late. We wish the population to go on developing and thriving in a region so rich and so beautiful! We are convinced that if all people of good will will work together, total human development of the people will be ensured.

Ready to cooperate in the effort already started for northeastern New Brunswick's social and economic development, we remain,

Yours very truly,

Wesley Wade, Priest, Secretary,
The Diocesan Priest Committee
Diocese of Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Members of the Committee:

Edgar Godin, Bishop of Bathurst,

Premier of New Brunswick.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 9, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

STATUTE LAW (VETERANS AND RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-86, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of a bibliography on source materials relating to Bills C-83 and C-84, issued by the Department of Justice.

Report of operations under the Fisheries Development Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 10 of the said Act, Chapter F-21, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (Part I, Corporations) for the fiscal periods ended in 1973, pursuant to section 18(1) of the said Act, Chapter C-31, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1976-302, dated February 17, 1976, amending the Bankruptcy Rules made by Order in Council P.C. 1954-1976, dated December 16, 1954, as amended, pursuant to section 180(2) of the Bankruptcy Act, Chapter B-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Recommendations, dated February 26, 1976, of the Anti-Inflation Board regarding suppliers in the construction, grain handling, longshoring, shipping and trucking industries who bargain collectively, together with a paper entitled: "Application of Guidelines to Suppliers who engage in Association Bargaining".

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, 10th March, 1976, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Senator Flynn: May I have a word of explanation for this, because it relates to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee.

Senator Langlois: I have been asked by the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to put this motion tonight. Perhaps honourable senators would prefer to have an explanation directly from the chairman instead of from me.

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, tomorrow morning we have to consider Bill S-32, to implement three tax conventions, which, being a public bill, is number one on our agenda.

Then, continuing our study of Canadian textile problems, we shall hear presentations by the Textile and Clothing Board, a textile labour union from Hamilton, and another textile labour union from Toronto. Those appointments were made some time ago.

We were asked to expedite our consideration of the tax convention bill, it being a public bill, and we agreed to do that. So it looks as though we will run into the afternoon—and considerably into the afternoon, I would say.

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to make the alternative proposal that we adjourn tomorrow at 3.30 p.m. rather than adopting this motion.

I remind you that the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy has had to postpone two meetings in the last few weeks owing to the fact that it did not have the power to sit while the Senate was sitting. Tomorrow afternoon Mr. Drury, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, is again ready to appear before us. I do not think that meeting should be further postponed. Therefore, rather than allowing the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to sit while the Senate is sitting, I think the Senate should adjourn by 3.30 p.m.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, without giving an undertaking, I may say that the information I have allows me to envisage the possibility of a short sitting tomorrow afternoon. We shall certainly endeavour to adjourn earlier than usual in order to enable these two committees to meet without their unduly interfering with the work of this chamber.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, this motion and Senator Lamontagne's comments on it once again put before us, first, the problem of committees sitting while the Senate is sitting and, second, the conflict of committee meetings.

I cannot speak for senators on the other side, but I can say that for those of us on this side, although we are trying to do our jobs as best we can, the problem remains intolerable. I do not know what the Leader of the Government intends to do or what the committee which was set up some time ago to resolve the problem is doing, or what it has reported or intends to report, but I would suggest to the Leader of the Government that the time has come when this intolerable situation should be brought to an end.

I do not know what arrangements he has in mind, but it is important for us to realize that, as senators, we are required to attend here to do our duty, whether it is in the Senate or in committees, and it is embarrassing to those of us on this side on occasions when there is not a single opposition senator available to attend a committee meeting. That this should be so is not in the interests of the Senate.

For those reasons, I think Senator Lamontagne's suggestion, unless better arrangements can be made, makes a good deal of sense. I am well aware of the problem which has arisen here. Last week Senator Lamontagne had arranged for the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of State for Science and Technology to be available to the Science Policy Committee. He did that, I know, on the assumption that the Senate would adjourn fairly early, as it had for several Wednesdays.

At that particular time I think there were 20 senior officials of the government, including the minister, waiting and expecting to be called. Their time was wasted because the Senate, though quite properly, carried on its discussion of bills and resolutions then before it.

I think, if we are going to have motions, in terms of which leave is asked for committees to sit while the Senate is sitting, it would be at any rate a pro tempore solution if the time of adjournment of the Senate was decided upon by the Senate. This would at least avoid the situation which occurred last week, which as far as I am concerned was not in the interests of the Senate, and as a result of which 20—am I correct, Senator Lamontagne?—officials of various departments of government were called here, expecting to meet the committee, and then had to be told that their attendance was not required because the Senate was still sitting. We have to resolve this situation in some way, and I hope the Leader of the Government will, to use a colloquial phrase, bite the bullet and do something about it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to suggest that more than one person in this chamber needs to bite the bullet. I want to assure you that conversations and correspondence have flowed back and forth for some time between the opposition and the government on this particular matter. Indeed, a proposed solution has been sent to the official opposition, and a counter proposal has been made. Let me now propose that a meeting be held tomorrow morning between representatives of the official opposition and representatives of the government to solve the problem.

The senator is really speaking to the general problem of scheduling committee meetings in the Senate. I agree with him that it has become an intolerable problem, which is rendered particularly difficult for an official opposition with rather reduced numbers. I want the honourable senator to know that we on this side are very sympathetic to this dilemma, and I agree that decisions have to be made.

Honourable senators know that we had a coordinating committee which advanced a number of ideas. In my view we must establish one person, be it one of our members or an official from the public service, who will be placed in the position of making the necessary committee meeting decisions. I want the honourable senator to know that if the official opposition will cooperate in having a meeting tomorrow morning, I think that we can resolve the situation once and for all. As I have said, there have been several written and verbal communications concerning this problem over the past weeks.

Senator Flynn: I have been waiting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion.

Motion agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGATIONS OF INTERFERENCE BY CABINET MINISTERS— QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the Leader of the Government in connection with the allegations of interference made by Mr. Justice Mackay? I should like to know whether, since these allegations have resulted in the Minister of Justice's asking the Chief Justice of Quebec to inquire only as to whether the judges concerned felt aggrieved, or had any complaint about the interference which was alleged, and since we have a clear admission from the Minister of Public Works that he intervened in a certain case being dealt with by Mr. Justice Hugessen, a report has been received from Chief Justice Deschênes about the sentiments and the reactions of the judges? It appears clear that this is a matter that should be dealt with right away. Is the government prepared to say something about the manner in which it intends to prevent such interventions from happening again, and if it intends to correct the situation by penalizing those who have obviously been guilty of unjustified interference in the functions of the judiciary?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it has yet to be demonstrated whether there was any interference, justifiable or otherwise.

Senator Flynn: It is admitted.

Senator Perrault: Let me remind the honourable senator that the Minister of Justice of Canada specifically asked the Chief Justice of Quebec to advise whether there had been undue influence or interference on the part of cabinet ministers with respect to the judicial functions of certain of his associates on the bench. A report has not yet been received, but I want to assure the house that the government is prepared to take the appropriate and necessary action should this action be justified by the report of the Chief Justice. But the government certainly does not intend to give any further instructions to the Chief Justice. His investigation has not yet been completed.

I know that many honourable senators in all parts of this chamber were gratified over the weekend when the news appeared that Mr. Justice Mackay had issued what was, in effect, an apology to the Honourable Jean Chrétien for certain allegations originally made by him and reported in one of the well-known newspapers of this country.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, on a question of privilege for the Senate, my question was not answered by the Leader of the Government. He mentioned the retraction by Justice Mackay, but that does not change the fact that Mr. Chrétien admitted that he had made a telephone call to Judge Aronovitch, and I am saying that this mere fact is unethical and should be condemned.

The second point is, and my question was, whether Chief Justice Deschênes said that the judges felt that they were being influenced or that anyone was trying to influence them. The mere fact of the admission clearly made by Mr. Drury that he talked to Justice Hugessen is something that should be condemned out of hand. We do not really need the advice of Chief Justice Deschênes as to whether or not the judges felt unduly influenced. This is a practice that should be condemned by the government, and there should be no delay in doing so. There should be no waiting and trying to cover up the whole thing by asking Chief Justice Deschênes to tell us of the reaction of the judges. I do not think the reaction of the judges has any real bearing on the essential point here. I say that Mr. Drury's admission is clear enough evidence of an unwarranted interference in the administration of justice for the government to act immediately.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, perhaps we can take some gratification from the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has never been appointed to the bench, because he seems to take the position—

Senator Flynn: I am a lawyer.

Senator Perrault: Yes, there are various qualities of lawyers, and lawyers have different attitudes on many, many matters.

Senator Flynn: Thank God!

Senator Perrault: Yes, thank God, and in making our courts operate it is very important that lawyers do take different points of view. But surely, honourable senators, in fact—

Senator Flynn: Answer my question.

Senator Perrault: I hope to get to the reply to your question, but in fact the Leader of the Opposition is telling this chamber that he does not want to be confused with the facts because his mind is made up. The majority of honourable senators do not subscribe to that doctrine. They are waiting for a report of the facts from the Chief Justice.

Senator Flynn: Answer my question.

Senator Perrault: Secondly, the incredible statement that the honourable senator has made that despite the fact that Justice Mackay has issued a substantial retraction, an admission that there was no undue influence or interference—

Senator Flynn: That is not what I said. I deny that.

Senator Perrault: Well, that is the implication—

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Flynn: I deny that!

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator said that—

Senator Flynn: No.

Some Hon. Senators: Order, order!

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator stated that despite the fact of the retraction, the Honourable Jean Chrétien is still guilty of "unethical" conduct and should be "condemned".

Senator Flynn: I did not say that.

Senator Perrault: Again thank the good Lord that the honourable senator has never occupied a position on the bench. I want to ask him if at any time he has ever asked a judge about the weather or if he ever discussed with a judge any matter about the health of his family. If he has, did he regard this conduct as "unethical" and a fact which should be "condemned"? The Honourable Jean Chrétien's conversation with this particular judge, Judge Aronovitch, I believe, related to the date on which a certain case would be concluded.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is sufficient in itself to be wrong.

● (2020)

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Perrault: Mr. Justice Aronovitch himself said that this did not constitute any undue interference in his function.

Senator Flynn: You do not seem to know much about the law. Just ask your colleague if he would do it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I know not what the policy of the Official Opposition may be with respect to matters relating to justice. However, I can tell you that this government does not intend to condemn anyone out of hand until all the facts are known. We know now that at least one third of the so-called "facts" alleged by Justice Mackay are unsubstantiated.

Senator Flynn: You know all the facts that are important. It is not the reaction of the judges that counts; it is a question of the actions of your ministers.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he is willing to assert that there is any denial that Mr. Chrétien called the judge in question as to the decision which the judge was going to make and the time it was going to be made?

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Goldenberg: There is no question about it. Mr. Chrétien did not inquire about the decision, but asked when the decision would be made.

Senator Flynn: All right; he did not have to.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there seems to be a great passion to engage in a witch hunt by certain members of the Senate—a fact which I think is to be deplored. It is clearly on the record that there was no ministerial inquiry as to the nature of the pending court decision. The inquiry related solely to the date upon which that decision would be made and no one now accuses the Honourable Mr. Chrétien of any impropriety in that matter. Indeed, there has been a retraction from Mr. Justice Mackay. I simply appeal to the house—what else would certain honourable senators require?

Senator Smith (Colchester): One requires a member of the cabinet to stay away from a judge until that judge makes his decision. That is what is required.

Senator Flynn: On a question of privilege, I think that if the Leader of the Government wishes to be fair he will recognize that Mr. Justice Mackay only said he would withdraw the allegation about Mr. Chrétien because he was not aware personally about the facts.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: That was hearsay, I agree, and I am not in the least defending Mr. Justice Mackay. However, I say that Mr. Chrétien admitted himself that he telephoned the judge to inquire when the decision would be made. When a minister of the Crown telephones a judge and says that he is interested even as to the date of a decision, it influences a judge. Maybe it should not but very likely it could. That is why I say it is unethical. It may not be important in this particular case, but there should be some rules as to ministers of the Crown getting in touch with judges about cases that are before these judges.

Senator Benidickson: Have you never spoken to a judge?

Senator Flynn: Never about a case before him.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, far from commenting on the integrity of a judge who makes serious allegations on the basis of hearsay and rumor, which is another question, it seems to me that at this point it has been demonstrated clearly that in the allegation relating to Mr. Chrétien, Mr. Justice Mackay most certainly based them on a hearsay conversation. This has been clearly substantiated.

Senator Flynn: It was not made by Mr. Chrétien.

Senator Perrault: We now suggest that we await the report concerning the other alleged incidents from one of the outstanding jurists in this country.

Senator Flynn: Cover-up.

Senator Perrault: Is that the kind of accusation the honourable senator wishes to make against the Chief Justice of Quebec?

Senator Flynn: The government is simply delaying a decision it must make as to these facts, which are very important.

Senator Perrault: Honourable Senator Flynn, I am on my feet and I believe I have the floor and I know of your abiding respect for the rules of this house. Let us wait until we receive the report. Let us see what the report from the Chief Justice contains and then appropriate action can be taken.

Senator Flynn: It has no bearing on the question I put to you. You are avoiding the question.

TRANSPORTATION

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES—POSSIBLE MOVE OF HEAD OFFICE TO CALGARY—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to return to the subject of a question put to the Leader of the Government on March 3 in the matter of Pacific Western Airlines. The government leader advised that he hoped to be in a position at this time to provide further information. In addition I would ask the leader whether it is true that the President of Pacific Western Airlines, Mr. Donald Watson, has resigned, or was fired yesterday, because he refused to accept political direction from the Province of Alberta to the effect that the company's main business and the bulk of its employees should be relocated in Alberta?

I should like to ask also whether the Leader of the Government has information as to whether the Province of British Columbia has as yet made a formal intervention before the Canadian Transport Commission in order that the status of the Province of Alberta shareholdings of the airline company be examined in the public interest and, if not, whether he can tell us what position the Province of British Columbia has taken in that respect?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have some information. I hope to have more available tomorrow afternoon. It was confirmed in Ottawa today that indeed there has been a termination arrangement concluded with the President of Pacific Western Airlines, Mr. Donald Watson, and that this termination arrangement was concluded over the weekend.

In reply to the second part of the question, information reached Ottawa today that the Minister of Transport and Communications for British Columbia has contacted the Canadian Transport Commission and has served notice that should Pacific Western Airlines be unwilling to reconsider the transfer of personnel and facilities to Alberta, and, to quote the minister, "should the airline be unable to convince the Canadian Transport Commission of its commitment to commercial aviation and balanced regional development," the Government of British Columbia will oppose the acquisition of a controlling interest in Pacific Western Airlines by Alberta.

Senator Austin: Would the Leader of the Government have any objection to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications inquiring into this matter and receiving testimony from Mr. Donald Watson, Mr. Hugh Horner, Minister of Highways and Transport for Alberta, and Mr. Jack Davis, Minister of Transport and Communications for British Columbia?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that particular proposal is now under study and more information may be available tomorrow.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS TO INDIA—QUESTION

Senator Manning: Is the Leader of the Government in a position to make a statement to the house on the present status of Canada's negotiation with India on the sale of nuclear reactors? The Leader of the Government is familiar with recent press reports. Can he confirm whether those reports are correct?

Senator Perrault: I must take that question as notice. I shall endeavour to have a reply as quickly as possible, hopefully tomorrow afternoon.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

FERRIES OPERATING BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA, AND NOVA SCOTIA AND NEWFOUNDLAND—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN FARES—QUESTION

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform us if the government has yet made any decision to increase the rates this year on the ferries operating between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and Nova Scotia and Newfoundland?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as far as my personal knowledge is concerned, no decision has yet been reached. However, I shall take that question as notice and endeavour to obtain information from the Department of Transport for tomorrow afternoon's sitting.

MARINE SAFETY

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERIES—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I attempt to provide the answer to a supplementary question asked by Senator McDonald?

Senator Grosart: Which Senator McDonald?

Senator Perrault: He is listed in the Hansard proceedings of the house as Senator McDonald. I understand it was Senator McDonald from Saskatchewan.

● (2030)

Senator Macdonald: It was McDonald, not Macdonald.

Senator Perrault: I am not as well versed in Scottish history and folklore as are some other members of the Senate. The question was:

I am wondering if the Leader of the Government could tell us what the air element of search and rescue on our coasts consists of.

The question of what the air element of search and rescue on our coasts consists of falls under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence. The Canadian Coast Guard operates helicopters for the primary purpose of the maintenance of navigational aids. In the event of a search and rescue incident, top priority is given to allocating the helicopter to that incident under the direction of the Rescue Coordination Centre, provided the weather conditions permit.

The disposition of the Canadian Coast Guard helicopters is as follows:

Newfoundland Region:

2 helicopters at St. John's Newfoundland.

Maritimes Region:

9 helicopters at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia; 1 helicopter at Charlottetown, P.E.I.; 1 helicopter at Saint John, New Brunswick.

Laurentian Region:

[Senator Manning.]

8 helicopters at Quebec, Quebec; 1 helicopter at Sorel, Quebec.

Central Region:

2 helicopters at Prescott, Ontario; 1 helicopter at Parry Sound, Ontario.

Western Region:

5 helicopters at Victoria, British Columbia; 1 helicopter at Prince Rupert, British Columbia.

I am informed by the deputy leader that the two helicopters at St. John's, Newfoundland are shipborne. In addition, two helicopters and one fixed wing DC-3 aircraft are based in Ottawa for pollution patrols. Out of 31 helicopters operated by CCG, four are owned by DOE and operated on their behalf.

PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR COME-BY-CHANCE REFINERY—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to reply to a question asked by Senator Austin with respect to financial assistance for the Come-By-Chance refinery. He asked "whether this government or the government of the Province of Newfoundland has a policy with respect to the continued operation of that project."

The only government assistance provided by the federal government in the construction of the Come-By-Chance oil refinery was in the amount of $23 million for the wharf. That money was to be recovered on a user-fee basis. There is some money still outstanding on that account.

Senator Benidickson: Quite a bit.

Senator Perrault: DREE also provided indirect assistance by development of certain infrastructural complexes in the area. It seems now as though the Come-By-Chance oil refinery will be mothballed for the next two years. There has been no request for further federal government assistance.

MARINE SAFETY

REQUEST FOR LOCATION OF AIR SEA RESCUE UNIT IN NEWFOUNDLAND—QUESTION

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government arising out of his reply to a question put by Senator McDonald.

Would the leader request his colleagues in the cabinet to reconsider the cabinet response to the request from Newfoundland that one unit of the Air Sea Rescue Service be located in Newfoundland.

Since the beginning of the year, we have lost six fishermen who have gone adrift in small boats. Their rescue was not effected mainly because the units that are stationed on the mainland cannot reach these boats in time. I understand that it takes a couple of hours after setting out before they can begin the search, and during those two hours it has often been the case that the weather has changed with the result that the rescue could not be effected. Since every minute in these situations is of vital importance, it is essential that at least one unit be established in Newfoundland itself.

I understand that the cabinet response to this request has never been favourable, but I would urge the Leader of the Government to impress upon his colleagues in the cabinet the importance of acceding to this request.

Senator Perrault: I want to assure the honourable senator that I will bring this suggestion to the attention of the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Transport, as well as any other minister involved in the very serious problem which he has outlined for us.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN FARES—QUESTION

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, supplemental to my previous question, realizing that to this point in time there apparently has been no suggestion by the government that there will be an increase in fares between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, or Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, or Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would bring to the attention of the members of the cabinet that in the event they get such a notion, under the terms of union between Prince Edward Island and Canada, signed in 1873, the federal government is to maintain and operate and defray all costs of such service. Therefore, under the British North America Act, the federal government is totally responsible for all costs of operating those ferries, and for it to impose fares greater than what we have now would be contrary to the Constitution and the British North America Act.

Senator Grosart: Question.

Senator Bonnell: Should this matter be raised in cabinet, I would hope that the Leader of the Government will put forth that view and see that the Maritime provinces, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island particularly, are still part of Canada at no increase in ferry fares.

Senator Perrault: I want to assure the honourable senator that the government is actively concerned with transportation policy from coast-to-coast and is deeply aware of its historic commitment to the Atlantic provinces. At the same time, as the honourable senator is no doubt aware, many transportation routes in this country are operating at enormous deficits. The task of the government, therefore, is to examine its historical responsibility in relation to the cost of operating services in various parts of Canada, not just the Atlantic provinces.

I shall most certainly bring to the attention of my cabinet colleagues the eloquent plea made this evening by Senator Bonnell.

Senator Grosart: It was a question. You didn't notice.

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NORTH SYDNEY AND PORT AUX BASQUES—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN FARES—QUESTION

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, supplemental to the question put by my colleague from Prince Edward Island, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would convey to his colleagues in the cabinet the very important point that the terms of union between Newfoundland and Canada are completely specific in this regard. There are no ifs, ands or buts.

Senator Grosart: Is this a question?

Senator Rowe: Yes, the question is coming up. The terms of union state that the Government of Canada will maintain a ferry service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. That is the term.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government would convey the simple fact to his colleagues in the cabinet that the intent of that term—and without that term there would have been no union whatever between Newfoundland and Canada—that the intent of that term can be defeated by the CNR, or by whoever operates the ferry, by simply raising the rates to the point where no one can afford to use the ferry service.

Senator Perrault: Your useful contribution to this discussion, Senator Rowe, as opposed to an exchange of question and answer, will be brought to the attention of my colleagues in the cabinet.

THE LATE HONOURABLE ALEXANDER W. MATHESON

TRIBUTES TO FORMER PREMIER OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call the attention of honourable senators to the passing of a great Canadian, the Honourable Alexander W. Matheson, Q.C., Premier of Prince Edward Island from 1953 until 1959, and County Court Judge for the County of Queens from 1967 to 1974.

● (2040)

Alex Matheson was a great Canadian, a great Islander and a great citizen. He added tremendously to the life of Islanders and, in fact, it has been said of him that he brought Prince Edward Island from darkness to light when he inaugurated the rural electrification program in 1954.

He was elected to the Legislature of Prince Edward Island in 1940, for the second district of Queens County. He was defeated in 1943, and became law clerk of the Legislative Assembly until the 1947 general election. In 1947 he moved to the old Murray Harbour District, which I represented for some years, and was re-elected. He and I were colleagues in that constituency until he retired in 1966.

Alex Matheson was Minister of Health and Welfare under Premier Jones, and he became premier of the province on the elevation of Premier Jones to the Senate. He and the former leader of this house, the Honourable Paul Martin, working on behalf of the federal government, were responsible for the institution of the national health grants in Prince Edward Island, which resulted in the better health of the province's citizens. It was through these times, while he was premier, that the province was able to participate in and become part of the national hospital insurance scheme.

During his term as premier, and as a judge of the county court, he always had a great interest in sports and in the church. He was an elder and a trustee of the United Church of Canada for many, many years. He was president of the golf club. He was interested in all types of sport, but most important of all he was interested in the people of Prince Edward Island.

To his wife and his family I extend my deepest sympathy.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 4, the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I can say that what has been said so far in this debate has been said very frankly and very bluntly. There are things that could have been said which might have been more pertinent to Bill C-58, which we have before us, and, if I am permitted, I shall take a few minutes and try to sift out the important substance of the bill.

I should say at the beginning, knowing my good friend Senator Davey was going to sponsor the bill, that I read reasonably carefully Volume 1 of the report of the Mass Media Committee, and I recognized where some of his inspiration came from—if, indeed, he needed any inspiration, because he gave every appearance of being favourably full of the subject.

However, there are a few observations I would make before I call your attention to the bill. These are things that are said in the Mass Media Committee's report, the tenor of which has to do with the quality and standing of two magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, and the contribution they have made to the economy of Canada and to the enhancement of their own treasury during the period that they have been operating in Canada.

If you will tolerate me for just a few minutes—I do not believe in reading and I know you do not like listening to someone reading, but just to get the background of what Time and Reader's Digest represent, I will read from page 158 of the Mass Media Committee's report:

Time and the Digest have been publishing Canadian editions since the early 1940s—

Then, further down the page:

Since then, both magazines have made earnest attempts to become members in good standing of the Canadian publishing community, and have continued to prosper. The Canadian circulation of the Digest and its French-language affiliate, Sélection du Reader's Digest, has climbed from 1,068,000 in 1960 to 1,448,000 in 1969.

He continues on the same page:

Time's circulation has increased from 215,000 in 1960 to about 440,000 today.

Then he says about Reader's Digest:

The company has about 450 employees in Canada, including an editorial staff almost as large as that of Maclean's.

At page 159 the report says:

There is no question that both magazines have been good corporate citizens. It is also clear that their financial success is not solely attributable to the competitive advantage they enjoy. Both are excellent products—perhaps the most skillfully edited mass magazines in history. Quite apart from their competitive advantages, Time and the Digest have prospered because they produce the kind of magazines that a lot of readers and advertisers prefer.

Then there is a note on page 160 that I think I must refer to. The note is this:

As far as one distinguished observer is concerned, that status is already pretty marginal.

That is, the status of the Canadian magazine industry. The note continues:

Senator Grattan O'Leary favoured the Committee with his views on what's happened to the magazine industry since he made his report, and concluded that, in his judgment, the existing Canadian magazines have declined in quality. "Were I making my report today," he added, "I would not have been so concerned for those magazines... I am not so sure that Time magazine today is not the best Canadian magazine we have."

The only other thing that I want to refer to at this moment is that the options put forward in this report are discussed. The first conclusion was:

Somehow, despite the economic pitfalls, a way must be found to create more equitable competitive conditions in the Canadian periodical industry. The competitive advantage that Time and Reader's Digest enjoy is greater today than it was when O'Leary made his recommendations in 1961.

Then the report goes on to support the O'Leary recommendations.

Another option which the committee considered was to recommend legislation that would prevent Time and Reader's Digest from publishing their magazine and accepting advertising in Canada. As the report says:

Kick them out. Send them home. Their American editions would still be available in Canada, but only as overflow circulation. As competitors for Canadian advertising dollars, they would be expelled...

● (2050)

But the Committee rejected this option too. Singling out for expulsion two corporations that have done business in Canada for nearly three decades, and done it with flair and fairness and excellence, struck us as somehow inconsistent with the Canadian character. We were mindful too of the economic dislocation this could cause. Unemployment in the cause of sociocultural development is a lot more palatable for its proponents than it is for the participants.

That led us to a third option, the one we now recommend. Not surprisingly, it is exactly what O'Leary wanted nine years ago: we recommend that the exemptions now granted Time and Reader's Digest under Section 12A of the Income Tax Act be repealed, and the sooner the better.

If I may stop there, I will go on with my explanation of the bill. There are several grandfather clauses in the present Income Tax Act. While section 19 of the present Income Tax Act would make non-deductible advertising expenses paid by advertisers to Time and Reader's Digest, the grandfather clause, which validates them up to a certain date from which they qualified, provided an exemption to the advertisers from being obliged not to deduct the expenses they paid. This bill repeals the grandfather clauses. It then goes on, in connection with section 19, to leave us in a position creating considerable difficulty. The position is as to what you must do, and what condition you must be in, in order that you may be a Canadian issue, and while all these conditions are set out in section 19(5)(a) of the Income Tax Act, there are certain ones which cause the trouble. For example, at the end of section 19(5)(a) it says what these qualifications or conditions are which you must meet if you are trying to gain a position as a Canadian issue. It does not include an issue of a periodical:

that is produced or published under a licence granted by a person who produces or publishes issues of a periodical that are printed, edited or published outside Canada, or the contents of which, excluding advertisements, are substantially the same—

And this is the real one.

Those are the words which create the problems as I see them, as many of the public see them, and as is evident in judgments in a number of cases, to which I could refer, which have interpreted what "substantially the same" means—even decisions of the House of Lords. But it says:

—are substantially the same as the contents of an issue of a periodical, or the contents of one or more issues of one or more periodicals, that was or were printed, edited or published outside Canada.

The other requirement is, of course, 75 per cent Canadian ownership. There is an old saying, which I am not sure I can quote correctly but which goes something like this: "One ain't good without t'other." In order to gain your qualification as a Canadian resident and trying to interest investors in acquiring a 75 per cent interest, naturally they are concerned to know that the company into which they are buying is a viable company and that therefore its publication will qualify as a Canadian issue of a periodical. In other words, can it be established that it is not substantially the same as a periodical published outside Canada? This situation obtained from the time the bill was introduced in January 1975, and efforts were being made acquire knowledge as to how "substantially the same" was to be interpreted. Finally, on October 23, 1975, the Minister of National Revenue issued a press release in which he said it would be interpreted as 80 per cent of the contents. If 80 per cent of the contents were not Canadian publication, then it could not qualify as a Canadian issue.

I shall stop right there and say that I will not refer to the legal decisions. I have them, and quite a number of them, as a matter of fact, are decisions of the House of Lords in England. They say that "substantially the same" means that the judge trying the case must study all of the things which occur in the context in which those words are used, and then come to a conclusion as to whether he can say that that constitutes "substantially the same". But the one thing you cannot do is to settle on a percentage. They say that that is legislation, and that only Parliament can do that. There is even a case in the Canadian courts concerning the excess profits tax which is to the same effect.

The situation in October, then, was that the people who were in great difficulty to determine their position before the end of December 1975—because that was when this amending bill came into force—were told that it was 80 per cent. How does one meet that in that short space of time? How does one hold on to his investors or potential investors while trying to meet that requirement?

The problem would have been solved if there had been a longer time allowed for the determination of this issue. For instance, the Canadian Radio and Television Commission, which was facing the problem of divestiture of ownership and the problem of content, held hearings and gave notices. Persons could apply to the commission. Moreover, the commission started out with a Canadian content of 45 per cent; it has now moved up to 60 per cent. It started with Canadian ownership of 60 per cent, and has now moved up to 80 per cent. The proceedings for divestiture have taken five years to be fully completed in relation to all the people who were affected. To me, that was the orderly, the sensible and the intelligent way to deal with the question, because there were things of great importance at stake. All the investment that these companies had in Canada was at stake, and there was no certainty at that time as to what the result was going to be.

One can read the printed proceedings of the committee of the other place and see the explanation which the Minister of National Revenue gave. At that time he said the big hurdle that Reader's Digest faced was that of ownership, and that looked like the one that would trip them. The second problem would be the problem of the 80 per cent Canadian content.

Of course, this is only one opinion and you can measure it yourself, but before I would invest any money in an operation of this kind I would want to know that it was viable, that it had income from the business it was carrying on, and, as a matter of law, that it was entitled to carry on that business. So much for this side of the question.

I now move to another issue that arises in this bill. This is to be found in clause 3, which concerns the limitation re advertising expense on broadcasting undertaking. In other words, this has to do with broadcasting, and ownership and content. One thing that disturbs me very much in this bill is to be found in clause 4(2) which reads as follows:

Section 3 shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

I wanted to know what that meant, so I looked at the minister's opening statement on January 23, 1975 in the House of Commons. He was talking about this amendment affecting broadcast operations and, according to Hansard, he said:

I should also like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to inform the House, on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), that the government also intends to recommend to the House a similar amendment to the Income Tax Act in his area of responsibility, to the effect that no deduction against income be permitted for advertising time on a non-Canadian broadcasting station for an advertisement directed primarily to a market in Canada. Such an amendment would not, of course, come into effect until sufficient advertising time is available on Canadian stations to satisfy Canadian needs adequately.

Here, as I see it, is a provision we are asked to vote in favour of, giving the government of the day, whatever it may be, a blank cheque to determine when the broadcasting tax provisions are to come into effect.

I do not know what your reactions may be, but as far as I am concerned I can see many problems arising with regard to the method of determining when, and in what circumstances, the needs referred to have been satisfied by Canadian operations, so that this tax can be applied, and the expenses of advertisers who use non-Canadian broadcasting facilities for advertising made non-deductible.

I can tell you that a difficulty we have now in respect of the Toronto stations is that most of them are sold out to the end of 1975, according to the latest figures I have from Statistics Canada. I have here a list of prime time availabilities, and I believe prime time is from 6 p.m. to 12 p.m. It shows CTV as sold out until May 1975; CFTO, sold out until April (85 per cent sold out for entire 1975); CHCH, most shows sold out until January 1975; CHUM, sold out until end of December 1974.

Senator McDonald: Senator Hayden, you have lost me. You say they are sold out to some point in 1975, which we have passed. On what date was this report made, so that we know what period of time these advance sales cover?

Senator Hayden: This report was made at the end of 1974, and I asked for an up-to-date statement. The up-to-date information, to the extent that I could get it, is that a situation is expected in 1976 that will be similar to the one that existed in 1975. I cannot verify that.

Senator Davey: I wonder if the honourable senator would agree that in Toronto there are now two more television stations on the air, and that they are not nearly sold out.

Senator Hayden: What counts for a television station is audience. You have to have an audience or you do not sell advertising. The problem is that simple.

What I want to point out is that the small dealers in advertising have a problem because they cannot commit for 52 weeks. They are looking for commitments for short periods, and therefore their costs are bound to be higher. In addition to this, if you cannot get time on Canadian stations, and you want to advertise your product in Canada against competitive products that are being advertised by both other Canadian firms and foreign firms, then you have to go to a station outside Canada to get that time. If it costs you more because this tax applies, then that is a penalty you have to pay.

There are all these problems involved in the determination as to when this provision is to be declared to be in force, and all these questions have to be settled. It is not "by guess and by God" that we determine this or we determine that. The CRTC, in my view, appears to be a well-conducted operation, and while at times one may disagree with some of the things they do, they have shown reason, sense and thoughtfulness in their approach to the problem, realizing that things just cannot be done in a day.

[Senator Hayden.]

But on that aspect of things, in my view we should not approve clause 4, which provides that at some unknown date in the future, when the government decides that the needs of the Canadian market have been satisfied, they can bring this into force. We do not know when that is going to be, and we do not know under what circumstances it is going to be. It might be the worst possible thing to do at the particular time. It might be that other steps should be taken in the way of providing other methods of approach to the problem of advertising. Even my friend Senator Davey, in speaking the other day, mentioned the fact that advertisers may get tired of waiting, and who knows what other advertising media may develop in the meantime. Yet we are asked to commit ourselves to this taxation at that time, and by proclamation.

I am not making any rash assumption. I am just saying that I do not know what the situation will be at that time, and therefore I am not in favour of supporting a clause which gives an unlimited right to the particular minister and the government—even if it should be a government decision at that time—to say by Order in Council that they proclaim this section to be effective, thereby bringing this tax into force.

Senator Flynn: Might I ask my honourable friend what alternative he would suggest? We cannot simply delete that clause because the situation would then be even worse.

Senator Hayden: It seems to me that we had a situation like this to deal with once before, and we provided for it, I think, by calling for some action on the part of both houses of Parliament by way of special resolution.

Senator Flynn: For the coming into force?

Senator Hayden: Yes, and only when he had the agreement of both houses was the minister empowered to bring the particular provision into force.

Senator Flynn: We have done this in reverse—that is, to end legislation—but to do it to bring legislation into effect would be something new. At any rate, it is an interesting suggestion.

Senator Hayden: Certainly this is not the first time, and I do not consider what my friend has said as meaning that he is opposed to this idea simply because it is something new.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no, not at all. I said it is an interesting suggestion.

Senator Hayden: Well, we have ventured before and successfully made our point. But all I am doing at the moment is calling the attention of the house to a situation which exists and which I consider to be serious.

Honourable senators, this speech seems to be growing longer—the more I say the more remains to be said—so I had better look to concluding what I have to say tonight. I should tell you that there was an earlier approach to this problem of how to deal with non-Canadian periodicals, and that was back in 1956. The then government levied an excise tax of 20 per cent on the value of the edited materials, but a succeeding government repealed that legislation. Then we had the O'Leary Commission, and following that we had the report of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, and then we had section 19 in the form in which it now exists. Now we have this approach which is to remove the exemption and to levy a tax on the publisher. Under the Excise Tax Act the tax was collectible from the publisher, but here the removal of the exemption nails the person who spends the money on the advertising. That is the big difference, and it is a substantial one.

Honourable senators, I should like to bring this to a conclusion as quickly as possible. I hope I have not exhausted you. I know I have not exhausted the subject, and I know I have not exhausted myself, but one must apply reason to everything and leave something for another day, if there is to be another day on this. And this brings me to a point that has been bothering me. In fact, it has given me a great deal of concern.

This is an important bill. It deals with communications, and it deals with the rights of people who have located in Canada on the basis of the law as it was at the time they settled here, who carried on successful operations, and who have been good citizens for perhaps 30 years. Now suddenly they are faced with a situation where they can either pack up and leave or, if they had time, they could try to accommodate themselves to the requirements as set out in Bill C-58. But the bill is really in force now, because it will come into force retroactively when the proclamations are made, and then all they can do is to ship their product into Canada and deal with it in the best way they can.

It seems to me that in that situation, if Time and Reader's Digest in particular elect that course and remain as non-Canadian periodicals and ship into Canada, and compensate the Canadian advertisers by a reduction in advertising rates, they may create a not-too-uncomfortable state for themselves. They might not make as much money as they otherwise would make, but then the question arises as to who else is going to make the money that they don't make. As I say, I have examined that situation and I cannot figure out who else is going to make the money that they don't make.

Here again I could quote from Senator Davey and the report of the Mass Media Committee, but I shall not take the time to do so this evening because the hour is late. These people are excellent operators. They know how to conduct business and they know how to make it pay. Therefore, we have to accept the situation that they would be tough and successful business competitors. So, as I say, this question strikes me as being an important one, and I am sure it strikes all honourable senators in the same way. While there may be many different views in this chamber as to the ultimate disposition of this bill, my own feeling is that before there is any finality it should be referred to committee where everybody, pro and con, representatives of the government and representatives of the people on the other side, can appear and express their views.

I leave this thought with you, that we should find some way of referring this to committee, even if it is necessary to adopt the procedure of adjourning our consideration of the bill and referring the subject matter to the committee to determine the reactions. I offer this as a suggestion, because I am sincerely concerned that it should not be said, particularly if the bill were to fail to pass, that the Senate had cut off the opportunity for full consideration in committee, a consideration which might have produced a different result. I have told my point of view and my concern, and I hope those senators who take part in the discussion will give some thought to it.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Hayden a question. I was confused by one part of his speech with respect to radio broadcast statistics. I am not sure precisely what they represented and for what year?

Senator Hayden: I said that the CTV prime time availability was sold out until May 1975. Then I added, when I was asked a further question as to how it would relate to 1976, that similar results are expected. CFTO was sold out until April, and 85 per cent sold out in the year 1975. I then mentioned two other stations.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, first I should like to congratulate those who have spoken on this bill. I single out Senator Hayden for his usual brilliant understanding and clear explanation of the legislation. I will undertake to discuss this bill from a different angle. Innocent as it may look Bill C-58, if passed, might well cause some unexpected backlash in the mass media. I feel there is wisdom in having a non-partisan vote on this bill. My personal belief, contrary to the views of some, is that Bill C-58 is highly controversial. In speaking about this bill I am conscious of doing so with a background of 12 years of experience in the mass media field, but not having any present connection with it. Some years ago I experienced the launching, financing, operation and expensive development of a French edition of a Time-Express type weekly magazine, Sept Jours, with an ideal 75 per cent Canadian news content. After less than five years of struggling it had to fold up. The number of subscribers could not support and justify its continued publication in Quebec. Its advertising was much too scarce to give us hope. This was because the magazine remained unacceptable to the readers, and its distribution remained unattractive to advertising agencies. Time is said to have 500,000 Canadian subscribers. Some have said that the number is a little smaller than that, but it is still an impressive figure. Newsweek, which makes no waves and has no special Canadian news section, has less than half the circulation of Time in Canada and less than half the amount of Canadian advertising. Even at that, the performance of both these magazines remains impressive. Why have these magazines made such a successful penetration in Canada despite Canadian magazines, which are owned in the majority, if I am informed rightly, by one publishing company? The five or six pages of Canadian news must have helped considerably. I believe that their well-edited Canadian news and the excellent and generally reliable reporting of world news helped to create the outstanding Canadian edition of Time. I believe this is why it was accepted by both Canadian advertisers and subscribers. I cannot find any other major reason.

In the broadcasting field, I also had the experience in Sherbrooke, 30 miles from the United States border, of starting a TV station and a radio station, and the expansion and development of two other radio stations. They all had to compete with the clear reception of incoming United States and Canadian TV and radio stations in that area. Eight TV stations and at least 40 radio stations offered excellent and clear reception. There was also cablevision with one of the highest number of home subscribers per capita in North America. May I say that under this competition we managed to prosper and make others envious of our success. In the 12 years that I was closely connected with it, there was no pressure, no demand for support, subsidies or protective legislation such as Bill C-58.

● (2130)

As I study the financial statements and editorial policies of Canadian advertising and publishing companies involved in this situation, I find they are favoured by Bill C-58, and I cannot believe that it is really needed for their assistance at this time.

From my acquired experience in the mass media field, I wonder about the advisability of passing this bill as it is; about the help and protection it will really give Canadians in general; about the sort of reprisals it could produce in the months following its adoption; about our giving in to the views of ultra-nationalism that it expresses; and about the trend that could be created in future legislation. I can think also of other problems which the legislation could bring.

From my study of the bill, it does not seem right that we should pass it, and thus take away the rights of one and pass on the pecuniary advantages to another who, for all intents and purposes, is a competitor. It would seem to do away with equitable legislation for all, and provide direct help to particular favourites who are not really in need of such help—and this at the expense of a periodical that has accomplished excellent work and has made itself sufficiently Canadian to be unreservedly accepted by the greatest number of Canadian subscribers any magazine in Canada has had.

Like many honourable senators, I look forward to a study of Bill C-58 by a Senate committee. Personally, I will be satisfied by such a study, and will reserve my final assessment until the report of that committee and its recommendations have been tabled in this chamber. Such a reassessment of Bill C-58 is necessary, and is of some importance in the light of the views expressed by all concerned. There will be no mistake in enacting this kind of legislation if it is done in the name of ultra-nationalism or political convenience.

On motion of Senator van Roggen, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 10, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

CONSULS OF THE BALTIC NATIONS

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, we have some distinguished visitors in the Senate gallery. I should like to introduce Mr. I. Heinsoo, Acting Honorary Consul General of Estonia, and Mr. E. Upenieks, Acting Honorary Consul of Latvia.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Yuzyk: We had expected also the Acting Honorary Consul General of Lithuania, but something must have detained him. These gentlemen are here on the occasion of the fourth annual Baltic evening, which is being held tonight and will be attended by the Honourable Speaker of the Senate, several ministers of the government, ambassadors, and representatives of some of the embassies, many honourable senators and members of the House of Commons. We warmly welcome each of the consuls individually in the Senate chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the month of November 1975, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Lang moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 21: Strike out lines 31 to 34 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"301.1(1) Quiconque

a) vole une carte de crédit,"

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I think that most of the amendments which were accepted by the committee were of a technical nature. Could we not dispense with reading the amendments and have them placed on the record? There is no point in trying to understand what is meant by the amendments by merely having them read. The substantial amendments which should have been made have not been made.

● (1410)

1. Page 21: Strike out lines 31 to 34 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"301.1(1) Quiconque

a) vole une carte de crédit,"

2. Page 21: Strike out line 36 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"que une fausse,"

3. Page 22: Strike out line 2 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"mise, ou"

4. Page 22: Strike out lines 1 and 2 and substitute therefor the following:

"is guilty of

(e) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years; or

(f) an offence punishable on summary conviction."

5. Page 27: Strike out lines 11 to 13 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"431.1(1) Nonobstant la présente loi, lorsqu'un prévenu, inculpé conjointement ou non, s'esquive au cours de son procès,"

6. Page 27: Strike out line 31 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"prévenu du fait qu'il s'est esquivé."

7. Page 27: Strike out lines 39 and 40 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"(4) Lorsque le prévenu qui s'est esquivé au cours de son procès ne comparait pas, alors que son procès se poursuit, sont avocat"

8. Page 42: Strike out the heading immediately following line 22 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"Prévenu qui s'esquive"

9. Page 42: Strike out lines 23 to 26 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"471.1(1) Nonobstant la présente loi, lorsqu'un prévenu, inculpé conjointement ou non, s'esquive au cours de l'enquête préliminaire,"

10. Page 43: Strike out line 4 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"prévenu du fait qu'il s'est esquivé."

11. Page 46: Strike out line 28 of the English version and substitute therefor the following:

"that there was a legitimate excuse for his"

12. Page 63: Strike out line 23 of the French version and substitute therefor the following:

"sent article, la présente loi ou tout article de la présente loi entre en vigueur à"

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Goldenberg: Next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester) be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Asselin on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

LIBERAL CAUCUS

INVITATION TO MEMBERS OF OPPOSITION—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government if the invitation sent to the members of the small group on this side of the house to attend the Liberal caucus this afternoon means that he is not satisfied with the majority he already has in this place?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the zeal which the government supporters have for democracy and their desire for freely-expressed collective opinion on all subjects perhaps exceeded itself this afternoon when invitations to the government caucus were sent inadvertently to the Leader of the Opposition. I must regretfully inform honourable senators on the opposite side who, I am sure, would like to spend two or three hours in caucus with government supporters, that the invitation was sent inadvertently. I hope that no offence was given.

Senator Flynn: Does that mean that the doors will not be open to us?

Senator Perrault: In short, they will not.

Senator Forsey: Does the Honourable the Leader of the Government mean that we are not willing to receive converts?

Senator Perrault: There is always a Liberal light in the window.

Senator Flynn: Senator Forsey is a case in point.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SERVICES IN NEWFOUNDLAND—QUESTION

Senator Duggan: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate the following question. Will the leader please ascertain from the Ministry of Transport if the Canadian National Railways has sought, or is contemplating seeking, permission to increase CNR bus passenger fares in Newfoundland, and if so, to what extent?

Is it correct to assume that the government will not favourably consider payment of any deficit incurred by bus passenger service in Newfoundland as it would do if the deficit were incurred by a passenger train service, as it does in all other parts of Canada?

Did Canadian National Railways seek the advice and authority of the government prior to converting the passenger train service to a so-called passenger bus service and, if so, what advice did the government give Canadian National Railways, and also what authority in this respect?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, because of the detailed nature of this inquiry I must take it as notice. However, I can reply to part of the question asked by the honourable senator, which was similar to that posed yesterday by Senator Bonnell. Today I have been in contact with the office of the Minister of Transport. The discussion was with relation to ferry rates and other transportation rates in the Atlantic provinces. No final decision has been made about alterations in the rate structure. It is hoped that it will not be too long before a decision is reached.

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES—POSSIBLE MOVE OF HEAD OFFICE TO CALGARY—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with your indulgence, may I attempt to provide some information which was promised today regarding Pacific Western Airlines. I was informed today that officials of Pacific Western Airlines have been invited by the Canadian Transport Commission to submit information regarding the recently announced intention of that company to relocate its head office and, possibly, other operations of the company from British Columbia to Alberta. While the question has yet to be determined whether the Canadian Transport Commission has jurisdiction over the relocation of the head office of Pacific Western Airlines, it is the view of the Commission that if the cost of relocation is such that it will reflect itself in an increased cost in fares or services to the general public, such increases could well be disallowed.

Honourable senators are aware of the recent decision of the Federal Court of Canada regarding Pacific Western Airlines in which the court ruled that the Government of Alberta, as the majority shareholder of Pacific Western Airlines, stood in no privileged position in that regard and would have to submit its effective acquisition of the airline to the approval of the Canadian Transport Commission. The possibility exists that the Federal Court decision will be appealed by the Province of Alberta to the Supreme Court of Canada. However, the Canadian Transport Commission finds itself in agreement with the Federal Court decision and, therefore, it is anticipated that hearings will be held by the Canadian Transport Commission regarding the propriety of the transaction which has seen the effective acquisition by the Government of the Province of Alberta of Pacific Western Airlines. Should such hearings proceed, it is anticipated that a number of witnesses will be heard.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS TO INDIA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question which was asked yesterday by Senator Manning regarding the present status of Canada's negotiations with India on the sale of nuclear reactors. The mandate of the negotiating team was to continue talks held under the authority of the Secretary of State for External Affairs since the Indian nuclear testing of May 1974. A series of discussions in Ottawa, New York, Bombay and New Delhi have helped to identify the positions of the two governments, and at the latest round of talks in New Delhi resolution of certain contentious issues has been agreed upon on an ad referendum basis.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs will study the report to be submitted by Mr. Michel Dupuy, the Assistant Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, who has had the responsibility for carrying these talks forward. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will then wish to examine with his colleagues whether the area of agreement which has been achieved with the Indian authorities is sufficient to allow for completion over the coming months of Canadian shipments to the safeguarded RAPP reactors built with Canadian support.

The first reactor was in operation before the nuclear explosion, but certain shipments remain outstanding for the second nuclear reactor. In the absence of new and strengthened safeguard arrangements with India covering these two reactors, nuclear shipments to them will not be resumed.

Senator Manning: May I ask the government leader a supplementary question? Has the Government of Canada considered the desirability of a total ban on the sale of nuclear reactors and the export of any fissionable material, in view of the fact that it is generally agreed that there can be no such thing as an iron-clad guarantee that this material will not at the same time be used for military purposes?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that the subject of a total ban has not as yet been discussed. The policy to this time has been to adjudge each application on its merits and attempt an assessment. However, should there be a proliferation of nuclear testing and weaponry as a result of Canadian nuclear resources having been made available to other countries for peaceful purposes, a total ban is an option which would have to be considered by the government.

● (1420)

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary of the Leader of the Government. Is it the intention of the government when this agreement with India is finally approved by the Cabinet to allow it to be debated? Perhaps I should not have used the word "allow"; to have it debated, give an opportunity to have it debated in this house and the other place?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, agreements of this type which have been achieved in the past have usually been the subject of rather lively discussion either in this chamber or in the other place, and I would think that any agreement ultimately proposed to resume shipments of fissionable materials and other components of reactors to India would, similarly, be the subject of discussion here. I can see no ban on any such discussion.

Senator Flynn: In any event, I am quite sure that the Leader of the Government is fully aware that it does not depend on the government whether we wish to discuss it in the Senate.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Of course, that observation is entirely valid. Any honourable senator may initiate an inquiry here and, in effect, make certain that we have a full and complete debate. It really does not depend upon any decision of the government.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I have another supplementary—perhaps a more important one—for the Leader of the Government. Will the proposed agreement be submitted to Parliament before the government undertakes to enter into a contractual arrangement with the Government of India, or will it merely be presented after agreement has been reached? Will it be discussed in advance in Parliament?

Senator Forsey: That is what I should have asked.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I will obtain further information with respect to this point and I must take the question as notice. It has not been the practice in the past to submit to Parliament, either to the House of Commons or to the members of this chamber, the final decision on matters of this kind. However, I will certainly have this matter discussed with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, in speaking today on Bill C-58 I wish first to compliment Senator Davey on his very able presentation of the bill, and to say at the outset that I support the principle of the bill, at least insofar as clause 1 is concerned. In fact, at policy conferences of my party over the past several years I have supported resolutions calling for the elimination of what in effect was special consideration for Time and Reader's Digest under Canadian tax law. My reason for this was based on the quite simple principle that I did not feel that two taxpayers should be singled out for special benefits under taxing legislation, any more than that two taxpayers should be singled out for special penalties. All of this is not to say, however, that I agree in the slightest in the manner in which the government has perverted this simple bill before it even becomes the law of the land by being passed by this Senate and given Royal Assent, but I will come back to that later.

Let me first deal with clause 3 of the bill concerning Canadian advertising on border broadcasting stations. All of the early discussion proposing this legislation, and most of the attention given to it by the press since it was introduced more than a year ago, has concentrated only on clause 1—so much, in fact, that the measure is commonly known as the "Time and Reader's Digest bill." Clause 3, which applies the print-media principle to border broadcasting has simply been piggybacked on to the bill, and has received little attention when it should have received a great deal of attention. In effect, this clause provides that a Canadian advertiser may not deduct as a business expense the cost of advertising to Canadians on a United States border broadcasting station, whether radio or television.

Let me acknowledge immediately that in my view Canada is confronted with a serious problem in this area. Of course, it can be argued that it is a two-way problem and examples can be given of Canadian stations benefiting from U.S. advertising, as in the case of radio and TV stations in Windsor, which is across the river from Detroit. There is not the slightest doubt, however, that where 200 million people live beside 20 million people, and most of the 20 million are huddled along the border, the spill-over effect of broadcasting is nearly all one-way.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has recognized this problem for some time, but in my opinion has launched upon a policy of confrontation rather than negotiation in seeking a solution. By its policy statement of July 1971, the CRTC recommended three forms of attack against U.S. border stations: first, the amendment of the Income Tax Act to disallow as business expense any advertising dollars spent on those stations; second, the deletion by cable companies of the commercials in programs emanating from such U.S. stations and the sale of the blanked out time by Canadian broadcasters and Canadian cable operators (commonly called commercial deletion and substitution); and third, the elimination of simultaneous programing to the advantage of the local Canadian stations (commonly called simultaneous program substitution).

The first of these items is before us in this bill. The second, namely, commercial deletion and substitution, is being implemented in some areas and it is being insisted upon by the CRTC as a condition of renewal of cablevision licences. The third item, namely, simultaneous program substitution, has been in effect for some time and is not causing insurmountable difficulties.

[Senator van Roggen.]

A further closely related policy of the CRTC is that Canadian stations should have first call on cablevision channels, with which principle no one can argue save where a spurious application of the principle is threatened for the sole purpose of making it as difficult as possible, if not impossible, for Canadians to watch U.S. stations on cablevision. This quite properly causes a public outcry, as was recently the case in Vancouver. Here serious harm was done, in addition, to the cause of bilingualism, not by proposing a French station in Vancouver but by proposing a French station be given space on cablevision at the expense of knocking off one of the major U.S. network stations—a contrivance to get rid of an American station, which was technically quite unnecessary.

What was the problem the CRTC faced that led to these policies? Canada has the largest cable television system in the world, for the very good reason that our situation is unique among the nations of the world. We live next to a highly developed populous nation. Most Canadians have grown up accustomed to watching American programming on American stations and on Canadian stations. The desire of Canadians to have a choice as to what they can watch has resulted in a multi-million dollar Canadian cable television business, because Canadians are prepared to pay a monthly fee for the right to choose between several Canadian and several United States stations or networks. This has resulted in U.S. border stations developing large Canadian audiences, in some cases solely as a result of Canadian cablevision.

It is obvious from all audience surveys that Canadians like to watch United States programs—not exclusively but regularly. Canadian advertisers wishing to reach Canadian audiences quite logically buy advertising time on these border stations. It is estimated that Canadian advertisers spend around $20 million per annum in this fashion. It is important to keep this sum in perspective against the approximately $800 million of governmental and advertising revenue presently enjoyed by the Canadian industry when considering the complaints of the Canadian stations that they require this comparatively small additional revenue to be able to produce the quality of Canadian programs required by the CRTC and by Canadians generally.

The bill before us and the deletion and replacement policy were designed to divert this $20-odd million per year to Canadian stations. But there are two problems with this, the first of which is that it will not work, for a number of technical reasons. I shall not take the time of honourable senators to deal with those now, but will leave it to the committee. Second, this act, coupled with commercial deletion and substitution, is the wrong way to go about solving a border problem with a friendly neighbour, particularly one with which we conduct $40 billion to $50 billion worth of trade per year. I totally reject this policy of six-guns drawn at high noon at the 49th parallel as the proper method of resolving Canada-United States problems.

The provisions in clause 3 of the bill simply will not solve the problem unless accompanied by commercial deletion, which is presently beginning to be enforced by the CRTC in some areas. Many thinking Canadians consider this to be a form of theft, or at least morally reprehensible, regardless of its legality, unless some form of compensation is paid for the programs that are taken and enjoyed.

So what is the solution? Has nobody thought of negotiating a treaty? That is the way I think business should be conducted between two friendly neighbouring countries, and it is surely a Canadian initiative to seek such negotiations, because it is Canada which considers it has the problem. Instead, we headed down the road of confrontation with the United States, and potential deprecation of the right of freedom of choice of our own citizens.

It will be recalled that last fall it was the United States that requested meetings to discuss this problem. Canada gave every appearance of agreeing to such meetings only reluctantly, and when they did take place in Ottawa in January 1976, our press reported that we insulted the very-high-level United States delegation with a low-level Canadian team. I trust the committee will inquire into this allegation.

Honourable senators might ask: What sort of a treaty would we negotiate? That would be up to the negotiators, with expert advice from the industries concerned. But let me quote Mr. Pierre Juneau, the former chairman of the CRTC, who said to me one day, while discussing a similar type of situation, that he had great faith in the ingenuity of the human mind to find solutions to such problems.

I urge the Senate committee studying this bill to either reject this clause in its entirety or, at the very least, to obtain the strongest form of undertaking from the government that clause 3 will not be proclaimed—it will be noted that it does not come into force until proclamation, as Senator Hayden pointed out last night—

Senator Flynn: How do you know?

Senator van Roggen:—until full, complete and sincere negotiations toward a treaty with the United States, covering all aspects of the national and regional problems of border broadcasting, have taken place. There could be significant benefits to Canada in such a course, far in excess of the comparatively few dollars this clause and the deletion policy are ostensibly aimed at.

This bill, its proponents, and all of the parliamentary, press and public debate I have heard, have totally forgotten the most important Canadian of all—the viewer and reader. We have heard nothing about his or her interest, what he or she wants to see on TV, or what magazine he or she wants to read. No, what we hear about are poor, down-trodden, multi-million dollar broadcasters and publishers. The interest of the viewer or reader is callously talked out in terms of “markets”—markets that these broadcasters and publishers want the government to protect as private fiefdoms against competition from outsiders.

I do not think Canadian viewers and readers want to be bartered about as market figures. I think they want—as is their inalienable right in a democracy—to be free to watch what they want, read what they want, and listen to what they want, just as they have the right to associate with whom they want. I also believe they wish to have, and are entitled to have, as much variety as possible among those competing for their attention. The rights of 20 million Canadians must take precedence over the privileges of some members of a single industry.

I turn now to the Time and Reader's Digest portion of the bill. As I stated at the commencement of my remarks, I support the principle underlying what one would normally expect to read into the simple wording of clause 1 of this bill, namely, no special exemption for Time and Reader's Digest.

First, let us look at the background against which we are debating clause 1 of the bill. In 1965, Canadian tax law was changed so that Canadian advertisers could not deduct as a business expense moneys spent on advertising in foreign publications. It also provided that a periodical published in Canada is not “Canadian” if it is “substantially the same” as a periodical published outside Canada. So, in effect, the yardstick to be applied after the amendment contained in this bill is passed would be whether Time or Reader's Digest are “substantially the same” as their American counterparts. Therefore, on the introduction of this bill a year ago, Time and Reader's Digest had to decide whether to fight the bill, cease publication in Canada, or comply with the bill. Reader's Digest decided to fight the bill, and Time magazine decided to comply with the bill.

Senator Laird: It is the other way around.

Senator van Roggen: No. I said that Reader's Digest opted to fight the bill which, in their case, they did successfully, and that Time magazine decided to try to comply with the bill by qualifying under it.

In Time's case, the requirements for Canadian directors was easy and 75 per cent Canadian ownership was tentatively arranged subject to the magazine's being in a position to continue in business by establishing that it was not “substantially the same” as the parent.

What would constitute “substantially the same”? A good and difficult question, but not insoluble, because lawyers and courts in Canada have built up a body of law over the years on such words as “substantial,” “undue,” “reasonable,” and so on. These are words regularly used in legal documents and agreements.

As a result, Time magazine produced a mock-up of a proposed Canadian edition, not only with the Canadian section to which we are accustomed, but with a substantial portion of the balance of the magazine rewritten from a Canadian point of view for a total of over 40 per cent Canadian content. Time's lawyers gave it as their opinion that this sample publication was “substantially different” from the parent within the meaning of the law.

Time then approached the Department of National Revenue for a ruling on the mock-up, and after due consideration by officials of the Departments of Justice, National Revenue, Finance and, I believe, the Secretary of State, the government informally advised Time magazine at a meeting that its experts disagreed with their lawyers and felt that it would be necessary for the magazine to be at least one-half Canadian content in order to qualify, whereupon the officials of Time said they felt they could accomplish this and still retain the character of their magazine.

This was a perfectly normal, legitimate meeting between opposing sides in the Department of Revenue for a discussion on this ruling with that department, and they were not too far apart. It became apparent then that Time could and was determined to comply with the law and would be able to continue publishing in Canada. That was the moment, honourable senators, when principle went out the window and expediency came in the door, because the government realized that this American company not only could comply with the new law but intended to do so and to create a Canadian news magazine under the law.

What was the government's reaction to this state of affairs? Well, it was to start ratcheting up the percentage figures on Canadian content, high enough to make sure that Time magazine, or for that matter Reader's Digest, could not comply, and this point was reached at 80 per cent. And there is no question in my mind that they would have gone to 90 per cent or 100 per cent if necessary.

This 80 per cent ruling of the Minister of National Revenue can hardly be dignified by being referred to as a tax ruling of the department. It is rather a wholly political decision of the government, and was accompanied by the extraordinary statement of the minister that it was pointless for the taxpayer to appeal the ruling because if it appealed, and succeeded, then a further bill would be introduced by the government to give statutory authority to the ruling. These antics are not before us in the words of this bill, but they must be of deep concern to us all.

I was brought up to cherish our system of government for a number of reasons, not the least of which was that we enjoyed a rule of law and not a rule of men. But, as I said a moment ago, in this case principle has gone out the window, and we are faced with a rule of men, not a rule of law.

Another remark attributed, I understand, to either the Minister of National Revenue or the Secretary of State was to the effect that not to have made the 80 per cent content ruling would have pulled the rug out from under the bill. What rug? What hidden objectives underlie this bill that are not spelled out in it? What objectives are woven into the rug which we do not know about? I trust the committee will endeavour to find out.

In the meantime the two ministers concerned continued to defend vigorously before the committee of the other place the need for the banishment of both Time and Reader's Digest from Canada so as to eliminate the so-called editorial dumping claimed to be so injurious to the Canadian magazine industry. But after the bill left the committee in the other place, the government, having abandoned principles of law, now decided to abandon principles of fairness by making a "sweetheart" deal with Reader's Digest—also through manipulation of the rulings of the Department of National Revenue, and by giving special status to one magazine instead of two.

So now the argument against editorial dumping has been thrown out the window, and we appear to be left with no need for this legislation any more, unless we are simply to justify it as a statute of Parliament to prohibit the publication of one specified magazine in Canada. If that is the case, then the bill is incorrectly intitled and an appropriate title should be inserted by the committee.

As I have indicated, honourable senators, I concur that this bill should go to committee, and I shall vote accordingly.

[Senator van Roggen.]

Let me paraphrase what I understand to be Senator Hayden's concerns, as expressed here last night. Our problem with this bill is that it is not, as they say in the Coca-Cola advertisements, the real thing. The real thing is in ministers' rulings and future proclamations. I hope the committee will be able to find a mechanism whereby this bill is delayed while the 80 per cent rule is tested in court, by government reference or otherwise, and while efforts are made to negotiate a treaty with the United States on the border broadcasting problems. Then, and only then, will the government be in a position to bring forward a complete and specific bill dealing with these problems which Parliament can consider on its real merits.

Senator Carter: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator van Roggen: Certainly.

Senator Carter: The honourable senator referred to clause 3, and the broadcasting problems that might develop therefrom, in rather general terms. I should like to ask him a question about a specific case, but before I do so, and in view of the friction that could develop between the United States and Canada from the broadcasting clause, clause 3, I want to state that I fully support his suggestion that we should work out some understanding or agreement with the United States, and then deal with the separate cases within the framework of whatever treaty or agreement we can negotiate.

To come back to the specific case I have in mind, information that has come to my desk indicates that the station in Bellingham—I think its call letters are KVOS—is the counterpart in the electronic media of Reader's Digest in the print media. I understand that this station is registered in Canada as well as in the United States; that there is a Canadian company which deals with broadcasting; and that it employs a considerable number of Canadians as writers, film makers and reporters. It seems to me that it is pretty much the counterpart of Reader's Digest. I wonder if the honourable senator would care to make a comment on that parallel.

Senator van Roggen: Quite frankly, honourable senators, I would hesitate to draw a parallel between broadcasting stations and magazines, because I think it would be over-simplistic and dangerous. There are certain superficial appearances of similarity that exist—for instance, Senator Carter mentioned the particular station at Bellingham having a Canadian company, and so on—but I point out that it is operating in an area which on this side of the boundary is subject to regulation by a regulatory authority, which magazines are not. The station on the Canadian side of the boundary is not subject to American regulatory authority, and the station on the United States side of the boundary is not subject to Canadian regulatory authority. So to draw a parallel between that and magazines or periodicals is dangerous and misleading.

With respect to my recommendations concerning clause 3 of the bill, I would stress that I do not see clause 3 in isolation and in itself creating an irritant insofar as Canada-United States relations are concerned. This is an internal Canadian tax measure, which is our business entirely.

However, I do say that it is essential to look at the overall problem, to look at the overall attack of the government in all its facets against that problem, and to take them in their totality concerning Canada-United States relations. This is why I suggest a treaty, because a treaty would not just deal with the taxation side of this thing; it would deal with the fact that we do not regulate their stations that broadcast to Canada and, quite properly, they do not regulate ours. It could deal with matters of cable deletion, and who should be the recipient of whatever value may remain in that spot after the deletion and the program has been used. Such a treaty could include a mechanism whereby the obvious problems, which in my remarks I have admitted Canada has, could be recognized and dealt with—that is, recognized and dealt with at the negotiating table, and not by confrontation.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

FREE TRADE

AN ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION FOR CANADA—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my intention to move the adjournment of this debate. The reason I am not proceeding now is that the subject matter of the motion is before one of our committees, and I think I shall be able to make a better contribution after that committee has considered this matter of free trade.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 11, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 5 of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, Chapter E-6, R.S.C., 1970.

QUARANTINE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Carter, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McGrand moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

TEMPORARY IMMIGRATION SECURITY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to which was referred Bill C-58—

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: It must be an obsession.

Senator van Roggen: It was a simple Freudian slip.

Senator Perrault: Carry on.

Senator van Roggen: It is Bill C-85, respecting immigration security.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant, as follows:

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred Bill C-85, intituled: "An Act respecting immigration security," has in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, March 3, 1976, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

George C. van Roggen,
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

VISIT OF MEXICAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO CANADA

NOTICE OF INQUIRY—JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I wish to give notice that on Tuesday next I will call the attention of the Senate to the visit of the Mexican Parliamentary Delegation to Canada from February 3 to February 11, 1976. With your permission, I should like to say that I do not intend to speak and that I have learned from other members of the Senate who were members of the Canadian delegation on that occasion, namely, Madam Speaker, Senator Asselin, Senator Neiman and Senator Lamontagne, that they do not intend to speak either. Therefore, with your permission we could dispose of this matter by having the joint communiqué printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of communiqué see appendix, pp. 1887-8.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, March 15, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put, I should like to give a word of explanation, and at the same time outline the schedule of work for next week. In view of the heavy schedule of work between now and the Easter adjournment, the decision to adjourn until Monday evening instead of to the customary Tuesday evening has been made after consultation with the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Beaubien: No, no.

Senator Langlois: They were in agreement with this change while expressing the reservation that this new schedule should be put into practice with a delay of one week, all of which was taken into consideration.

As honourable senators are well aware, it has become increasingly difficult to arrange a suitable schedule for committee meetings. Although both the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee and the Foreign Affairs Committee have been sitting on Tuesday afternoons, there have still been too many committees meeting on Wednesday and Thursday. It has therefore been decided that the best solution to the problem would be for the Senate to sit on Monday and Tuesday evenings, starting next week, and from now on to devote Tuesday morning and afternoon to committee meetings. It is hoped that honourable senators will agree with this formula, which in essence is to give every committee a chance to have full attendance and time to carry out its deliberations without undue pressure.

In giving the usual outline of what can be expected for the coming week, I will deal first with the committees. On Tuesday, the Special Committee on Science Policy has called a meeting for 9 a.m. The witnesses will be officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At 9.30 a.m. there will be a meeting of the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. The Foreign Affairs Committee will meet in the afternoon at 2.30 to continue its study of Canadian relations with the United States, and the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee will meet at the same hour to commence its examination of the subject matter of Bill C-83, an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crimes.

On Wednesday, the National Finance Committee will meet at 9.30 a.m. to continue its examination of supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1976. The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has tentatively arranged to meet at 9.30 a.m. This is not definite. There will be a meeting of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region at 3.30 p.m.

On Thursday, the Foreign Affairs Committee meets again at 9.30 a.m. on Canada-United States relations, and it is expected that the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will meet at 3.30 p.m. This has not yet been confirmed, but I am informed that the regular notice will be sent out in due course.

In the Senate we will proceed with third reading of Bill S-31 and Bill C-85, both of which were reported from committee today without amendment. We will continue with the second reading debate on Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act. There are still a number of senators who have indicated their desire to speak on this bill. We will also continue with the second reading debate on Bill C-86, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act. There are also other items on the Order Paper to be dealt with. We should receive Bill C-61, the Maritime Code, from the House of Commons before we meet on Monday.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, as has been mentioned by the Deputy Leader of the Government, we had some discussions about the necessity of the Senate's sitting on Monday night, thus changing our usual schedule, according to which we sit on Tuesday night. We understand fully the reasons why this change needs to be made, and we have no real objection to it. We on this side had suggested that possibly the same results could be obtained by sitting on Tuesday morning, and devoting Tuesday afternoon and evening to committee work because, in fact, the greater part of the Senate's workload is carried out in committees and not in the chamber itself. It seems that the decision of the Leader of the Government is that we should sit on Monday. We have no objection in principle, but we do have an objection in practice, and that is due to the fact that we did not have prior notice. We on this side of the house are few in number, and some of us have already made commitments which make it well-nigh impossible for us to be here on Monday evening next. In the circumstances, it seems grossly unfair to foist this new schedule upon us with so little warning. I would suggest to the Leader of the Government, and to honourable senators generally, that some consideration be given to this particular situation. I think that with notice of one week we can readily arrange to meet these new conditions, but without such prior notice, the situation becomes quite difficult. I was informed only at noon today, when I telephoned the deputy leader, that the intention was to sit next Monday evening. I knew we would have to start sitting on either Monday evenings or Tuesday mornings, but I was not aware the practice was to start next week. I think we all need prior notice before a change from the ordinary schedule is made, and it seems to me that the Leader of the Government should give consideration to our viewpoint. He knows very well that I have been very cooperative in trying to arrange schedules of committees, and so forth. But it is not by imposing a decision of this kind that he can expect to have continued cooperation from this side of the house, because it seems to me that one has to consider both sides of the house in these matters, particularly, as I have mentioned before, in view of the small size of the official Opposition. I feel we should have had prior notice, and I would call on the Leader of the Government to say that we will sit at 8 o'clock on Tuesday evening next, but that the following week we will sit on Monday evening, if it is the consensus of the Senate—or on Tuesday morning as we have suggested. Either solution would receive our cooperation and such a step is necessary in view of the heavy workload faced by our committees.

● (1410)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, if I may reply, it has become increasingly apparent that the workload which confronts the Senate—

Senator Grosart: You do not need to go through all that again.

Senator Perrault: I respect your right to be heard on the floor of this chamber, senator, and I would like you to hear my complete statement before making any further observations. It has become increasingly apparent that the workload facing the Senate means that we must extend our hours of work not only in the chamber but particularly in committees. In that regard there has been agreement on both sides of the house. The official Opposition has concurred in this viewpoint.

I should like to say at the outset that yesterday at noon we had a very useful and constructive meeting involving the Leader of the Opposition, other representatives of the Senate and myself to discuss the problems of meeting hours for committees. It was agreed that we had to investigate the possibility of, at least until the Easter break, meeting on Monday evenings and devoting a great deal of our Tuesdays to committee deliberations, with a sitting of the Senate on Tuesday evenings. It was agreed at that time—and I think the honourable Leader of the Opposition will confirm this—that this message was to be brought to the respective caucus meetings yesterday of the parties represented in this chamber. A commitment was given to me as Leader of the Government that the matter would be discussed with opposition senators over the lunch hour. I, in turn, agreed to raise the matter in our government caucus yesterday afternoon. I must report to those who were not at the meeting that there was a unanimous view expressed that this scheduling change should be made. It was indicated at that time that it would begin immediately and that there would be no delay in the changing of the schedule. It was further agreed that should there be any difficulty in the caucus deliberations of the Opposition party in this chamber, the Leader of the Government would be informed after that meeting had taken place. It may be a misunderstanding, but in any case I have not been contacted personally by the Leader of the Opposition outlining any difficulties which may have presented themselves with respect to the possibility of having the Senate meet on Monday evening. The Leader of the Opposition was kind enough, after the meeting of his caucus yesterday, to indicate to me that another alternative should be considered, that of meeting at 11 o'clock on Tuesday mornings instead of Monday evenings. I wish to assure the Leader of the Opposition that his proposal was presented to government members in the Senate and duly discussed, but it did not find widespread support.

I regret that the proposal to meet Monday evening may be inconvenient to some, but in view of the extremely heavy committee load next week, as indicated by the long and complete statement of the Deputy Leader of the Government, I believe that we must proceed to this schedule of having the Senate meet on Monday evenings. In announcing this, in urging this course of action upon the Senate, I hope that it does not cause undue inconvenience.

Senator Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, if I may ask a question of the government leader, will this be the regular procedure from now on?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I clarify that once again? The proposal will be to test this new schedule until the Easter break. Depending on the work of the Senate, it may be that we will have to investigate the general scheduling of Senate activities after the Easter break. It may be that we should consider a number of suggestions which have been made, including the idea of concentrating Senate activity in longer work weeks when the workload is very heavy, then having weeks in which the Senate would not meet while the House of Commons may be meeting and, perhaps, vice versa at some point down the road. As some senators are aware, there have been informal discussions relating to the possibility of having the other place adjourn for certain extra days or weeks in order that members there may have more time to confer with their constituents. In my opinion our minds should be open to all sorts of innovative ideas, with the object of making certain that Parliament operates as efficiently and effectively as possible. And certainly we do not want senators travelling to meet here for little or no purpose when there is no work to be done. We must bear in mind that some senators fly thousands of miles every week, and if they are to come down here for merely three days of activity in the chamber, plus committee responsibilities, then we must question the manner in which we are scheduling our work.

Senator Grosart: We have been questioning it for a long time.

Senator Perrault: Yes, the honourable senator says he has questioned the procedure for quite a while. I think it is quite right that we all question parliamentary practices and procedures. All too often people in Parliament are inclined to urge everyone else in the country to become more efficient, labour to become more productive and business to become more profitable. Perhaps we should look to our own parliamentary institutions and attempt to reform them.

• (1420)

Senator Flynn: Not by this method.

Senator Perrault: It is a long reply to the basic question asked by Senator Desruisseaux. The trial period will be until the Easter break, and then we shall assess the situation with our friends who represent the Opposition party in the chamber.

Senator Beaubien: Honourable senators, I should like to bring up one point. The Leader of the Government said we have a lot of things to do on Tuesday. We have committee meetings and committee meetings. But he wants us to come here on Monday night because there are meetings on Tuesday morning. He is afraid that the members of the various committees will not turn up unless there is a penalty attached, unless they are penalized for not being in the chamber on Monday night. It reminds me of the old army days when we made sure that the troops were in at eight o'clock at night because they had to be on parade the next morning at nine—otherwise they might not be sober and properly dressed.

I am not on any of the three committees scheduled to sit on Tuesday. Why should I have to come here on Monday night simply because someone wants to have a committee meeting at nine o'clock Tuesday morning? It is felt that unless senators are compelled to be here on Monday night they will not be available for committee meetings on Tuesday morning. I do not think it makes any sense. Certainly, when we have work to do we all pitch in; but what work are we going to do on Monday night, except to make sure that the troops are here? It seems to me that we have to try to make plans for what we have to do. We have been given only a couple of days' notice. It makes no sense at all.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, every senator in this chamber must assess how he wishes to perform his duties. If the honourable senator wishes to absent himself on Monday, that is a decision for him to take. All I can do is assure honourable senators that there will be a very lively and important debate on Monday night, and I would urge honourable senators to attend and participate in this democratic process.

Senator Beaubien: I think we can say that senators fall into three categories. There are those who live in Ottawa, and it does not make much difference to them; they can always pop in for a minute. There are those who live in other parts of Canada, and it is difficult for them to be here. Then there is the third category of senators who do not mind too much, because they will write in and say they are on public business anyway. Those who try to live up to the rules and attend should be given some consideration.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I must say that I for one welcome the news that at long last we are going to look to a solution to this problem. I am surprised, however, at what appears to be a lack of communication between the leader on the other side and the leader on this.

The Leader of the Government has indicated the process by which this decision was arrived at. There were discussions between the two leaders—I am quoting him; I am not speaking from personal knowledge. The matter was referred to both caucuses. The Conservative caucus suggested a second alternative. My understanding is that the government caucus considered it and rejected it, and I have no objection to that. The decision was made. I was told last night that this decision had been made, yet the Leader of the Opposition said he only learned about it at noon today.

I suggest that is not the way to achieve cooperation between the two leaders and the two parties officially represented in the Senate. A little more attention should be given to these matters. It makes no sense that I was told last night that this decision had been reached, and the Leader of the Opposition was not told until noon today.

The suggestion of the Leader of the Government is, in my view, a very reasonable one. I began my remarks by saying, "At long last..." This suggestion was made, to my knowledge, at an official meeting in the office of the Leader of the Government at least a year and half ago. It was discussed seriously then, and I think there was agreement on the part of many who were at that meeting that a solution of this type, which would make more time available on certain days for committee meetings was necessary. I am in full agreement with that. However, after such a long period of time, it does seem unreasonable that the Senate should be informed as late as 2.30 today that this schedule would go into effect Monday next.

Personally, it does not affect me at all, but it does seem unreasonable that after such a lengthy period of time there should be this precipitous decision. I would urge the Leader of the Government to reconsider what appeared to be his refusal to accept the suggestion put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. In the circumstances, that suggestion would tend to ease the situation of which I complain—that is, the lack of communication between the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, as a very recent addition—or subtraction, depending upon your point of view—to this chamber, I hesitate to become involved in a discussion of this kind. However, it really involves our duties and obligations, and I think I can say, without too much exaggeration, that I have tried to be present at all sittings, and to do what I could and ought to do since becoming a member of the Senate, and I shall continue to do so.

Having had no notice and no expectation that a change such as the one proposed would occur, I find myself in a difficult position with respect to carrying out my other activities, against which there is no bar so long as I perform my senatorial duties. I have made certain very definite commitments for a number of Mondays—commitments which I would have difficulty in sloughing off on someone else, or in making alternative arrangements. This puts me in a difficult position, as I said, and I suspect there are quite a few others in the same position.

I do not live very far from here in terms of flying time, but in order to be here for a Monday evening sitting of the Senate, bearing in mind present airline schedules, I would have to be away from my ordinary residence for most of Monday. Although I have some leeway in this respect, I do not find it particularly satisfactory to face the penalty involved in missing a Monday evening sitting of the Senate, the purpose of which sitting would be to merely ensure my presence, as Senator Beaubien says, at committee meetings on Tuesday. It is difficult to appreciate the arrangement which brings that about.

I could not help but observe in the short time I have been here that the length of time the Senate takes to perform its necessary duties is not unduly long. It has always seemed to me that with some care in the scheduling of committee meetings and utilizing Tuesday afternoons, with the exception of some very special occasions, the committees could complete whatever work they are required to do by six o'clock on Thursday evening.

I unreservedly recognize that when a senator accepts appointment to the Senate he accepts the obligations that go with it, and if that takes five days a week or six days a week, he ought to accept that. All I am pointing out is this sudden change from the routine, which I am led to believe has been followed for a very long time, is bound to leave some of us in an extremely difficult position. I want to bring that to the attention of the Leader of the Government and honourable senators because so far as I can tell I shall not be able to be here this coming Monday and the Mondays immediately following. I do not want it to be thought that that is because I am not willing to perform my duties and obligations here. It is because historic experience has led me to make other commitments which are important to me and, I hope, important to others.

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, I am quite sure, if it is necessary to increase the number of sittings of the Senate to accommodate the work in both the house and the committees, we all recognize that that is the proper thing to do. I would not expect there to be any objection to it.

I would underscore the points that have been made, citing the problems which are created for many of us when changes of this kind in the established schedule are made without reasonable notice. It is not just a matter of inconvenience. I do not think the Senate can take into account inconvenience on the part of any individual member of the house in planning its work, but there are the very practical difficulties which exist.

To cite my own case, I am one of those who do not live in Ottawa, and I am away from the city when the house is not sitting. I have to travel 1,700 miles to be here. In the past year, I have missed some five or six sittings of the house simply because I received short notice that one was being called and it was impossible for me to get air transportation. Those are the practical problems. It is my practice to book transportation a month in advance on the basis of the established schedule. I do not know yet, but I am very doubtful that I can get a flight back here in time for next Monday night.

It does seem to me, when we have a schedule which is established and has been in effect for a long period of time, and which all of us assume is the schedule of the house, that if it is necessary to make changes there should be at least a week's notice so that we do not encounter, not merely the inconvenience of cancelling personal commitments but the very practical problem of not even being able to be here at all because of transportation difficulties. I do not think a week's notice is reasonable for a change in a schedule that has been in effect for at least 18 months or two years.

The other suggestion I would offer has no doubt been considered. It has been mentioned that the work before the Senate is very light at the present time. There have been long delays in legislation coming to us from the other place. The Order Paper is fairly light in respect of legislation requiring serious attention. It seems to me the great volume of urgent work is in the committees, and I agree with the Leader of the Government when he says that right now there is a backlog of work in the Senate committees. In those circumstances, why cannot consideration be given to having the house sit for perhaps an hour each day, and devoting the remainder of the afternoon and evening to committee work? It does not seem businesslike to me to spend two and a half hours in the house with very little material requiring urgent attention, when our committees could be attending to the matters referred to them.

I would suggest to the Leader of the Government that there is latitude to allow an adjustment of the workload as between the house and the committees. The length of sittings of the Senate can be reduced until such time as more legislation comes to us from the other place, and that time can be used by the committees. I do not object to sitting four or five days a week, or whatever is necessary. However, I do think if consideration were given to an adjustment of time as between the chamber and committees, everything could be accommodated within the present time schedule.

If a change is to be made, then for the reasons I and others have mentioned we should have at least a week in order to adjust our schedules to enable us to be here to do our work.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, since I have been involved in these communications I would like to refer to the remarks of Senator Grosart regarding the so-called lack of communication between the two leaders.

Yesterday morning I attended a meeting in the office of the Leader of the Government, which meeting was attended by the Leader of the Opposition and the co-ordinator of our committees, Senator Bourget. This new schedule was discussed at that time, as was stated this afternoon, and it was agreed that this would be referred to the respective caucuses, opposition and government, in this house. Therefore, yesterday afternoon, as the Leader of the Government has pointed out, a decision was made in our caucus. We were informed of the decision—

Senator Flynn: The decision?

Senator Langlois: —yesterday afternoon.

Senator Flynn: The decision?

Senator Langlois: Yes, the decision was discussed in our caucus.

Senator Flynn: The decision?

Senator Langlois: The decision was left to the caucuses, regarding the agreement we discussed yesterday morning.

Late yesterday afternoon, if I recall correctly, I met the Leader of the Opposition and I informed him of the decision of our caucus with respect to Monday evening. It was then—

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Langlois: You say no, but I have a definite recollection of that.

Senator Flynn: I did not see you yesterday afternoon after the caucus.

Senator Langlois: Yes, quite late yesterday—around suppertime. I do not recall the time exactly. I will come back to that.

It was at that time that the honourable Leader of the Opposition told me that he had another suggestion to make, which was to sit on Tuesday morning instead of—

Senator Flynn: You are entirely wrong, I am sorry to say.

Senator Langlois: You spoke to me about that yesterday, did you not?

Senator Flynn: If I am permitted I will say that when I came into the house yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, I spoke to the Leader of the Government and told him that in principle we were in agreement, that we should sit either Monday night or Tuesday morning. That is what I told the Leader of the Government.

I was never told by anyone what the consensus of the Liberal caucus had been. I hope I am using a more proper term than "decision of the Liberal caucus." That is the point. I assure Senator Langlois that he is mistaken when he says he told me last night that it would be Monday.

In any event, the only thing that I said to the Leader of the Government was that we were in agreement in principle, but I never said at any time, and I was never told at any time, that it would be next Monday that this would start.

Senator Langlois: That is exactly what I wanted to say.

Senator Flynn: If that is what you wanted to say, say it.

Senator Langlois: Perhaps I did not state the facts quite accurately when I said that you had spoken to me. You were speaking to the Leader of the Government and I was standing by. I heard the conversation at the time.

Senator Flynn: It was at 2 o'clock.

Senator Langlois: And later on, at 6 o'clock last night, I told the Deputy Leader of the Opposition what decision had been made by our caucus.

Senator Flynn: You didn't tell me.

Senator Langlois: If, therefore, there was a lack of communication, it was between the two of you.

Senator Grosart: On that matter, that is surely a question of privilege and it is very difficult for me to speak it.

What in fact happened is that I did say I had the information last night.

Senator Langlois: You got it from me.

Senator Grosart: I got the information last night in the meeting of a subcommittee of a committee of this house, where it was casually said in answer to a question from a member of the committee. I need hardly say that I assumed I was not being told that officially. I need hardly say that I did not assume I was being told it before my leader was told.

Senator Langlois: I hope the honourable senator is not denying that last night at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Internal Economy Committee he put the question to me directly, "What is the program for next week?" I said the decision in our caucus was to sit on Monday evening. If you did not inform your leader, well, I do not think we should take the blame for it.

● (1440)

Senator Grosart: Surely that is not fair.

Senator Flynn: That is unfair.

Senator Grosart: Again on a question of privilege, am I to understand that any time I am given information about the intentions of the Leader of the Government in this house I am to assume my leader has not been told, and that I then have an obligation to tell him? Surely, using any kind of common sense, honourable senators, my assumption would be that my leader had been told. I cannot see that any other assumption would be proper in respect to the position I hold here. In all common sense, if it was the intention that I should communicate that to the leader, that would have been said.

Senator Flynn: Certainly.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, perhaps there was a misunderstanding at the meeting which was held yesterday morning in my office. The agreement was, as I will repeat, that the proposal for Monday night sittings—

Senator Flynn: Not this Monday.

Senator Perrault:—and the rescheduling of committee activities to avoid as many clashes as possible, would be discussed with the Opposition caucus, and if there were any difficulties at all they would be communicated to the Leader of the Government. There were no adverse reports received, apart from an additional proposal that an eleven o'clock sitting of the Senate for Tuesday morning be considered, and that was duly discussed in our caucus.

Senator Grosart: I am not objecting to that, but perhaps to clarify the situation in the future the Leader of the Government will say to me that if at any time I am given information as to the procedure in the Senate I am to assume that that information has not been given to the Leader of the Opposition. If he will tell me that, I will be able to guide myself, and this kind of situation will not happen again.

Senator Perrault: I think that is a logical assumption in view of the important position which you hold in the Official Opposition. I may say additionally that if there were any serious objections on the part of the Official Opposition to the proposal to sit this Monday night, the information only reached me about an hour ago. The Leader of the Opposition did not contact me.

Senator Flynn: I contacted Senator Langlois.

Senator Perrault: He did not telephone me.

Senator Langlois: He called me.

Senator Flynn: I contacted Senator Langlois. Didn't he tell you?

Senator Langlois: Yes, I did.

Senator Perrault: Let me say that he duly and efficiently passed the information along to me.

Senator Flynn: Which information?

Senator Langlois: We are still on speaking terms here.

Senator Flynn: So are we.

Senator Perrault: The information that somehow there was a reluctance on the part of the Official Opposition to meet this Monday night.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault: Then I suggest to you, honourable senator, that the information was rather late in being communicated to us.

Senator Flynn: But I was informed only at noon, when I telephoned. I took the initiative of telephoning Senator Langlois.

Senator Langlois: I don't deny that.

Senator Flynn: I know. I am not arguing with you at this time.

Senator Langlois: And I told the leader immediately.

Senator Flynn: And I told you that I thought you should give us prior notice before starting with this new schedule, and you told me that you would convey that information.

Senator Perrault: He did.

Senator Flynn: Now the Leader of the Government says it is too late. Well, I knew at 12 o'clock, and exactly at that time I made my objection. I am saying that that is the only problem. I am suggesting that we should have been given prior notice. I am suggesting that under the circumstances the Leader of the Government should show more flexibility. We are not asking for a basic change in the program. We are simply saying that we are not prepared for next Monday. I cannot dispense with half the membership of my group here as you can with yours. Some consideration should be given to that situation. I appeal for flexibility, and I ask all honourable senators on the government side to show some consideration. If you want cooperation from us, then you should give us consideration occasionally.

For the last time I ask the government leader to change the date to Tuesday of next week, and then from the following week on we can follow the new schedule.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, as a government backbencher I would ask our leader and deputy leader to consider what has been said. I do not think it is according to any great eternal plan that we have to meet this Monday. I am all in favour of meeting on Mondays, if that is what it has to be, but it does result in inconvenience to honourable senators—for instance, to my friend Senator Manning from Edmonton. It is difficult for many of us to obtain reservations and be here on Mondays, although it is not impossible. I suggest to the honourable leader that in this particular case the appeal of the Opposition is one which might be heeded.

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, I should like to say just one word, because I attended the meeting yesterday. As we all know, the Senate is called the house of second thought, and I would ask my leader to agree to the suggestion made by Senator Buckwold, that in the circumstances we meet next Tuesday. We have to work with the chairmen of all committees, and we would like their cooperation. It is not often that I ask a favour of my leader, but I think it would be reasonable if he were to agree with the Leader of the Opposition on this occasion.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there have been some persuasive statements made this afternoon.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: And I have been moved by the eloquence of some of the remarks.

Senator Bourget: I am speaking of next week only, of course.

Senator Perrault: If the government accedes to this request, out of the generosity which moves the spirit of the party which holds the majority in this chamber, I hope that it is clearly understood—

Senator Flynn: There is no doubt.

Senator Perrault:—that on Thursday afternoon next we shall not hear a lecture from the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, complaining once again about the clash in committee meeting times and the difficulties facing this chamber.

The situation here has become intolerable. I will certainly accede to the request of Senator Bourget and others for this coming week, but we can no longer tolerate a situation in which some honourable senators really regard this as a day-and-a-half's operation per week—

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Perrault:—and where they are not prepared to put in the hours and the time which is expected from any one who serves in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: Don't look at us.

Senator Grosart: Be careful which way you are looking.

Senator Perrault: Well, honourable senators, you are not looking at the Leader of the Government, I can assure you.

Senator Smith (Colchester): There are many over there that we can't look at.

Senator Langlois: There must be some who are cross-eyed on the other side.

Senator Perrault: In view of the opinions expressed here, and because of the information I have received about travel reservations and so on, we shall accede to this request. Perhaps the Deputy Leader of the Opposition will wish to withdraw his motion, and perhaps later this day we can advise on a date.

Senator Langlois: Amend the motion.

[Senator Buckwold.]

Senator Perrault: Yes, amend the motion by making the appropriate changes.

Senator Flynn: We can amend it to state "March 16".

Senator Perrault: I hope that the postponement of this program to a week from Monday will not still prove onerous for certain honourable senators.

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Perrault: As you know, there has been a long history of resistance in the Senate to meeting on Monday evenings. Honourable senators are aware of that fact.

Senator Flynn: We are in agreement.

Senator Perrault: If we are expected to do the kind of work which needs to be done, then we have to put the hours in.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Perrault: I suggest that a common courtesy to the Leader of the Government is for the Leader of the Opposition to communicate promptly his concerns about matters relating to the hours of sitting of this house, and not wait 24 hours before that concern is communicated, which was in fact the situation on this occasion.

Senator Grosart: Don't spoil it.

Senator Flynn: I thought it would be so easy for the Leader of the Government to accede to the request without making an ungracious speech and without trying to further find fault. I have made my position clear. I telephoned Senator Langlois at 12 o'clock today. He told me about the plan. I told him of my objection. He told me that he would tell you. When you say that I delayed 24 hours, well, I told you about the consensus of my caucus at two o'clock yesterday.

Senator Perrault: Twenty-four hours.

Senator Flynn: I do not see how I could have done more than I did. I do not see how the Leader of the Government can justify his accusing me of waiting to inform him of things that I did not learn about until noon today.

● (1450)

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, before consideration is given to the redrafting of the motion respecting the adjournment—

Senator Langlois: The motion has been modified.

Senator Lamontagne:—I hope that the Deputy Leader and the Leader of the Government will consider the possibility of the Senate's not sitting next Wednesday afternoon, but perhaps sitting Wednesday evening. This would allow us to reschedule, at least, the committee meetings which have already been planned for Tuesday.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I have been deeply touched by the plea made by Senator Bourget and Senator Buckwold, and by the generosity of my leader, who has agreed to modify the decision which had been taken for next week. In this mood, I humbly beg the Senate to allow me to modify my motion. Therefore, with leave of the Senate and pursuant to rule 23, I would ask that the motion be modified by striking out "Monday next, 15th" and substituting therefor "Tuesday next, 16th".

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Longlois' request. I think it is legitimate in the circumstances. It seems to me, however, that this should be done without prejudice to the meetings of committees that are to be held on Tuesday morning and Tuesday afternoon according to the existing schedule, which should not be amended.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, before the motion is put I should like to correct the statement made by the Deputy Government Leader in respect of the work of the committees for next week. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will not be considering supplementary estimates (B), but will be considering, rather, the draft report on its study on Canada Manpower, which is 215 pages long and contains 61 resolutions. The committee will be meeting Wednesday morning, Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning.

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, as far as I am concerned the meeting of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy which was scheduled for next Tuesday morning will not take place at that time.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Lamontagne: I hope it will take place on Wednesday afternoon, and that in the meantime—

Senator Langlois: When the Senate is sitting?

Senator Lamontagne: No, when the Senate adjourns. In the meantime, I hope the members of the committee will have an opportunity to consider the brief which has been presented to us by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, why should the fact that we are not sitting on Monday night have any effect whatever on the sittings of committees on Tuesday morning?

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion as modified?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion, as modified, agreed to.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Senator Everett, for Senator Lang, moved the third reading of Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time, and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. George Isaac Smith: Honourable senators, a great deal of what I had planned to say in respect of this bill, and the things which have happened under it or because of it, have already been dealt with by those who have already spoken, in particular, Senator Cook, Senator Hayden and Senator van Roggen.

I do not think it will be necessary for me to repeat the considerations which they put so well before the house and with which I agree. If I do not do that, I would not like anyone to think that I lack any warmth in supporting the main points which they made about the difficulties which have arisen on account of, and which are inherent in, this bill, or about the actions which have taken place in relation to it, some of which seem to me to have been rather premature because the bill is still a long way from royal assent. The truth of the matter is that I support, as warmly as I can, the remarks made about those difficulties, and it is very hard for me to refrain from forming the belief that much of this bill and the performances under it amount simply to a charade.

I believe, too, that the way the whole matter has been handled indicates a firm determination to place the passing fancy of a minister above the rule of law and above Parliament. I believe it demonstrates that there are those on whose part the desire to follow democratic principles is sometimes lost in their desire to have their own way and in their firm belief that they, and only they, know what is best for Canadians.

Before I go on to deal briefly with Time and Reader's Digest, which are very much affected by this bill, let me speak of another monthly publication that seems to have got caught in the net which was spread to catch the two publications I have named. I refer to a monthly publication called MD of Canada. This is a publication which is circulated for the use, or the entertainment—whatever the proper word is—of doctors in this country. I believe it goes free of charge to some 30,000 medical people in Canada, which I think would be by far the great majority of them, and probably almost all of them, both English-speaking and French-speaking.

This is a magazine which has, of course, a relationship with a magazine in the United States. There is no desire to make light of that. It is, however, published in Canada. Its list of officers reads like a roll of distinguished persons in the medical and related fields in Canada. It has a number of employees, although not a large number, in Canada.

Senator McLraith: It is also edited in Canada.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes, it is edited in Canada by an outstanding Canadian, William G. Gibson. Its general manager, its Ontario sales manager and its editorial board, as listed in the publication, are all Canadians.

• (1500)

Senator McLraith: What about its content?

Senator Smith (Colchester): That brings me to my next point which deals with the content. I am told it has been able to meet the so-called Cullen rule, and the publication has been informed that what they now have come to do is within that rule. They have one difficulty, however. Although they are willing and ready to sell a 75 per cent interest in their Canadian endeavour, so far they have not been able to find a buyer. So, honourable senators, if that particular situation continues to exist, they will find themselves out of business as a result of this legislation combined with the orders which have been made by ministers relating to ownership.

This publication, as I have already said, is sent free to more than 30,000 physicians in Canada. It is, of course, supported by advertising, and that advertising, as one can easily tell by looking through the publication, is related specifically to medical matters and things which would be of interest to doctors and not of great interest to anyone else except, perhaps, to those in related occupations. It seems to me, having read one issue—not carefully or in detail, but enough to grasp what seems to be in it—that it certainly comes within the following words contained in the Report of the Royal Commission on Publications of 1961:

—Cultural publications, and literary and scholarly journals, are part of our national heritage, reflecting something else than our concern with the marketplace, keeping alive among us the deeper, sweeter and more spiritual things of life.

It seems to me that this publication really does come within that type of description, and ought somehow to be permitted to carry on its very useful work.

I am further informed—although I cannot vouch for this and I put it before you only as hearsay, but as hearsay given to me as being capable of proof—that its demise or its departure from the Canadian market would be of no substantial significance, perhaps of no significance at all, to other publications of any kind in Canada, because the advertising that it carries is also carried in other publications aimed at the same audience. It would simply mean a reduction in the expense of the advertisers because they would not be able to advertise in MD of Canada, and they would continue to advertise in the other publications they use.

I submit that there ought to be some way to deal with this magazine so as to permit it to continue publication, especially since it has complied, can comply and, I understand, will continue to comply with the Canadian content rule, and is ready and willing to sell a 75 per cent share whenever it can find a buyer.

I should like now, honourable senators, to turn for a moment to broadcasting, and here I think I cannot do much better than simply support the comments made by Senator Hayden and Senator van Roggen. It seems to me that this bill does not take note of the real situation in either Toronto or Vancouver. I believe that Senator Hayden is perfectly correct when he says that the major stations in Toronto are sold out of prime time for a considerable time in advance, and that the others do not have an audience to make them attractive to advertisers in substantial measure. From the advertisers' point of view, as they, of course, pointed out, there is not much point in buying time on a broadcasting station that cannot bring their advertising to the people to whom they wish to sell their goods.

As to the Bellingham station, the bill seems to me, in the light of what Senator van Roggen said, to make even less sense than it does with reference to Toronto—if, indeed, it makes any sense at all. Although the transmitting facilities of the Bellingham station are in the United States, all its Canadian marketing, selling and much of its production work is done through a Canadian corporation which it established in Vancouver. That Canadian corporation has a Canadian sales, executive and production staff. The advertisements that are sold to Canadian advertisers are broadcast by that station, but the money which Canadian advertisers pay, I am told, is taxable, and the tax is paid in Canada.

I understand also that over the past 8 or 9 years in various ways this Canadian corporation—assisted, I suppose, by the American aspect of it—has put into the economy of western Canada, and therefore the economy of Canada as a whole, something like a total of $75 million. It has established a production facility called Canawest which has developed, I am told—and I believe this—into the largest organization of its kind in western Canada, employing Canadians and generally carrying out all its operations in Canada, although, of course, some of its productions are undoubtedly used by the parent station, and some are used in Canada by Canadian stations.

In my view, the broadcasting aspect of this bill and the things done under it—particularly insofar as it relates to Vancouver—really require a great deal of scrutiny. It seems to me that here it has resulted in even more injustice than has been the case with other aspects of it.

Let me turn briefly to Time and Readers' Digest. As I understand the history of the events relating to these publications, Time Canada said in the beginning that it would comply with the government's requirements, or with the minister's requirements, as to editing, control, licensing and ownership. However, it did raise strong objection to the 80 per cent Canadian content rule. It did so—and to me this is a perfectly reasonable position to take—because it is a news magazine which draws on world news sources for its coverage. You cannot find 80 per cent of all the news in the world in Canada, no matter what the federal government says.

Reader's Digest did not seem to be nearly so cooperative at first but, lo and behold, after a long time—and it is not very long ago now—we suddenly find the minister whose edict as to Canadian content has proven so difficult for Time, impossible for Time, announcing that it is either not applicable to Readers' Digest, or is applicable in such a way that it allows Readers' Digest to continue in operation. The minister, as I read what he says, claims that the changes he made in this respect were not made particularly to help Readers' Digest, but to help digests generally. Of course, the only digest with which there was great concern was the Readers' Digest. It is very difficult to believe that these changes that were made, either in the rule itself or in its application, were not specifically designed to allow Readers' Digest to stay in Canada. I do not particularly object to that. In fact, I suppose I would find it very difficult to object to the fact that Readers' Digest can stay in Canada. It is the way in which it was done that I find objectionable.

Here again, it seems to me, is one of the most glaring examples in our history of rule by ministerial whim. It is rule by ministerial whim with a vengeance. As other senators have said, it is certainly not the rule of law. One cannot help but wonder why the ministerial whim chose to favour Reader's Digest, and to treat Time differently. Clearly, for some reason, the minister was determined to get rid of Time in its Canadian edition, come what may. I must say that this belief is certainly heightened by a remark made some time ago by the minister concerned, that if the legislation and the rules made under it were not acceptable to the courts he would soon see that some other bill to bring about his objective becomes law. This is one of the most extraordinary statements I have heard in a long while.

Senator Hayden pointed out on Tuesday evening that an eminent authority in this field, Senator Grattan O'Leary, said to the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, "I am not so sure that Time magazine today is not the best Canadian magazine we have." Note that he did not say merely "the best magazine distributed in Canada;" rather he said "the best Canadian magazine." I must say that I agree with him. Its Canadian section, though consisting of only a few pages each week, gave the best Canadian perspective available in Canada, or anywhere else for that matter. However, the minister, for reasons which are not entirely clear unless they are simply that he wishes to get Time out of Canada, would take it away from Canadians and leave them with something greatly inferior. Although his reasons for doing this may satisfy him, they do not seem to satisfy very many Canadians.

I have on other occasions protested that matters which go to the substance of existing rights ought to be contained in the statute law—the statute law as passed by Parliament—and ought not to be contained in regulations made by the Governor in Council. Today, we are dealing with something even worse, something which certainly goes to the substance of the matter but which is dealt with by ministerial decree, if it may be dignified by that formal name. Surely, the description I have used several times this afternoon, "ministerial whim," is far more applicable when one studies what has been done.

It seems to me, honourable senators that this is an intolerable method in a democratic society, and I protest against it as strongly as I know how. In my opinion, it is unacceptable to have a minister of the Crown deprive me of what I wish to see and read, and do the same to Canadians everywhere. I suggest that what has been done in this case has been done without regard to the wishes of Canadians as a whole, without regard even to the wishes of the great majority of advertisers who have been using the media we have been discussing and wish to continue to use them as the most effective method of selling their products.

There is another aspect of the matter, which in the long run may be the most serious of all—our relations with the United States. It will be remembered that a few years ago, when the Honourable Mitchell Sharp was the Minister of Finance, the United States found it necessary to adopt certain financial measures in relation to other countries, which clearly would have had a most serious adverse effect on Canada. It will be remembered also that the then Government of Canada sent Mr. Sharp to Washington to try to persuade the United States to exempt Canada from these harmful measures, an exemption not granted to any other country. It was a matter of the greatest importance to Canada that Mr. Sharp should succeed in his mission and, to his great credit and Canada's great advantage, he did succeed. We must remind ourselves that if our relations with the United States had not been good, it is very likely that Mr. Sharp's request would not even have been entertained, much less granted. There have been other occasions, many of them when Canada needed and obtained special treatment from that great country, and there will be many more such occasions unless the world changes.

We all know that the United States is our largest trading partner and, if we look at things seriously, we also know that the United States is our chief bulwark against destruction by violent attack. It is of the utmost necessity that good relations between our two nations be preserved, and we should all keep that firmly in mind for the good of Canada.

There can be little doubt that many people in the United States now regard what is being done in connection with this matter, and the general controversy with respect to television and cablevision, as highly provocative. Honourable senators, I think it is reasonable to ask ourselves if we must do things this way. I do not advocate and will not willingly accept any Canadian attitude of subservience to the United States, or to any other country. I want to see a proud Canada, with our own political and social institutions, our own culture and our own views. I know that this, if we are to attain it and keep it, will often require us to firmly insist on doing things that the United States and other countries may not like, but surely there is no need to do these things provocatively or by confrontation. They should be done with patience, with fair play, by discussion and negotiation, with a continuing regard for the sensitivity of others and the importance of avoiding any unnecessary strain upon our good relations. They should be done, also, with a warm regard for the needs and wishes of Canadians everywhere. I believe that this whole problem and related matters have not been dealt with in accordance with such considerations.

For these and other reasons I find that I cannot support this bill and what is proposed done under it. I am prepared, however, to see it referred to committee in order to determine whether some kind of improvement can be worked out which can be supported by those who hold views similar to mine.

Senator Lafond: If no other senator wishes to speak at this time, I should like to move, on behalf of Senator Laird, that the debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Lafond, for Senator Laird, debate adjourned.

STATUTE LAW (VETERANS AND RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Chesley W. Carter moved the second reading of Bill C-86, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

He said: Honourable senators, veterans insurance legislation is a very important part of the Veterans Charter. Its original purpose was to provide coverage for veterans who, by reason of wounds or other disability, were not eligible or medically qualified to receive insurance coverage from commercial companies. However, once the legislation was passed, it was not restricted to this group of veterans, but was made available to veterans generally.

The first veterans legislation of this nature was the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act which was passed around 1920, following the First World War. It provided a maximum coverage of $5,000 for a policyholder, and 48,000 policies were issued under that legislation with a total coverage value of $109 million. Of those 48,000 policies, 18,000 terminated in death claims, and 18,000 to 20,000 were surrendered for their cash value. Another 9,000 to 10,000 were terminated for other reasons. There are still in force 2,500 policies, with a total value of $5.5 million.

Following World War II, in August 1944, Parliament passed the Veterans' Insurance Act. Incidentally, both of those acts are still in force. I should point out that the termination date for new applications was October 31, 1968.

The maximum coverage per individual policyholder under the Veterans' Insurance Act was $10,000. A total of 56,000 policies, or contracts, were issued, with a total coverage value of $185 million. Of those 56,000 policies, 9,000 terminated in death claims, roughly 23,500 claims were made for the cash surrender value, 4,300 claims were terminated for other reasons, leaving a total of approximately 19,000 policies still in force, with a coverage value of $60 million.

Bill C-86 contains two separate but similar amendments to each of those two insurance acts. The first amendment has to do with options. It provides options not now available under present legislation to both the insured and, after the policyholder's death, the beneficiary.

The present act stipulates that only $2,000 of the death benefit can be paid in a lump sum. The remainder must be paid as annuities. The only exception to this rule is when the total claim is less than $3,000 for each beneficiary. But even this exception can be made only with the minister's consent.

The amendment in Bill C-86 will enable policyholders to elect to have the full amount of their coverage paid either as a lump sum or as an annuity. On the other hand, when the claim becomes payable after the policyholder's death, the amendment gives the beneficiary the option of receiving the proceeds either as a lump sum or as an annuity.

Clause 2 of Bill C-86 amends the Veterans Insurance Act in this respect, and the corresponding amendment to the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act is clause 5.

The second amendment has to do with spouses. As honourable senators know, in recent years and months we have passed in this chamber amendments to the Old Age Security Act, the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. All of those amendments were designed to recognize common-law spouses. The purpose of this amendment is to update the veterans insurance acts and bring both in line with the legislation I have mentioned, and with other parts of the Veterans Charter.

Bill C-86 provides that a common-law spouse may be designated as a beneficiary and can be paid the proceeds of a policy if the couple have resided together and have represented themselves as man and wife for a specified period of time. In cases where no barriers to marriage exist, the period specified in the bill is one year. In cases where the policyholder was prohibited from marrying the common-law spouse by the existence of a previous marriage or some other legal obstacle, the time period specified in the bill is three years.

This amendment enables the expressed wishes of the policyholder to be carried out, which is not possible under present legislation. It also removes some injustices. Cases have been known where a man and woman have lived together for a period of 30 years, yet, on the death of the policyholder, the survivor has been barred by the legislation from receiving the death benefits.

Spouses have also undergone, in many cases, considerable personal sacrifice to ensure their protection in the future, only to find, after the policyholder's death, that they are not eligible to receive the proceeds. Clause 4 of Bill C-86 amends the Veterans Insurance Act in this respect, and the corresponding amendment to the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act is to be found in clause 6.

● (1530)

Clause 7 of the bill merely ensures the validity of payments under contracts already in force under the two acts I have mentioned.

Honourable senators, this is not a controversial bill. It received quick passage in the other place. It is my hope that it will receive similar treatment in this chamber. Personally, I doubt whether it is necessary to send it to committee, but if that is the wish of honourable senators, I shall be glad to move the appropriate motion.

Bill C-86 constitutes certain improvements in the legislation affecting a small but very important segment of Canadian society, and I heartily commend it to honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1975

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act, which was presented yesterday.

Senator Langlois, for Senator Goldenberg, moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, by way of explanation, the 12 amendments made in committee deal, for the most part, with clarification of the wording of both the English and French texts. The only substantive amendment is the striking out of lines 1 and 2 on page 22 of the bill, and substituting therefor the following:

is guilty of

(e) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for ten years; or

(f) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

This amendment is in relation to clause 27 of the bill, which deals with the theft, forgery, and so forth, of credit cards. I do not think the amendment itself needs to be explained at great length. It was accepted by the Department of Justice and passed by the committee. The remainder of the amendments have to do only with modifications to both the English and French texts.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, there are a few comments I should like to make in connection with this report.

As Senator Langlois has said, most of the amendments are for purposes of clarification. Overall, the committee did an excellent job in examining this bill, which is a very important one. It did not, however, correct all of the objectionable areas of the bill, the main one being the obvious tendency demonstrated by the Department of Justice to enact amendments on the basis of isolated cases or problems submitted by either attorneys general or crown prosecutors. It is as though all of the grievances were gathered in a basket and amendments made in relation thereto.

One of the clauses of Bill C-71 provides that a judge may infer from the evidence of a police officer that there was a disturbance under section 171 of the code. That amendment is based on a Vancouver case where, quite obviously, there was a problem in adducing evidence which resulted in an acquittal. It seems silly to me for Parliament to tell a judge he can infer from the evidence of a police officer that there was a disturbance. If a judge is not aware that he can infer from the evidence that there was a disturbance, he should not be on the bench. Extending that logic, such a provision could then be added to every section of the Criminal Code. In my view, the amendment will not cure the problem that arose in the Vancouver case. That was simply a case of the wrong charge being laid.

The main problem with that amendment is that it singles out the evidence given by a police officer vis-à-vis the evidence given by any other witness, with the implicit suggestion that the evidence of a police officer is more important than that of any other witness. For that reason, we tried to have the relevant clause deleted, but without success.

Another rather silly amendment, in my view, is the clause which singles out the theft of cattle as an offence. It seems that cattle raisers wanted theft of cattle to be singled out as an offence for psychological reasons, thereby warning people that it was a very serious offence to steal cattle. Well, why not create new sections of the Criminal Code for each and every item that is the object of theft? As I say, it is a rather silly amendment. As was established in the committee, it neither increases the fine or the possible jail term. I, along with others, objected to this use of the Criminal Code, but, again, without success.

The last item I want to mention is the amendment which would take away from an appeal court the right to substitute a verdict of guilty in a case where the facts were admitted and there had been an error in law. I expressed my views on this in the committee, and will do so again on third reading of this bill.

In this case, again, the decision to amend the Criminal Code was based on the reaction to only one case, and I object to that procedure. I do not think we should throw out sections of the Criminal Code on the basis of the reaction to only one case. There are other questions involved in this which were not considered at all. Only one viewpoint was considered by the department. They did not consider the other expressions of opinion, which would have tended not only to retain that section, that right of the court of appeal, but have us reinforce the law by never permitting a jury to invade the field of law. The jury is the judge of the facts, but under no circumstances and under no pretext should we allow the jury to enter upon the field of law as opposed to fact and say, "We refuse to apply the law because we do not like the law." This is a big problem and I think it is a wrong direction that has been taken by the department.

• (1540)

In any event, I will have the occasion to discuss this matter further on third reading. I did want to give you my perspective, however, of the work done by the committee which, on the whole, was pretty good. In these circumstances, however, I think the committee should have at least done away with useless amendments and considered more seriously the very important point I have just mentioned.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I am to some extent—

Senator Flynn: You are not bound to reply.

Senator Langlois: —in agreement with what the honourable senator has just said. However, I would like to add, in connection with the first amendment that he mentioned—the amendment to clause 28—that it was brought about by the recommendation of the crown prosecutor of Vancouver, if I remember correctly.

This suggested amendment was also considered by the Criminal Law Section of the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Legislation at their meeting of August 1974. They recommended that section 310 of the Criminal Code be so amended.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition also referred to this other amendment having to do with theft of cattle. This amendment was discussed in May 1973 at a meeting of the attorneys general. There was no consensus on a solution. One province suggested that the offence should carry a minimum penalty. Other provinces suggested that the Criminal Code should be amended to make cattle theft a separate indictable offence, punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years. It was on the basis of this suggestion that the amendment was proposed.

Turning to the last comment of my friend, regarding the so-called Morgentaler amendment, this amendment was discussed in this house quite extensively. I stated then, and I repeat this afternoon, that I am in sympathy with the position taken by the honourable senator, and I added that I hoped the committee would be giving full consideration to this amendment. Such consideration was given. We spent considerable time on it.

Senator Flynn: I agree.

Senator Langlois: We had a full discussion on it. Unfortunately, the suggestion of my honourable friend was not accepted. When he says this is based on one case, he is right. However, we should not lose sight of the fact also that this one case went to the Court of Appeal of Quebec, and the Supreme Court of Canada. When I introduced this bill, I underlined to honourable senators the many qualifications and reservations contained in the majority decision and the dissenting decision of the Chief Justice. These qualifications and reservations, as I then stated, are sufficient in my mind to justify amending the Criminal Code in the way we have.

I added that if any change was going to be brought about in the application of our jury system in Canada, it is up to this Parliament, and not the courts, to do so. This amendment was brought about in proper form, and it is a proper decision for Parliament to take. I do not think anyone would challenge that. If it had not been a decision of the highest tribunal of the land, I do not think we would have been justified in so doing.

For example, in the case of the Vancouver decision, dealing with disturbances, we were not informed as to whether that decision went to appeal. However, the Morgentaler case went to the highest court in the land. Due to the reservations which were contained in the decisions of their lordships, I think there is sufficient ground for the action which has been taken. This is my point of view.

As I previously stated, the honourable senator cannot complain. He has had his day in court, both in this chamber and in committee. I sympathize with him in that he did not get his point across, but his point was well taken. It was worth the time we spent on it.

Senator Flynn: I agree with that. I am not complaining.

Senator Langlois: I am not either.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 16, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1874)

VISIT OF MEXICAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO CANADA

FEBRUARY 3 TO 11, 1976

JOINT COMMUNIQUE

Between February 3 and 11, a delegation from the Congress of Mexico, designated by the Chamber of Senators and the Chamber of Deputies, visited Canada at the invitation of the Speaker of the Senate, the Hon. Renaude Lapointe, and the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Hon. James Jerome.

This was the second official meeting between representatives of the two Parliaments, the first meeting having been held in Mexico City in January 1975. The two delegations agreed that it would be desirable to arrange that these meetings should be held in future at regular intervals.

The two delegations held discussions in Ottawa on topics of mutual interest—trade questions, air transport negotiations, industrial and regional development, foreign investment policies in the two countries, the Law of the Sea negotiations and the prospects for international acceptance of the 200-mile economic zone, energy policies in the two countries, the desirability of exchanging information in the field of energy conservation and development, and the New Economic Order and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States. The two delegations were agreed that these exchanges contributed to improved mutual understanding.

The Mexican delegation described the hope that Mexico would achieve a balance in merchandise trade with Canada, which at present is favourable to Canada. They further indicated a desire to see more of this trade being conducted directly between Canada and Mexico. The Canadian delegation, while understanding these concerns, showed special interest in an overall expansion of trade in both directions. They noted that account should be taken of recent investments by Canadian companies in joint enterprises in Mexico, a development likely to stimulate economic activity between the two countries. They also drew attention to the growing numbers of Canadian tourists visiting Mexico, where the balance is in favour of Mexico.

Mexican delegates explained the importance which Mexico attached to establishing its claim to a 200-mile economic zone ("patrimonial sea"). An amendment to the Mexican Constitution establishing Mexico's patrimonial sea had already completed passage through the Congress and through the Mexican state legislatures. The amendment remained only to be promulgated in the Official Gazette, and it would take effect 120 days following promulgation. Canadian delegates expressed understanding of the Mexican objectives, but indicated a preference for a multilateral agreement at the Law of the Sea Conference.

In the course of discussion of the New Economic Order, the Mexican delegation elaborated on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which had been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The two delegations agreed on the importance of this initiative and on the need to make progress in the development of the New Economic Order.

Mexican representatives expressed satisfaction at the recent visit of Prime Minister Trudeau to Mexico, welcoming this manifestation of Canadian interest in expanding relations between Canada and Mexico.

The two delegations were graciously received by the Governor General and Mrs. Leger. In addition, the delegation was received at luncheons offered by the Speakers of the Senate and the House of Commons.

The Mexican delegation took advantage of their visit to Ottawa to meet senior officials of government departments and to inform themselves on Canadian programmes in the fields of health and social policy, agriculture and industrial development incentives.

Prior to coming to Ottawa, the Mexican delegation visited Toronto, Quebec City and Montreal. In Toronto they were received by the Honourable Thomas Wells, Minister of Education of Ontario, and by the Honourable Russell Rowe, Speaker of the Ontario Legislature, and held discussions with officers of the Addiction Research Foundation. During their visit to Quebec City, the delegation was received by the President of the National Assembly, the Honourable Jean-Noel Lavoie, and discussed the educational system in the Province of Quebec with the Deputy Minister of the Ministry of Education. The visit to Montreal included a tour of the site for the 1976 Olympics.

On behalf of the Mexican Congress, Senator Enrique Olivares-Santana, President of the Standing Committee, extended an invitation to the Parliament of Canada to send a delegation to visit Mexico in 1977.

The Mexican delegation was lead by Senator Enrique Olivares-Santana and Mr. Guillermo Jimenez-Morales, and included the following Senators and Deputies:

SENATE:

Hon. Victor Manzanilla-Schaffer
Hon. Enrique Gonzalez-Pedrero
Hon. Louis M. Farias
Hon. Nicanor Serrane del Castillo
Hon. Ramon Angel Amante-Echeverria

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES:

Miss Margarita Garcia-Flores
Mr. Gilberto Ortiz-Medina
Mr. Octavio Ferrer-Guzman
Mr. Joaquin Canovas-Puchades
Mr. Ezequiel Rodriguez-Arcos
Mr. Geime Esteva-Silva

The Canadian delegation was headed by Senator Renaude Lapointe, Speaker of the Senate, and Mr. H. T. Herbert, M.P., and included the following Senators and Members of Parliament:

SENATE:

Hon. Jacques Flynn, P.C. (Co-Chairman)

Hon. Martial Asselin, P.C.
Hon. Maurice Lamontagne, P.C.
Hon. Joan Neiman

HOUSE OF COMMONS:

Mr. T. C. Douglas, M.P.
Mr. Jack Ellis, M.P.
Mr. Bill Jarvis, M.P.
Mr. Robert Kaplan, M.P.
Mr. Charles Lapointe, M.P.

Mr. James McGrath, M.P.
Dr. Frank Philbrook, M.P.
Mr. Douglas Roche, M.P.

For the Mexican delegation

Senator Enrique Olivares-Santana
Guillermo Jimenez-Morales

For the Canadian delegation

Senator Renaude Lapointe
H. T. Herbert, M.P.

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO NEWFOUNDLAND ON WINNING THE CANADIAN MEN'S CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, before we start today's proceedings, I wish to bring to the attention of this honourable house an event of national importance that took place in Regina last week.

Senator Bourget: It does not happen too often.

Senator Carter: It was the occasion of the annual MacDonald Brier, emblematic of the Canadian Men's Curling Championship. I am proud to report that for the first time in the history of this event, a rink from Newfoundland proved to be the best in all of Canada.

Skipped by Jack MacDuff—

Senator Flynn: Chico!

Senator Carter: —the St. John's rink ended up with a 9-2 record in the week-long bonspiel against rinks from each of the other provinces and the Northwest Territories. It is truly a national sports event.

In addition to Jack MacDuff, who was named the all-star skip, the other members of the victorious Newfoundland rink were Toby MacDonald, third; Doug Hudson, second; and Ken Templeton, lead. By winning the Brier the Newfoundland rink earned the right to represent Canada at the world championship which starts next week in Duluth, Minnesota.

I am sure that all honourable senators join with me in congratulating these young Newfoundlanders and wishing them the best of success in their endeavour to bring the world curling title back to Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I join in congratulating the Newfoundland curling rink. As a British Columbian may I just report that the British Columbia women's basketball team won the Canadian Ladies' Basketball Championship last week, which makes me think that British Columbia and Newfoundland are the two bookends holding this country together.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I too join Senator Carter in the sentiments he has expressed. I watched the final match on TV on Saturday afternoon, not because I like curling but because my wife likes it and plays it.

Senator Perrault: You had no choice.

Senator Flynn: She has the greatest admiration for Mr. MacDuff and his rink, who have proved that Newfoundland, after 27 years in Confederation, has come of age.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I too should like to congratulate the victorious MacDuff rink from Newfoundland. He is not the same "Macduff" I learned about in my early years, but he is probably a descendant.

I should also like to congratulate the winning ladies' basketball team from British Columbia. Though Newfoundland and British Columbia may be the two bookends that hold this country together, somewhere in between is a little part where the whole thing began—Prince Edward Island. And let me say here that two weeks ago in Ottawa, a rink from Prince Edward Island won the Canadian Senior Men's Curling Championship for the second straight year, and for the third time in the last ten years. I refer to Dr. Wen MacDonald and his rink from Charlottetown.

Senator Buckwold: As a representative of the host province, the site of the curling championships, I want to tell you how delighted we were that Newfoundland was able to win the coveted prize. To indicate what good hosts we were, I should tell you that Saskatchewan won only three games, which was probably the worst record we have ever had. That, I am sure, was due only to the fact that we wanted all the visitors to enjoy themselves. To my honourable friend Senator Bonnell, let me point out that the only rink that had a poorer record was the one from Prince Edward Island.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of a contract between the Government of Canada and the Municipality of Boissevain, Manitoba, for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970. (English text).

Report of the Bureau of Intellectual Property, Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, including the report, pursuant to section 27 of the Patent Act, Chapter P-4, R.S.C., 1970, of proceedings under the Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1976-387, dated February 26, 1976, amending Part II of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of the said Act, Chapter H-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of exemptions authorized by the Minister of Transport under section 134 of the Canada Shipping Act in cases where no master or officer was available with required certificate and experience, for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 134(2) of the said Act, Chapter S-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of operations under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for the year ended December 31, 1974, pursuant to section 13 of the said Act, Chapter F-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of operations under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 12(2) of the said Act, Chapter F-22, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the administration of the Small Businesses Loans Act for the year ended December 31, 1974, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, Chapter S-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of a Memorandum of Agreement made March 10, 1976, between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Quebec relating to the Anti-Inflation Program, together with copies of a Communiqué thereon issued by the Department of Finance.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I ask the honourable the Leader of the Government if he would explain why the Prime Minister accepted the resignation from the Cabinet of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs today, after having refused to accept that of the Minister of Public Works last week?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, without wishing to engage tonight in a controversy about this very important parliamentary matter it should, perhaps, be pointed out that this question is primarily of significance and importance in the other place, because ministers answerable there have been under questioning about this matter. However, may I take the opportunity to review briefly some of the events which have taken place by way of replying to Senator Flynn's question?

Senator Flynn: I have no objection. I am willing to give leave to the Leader of the Government.

Senator Langlois: He does not need leave. He is replying to your question.

Senator Flynn: Would the honourable the deputy leader wait a second?

Senator Langlois: You should be resuming your seat.

Senator Flynn: There is a rule that a question should be short, and the answer should be short also.

Senator Langlois: It all depends on the question.

Senator Flynn: If the Leader of the Government wishes to review the whole situation in answer to my question, and if as a necessary consequence there should be some kind of debate, I would have no objection to that.

Senator Langlois: It is his privilege.

Senator Flynn: But it will be the privilege of the Senate to follow him.

Senator Langlois: Raise a point of order.

Senator Flynn: That is what I did.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall not dispute the argument made that this matter is of significance to both Houses of Parliament and to the institution of Parliament. This afternoon in the other place the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Honourable André Ouellet, announced his resignation, which had been tendered and accepted earlier by the Prime Minister. In his explanation the minister pointed out that he felt that, in view of the fact that he had an appeal before the court, it was necessary for him to divest himself of his ministerial responsibilities so that he could pursue his appeal in an atmosphere removed as far as possible from the atmosphere of political disputation which has existed in this country for the past few weeks.

The Prime Minister this afternoon in the other place—some honourable senators were present for his speech, which was an excellent one, in my view, but all parties contributed to that dialogue in a very able manner—stated, in essence, that he had accepted the arguments advanced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and, consequently, his resignation.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs also made the point that he had in fact discussed his problem, the contempt of court citation, with members of Cabinet, including the Minister of Public Works. It was apparent that we felt that his conversation with the Minister of Public Works had led to that minister's making the admitted error of discussing the matter with Mr. Justice Hugessen of the Quebec Superior Court. There are those in our parliamentary system who today have continued to demand the resignation of the Honourable C. M. Drury, Minister of Public Works. Questions are being asked as to why one resignation was accepted and the other not accepted. The Prime Minister also dealt with that question this afternoon. However, those honourable members who have had an opportunity to work with Mr. Drury over the years, I am certain, regard him as one of the outstanding public servants in this country, without any question at all.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: That is not disputed.

Senator Perrault: His record of service to the people of Canada in peace and war must be brought into the judgment of the Prime Minister with respect to whether this minister should be required to resign or stays on for future service. We do know that during his entire career Mr. Drury distinguished himself with United Nations activities. He was a brigadier general in the armed forces and was awarded the DSO. He has served with distinction in business, national defence and the Department of External Affairs. In the incident in question he made a mistake; there is no question about it. The Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court described as a grave matter the fact that the Honourable C. M. Drury approached Mr. Justice Hugessen and asked whether it would be possible for Mr. Ouellet to make a formal apology and thereby bring the proceedings to an end. Yet, despite the resignation today of the Honourable André Ouellet, a number of political critics in our system are threatening to delay the business of the people in Parliament unless Mr. Drury submits once again a resignation and this time the resignation is accepted by the Prime Minister. A great many stones are being cast against Mr. Drury, who has admitted his error in judgment. You know, Reverend Stanley Knowles who is leading the offensive in the other place should, perhaps, be reminded of the biblical passage:

He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone—

Such considerations, too, are relevant when judging those in public life, or, indeed, in business or in the professions. This is what the Deschênes report tells us about Mr. Drury's conduct, as related by Mr. Justice Hugessen:

I had the impression that he was attempting, if possible, to head off a confrontation between the executive and judicial branches of government. In any event, rightly or wrongly, I did not take any action with regard to the call and dismissed it from my mind. To the extent that one can determine one's own mental processes, I am quite convinced that the call did not influence my decision one way or the other.

Mr. Justice Deschênes appends the comment:

In fact, as you know, Mr. Justice Hugessen upheld the request for a citation for contempt of court by judgment dated January 23, 1976, which judgment is now under appeal.

We have had three cases of alleged impropriety. We know that we have the word of members of the judiciary who were contacted by Messrs. Chrétien, Lalonde—when he was not a minister—and Drury. There is no mystery left. The Deschênes report, requested by the government, outlines exactly what they recall saying and exactly what the judges in question recall that they said—improprieties, yes, but illegalities, no—and these are the cases which are supposed to represent an attempt by the government and the Prime Minister to hold the country and the parliamentary system in contempt.

● (2020)

I know that fair-minded senators would find it very difficult to see in these three cases any basis for a parliamentary or constitutional crisis. From the facts which have been made known—and they are all on the record; nothing has been concealed from the people—the action of the ministers, according to the law officers of the crown, does not give rise to criminal or contempt accusations. Admittedly, in greater or lesser degree, all three ministers exercised imperfect judgment. In the case of the Honourable C. M. Drury, the Prime Minister, in effect, has stated—and I would like to reiterate it for the house—the view that balanced against his long years of service to the people of Canada in many diverse roles and functions is this error of judgment.

It is in the Prime Minister's hands whether or not resignations shall be accepted. That is standard parliamentary practice. That was the practice of the government in which the Leader of the Opposition served. It is the prerogative of the Prime Minister, and ultimately he must answer to the people of Canada.

Justice tempered with mercy has always been a facet of our parliamentary life and the rule of law under which our system has existed for these many centuries. I find it difficult in my own mind to understand the view that the Minister of Public Works should be required to resign solely because he intervened, improperly and unfortunately, on behalf of a junior Cabinet colleague who came to him for advice. But this is a matter of judgment where we all have our own attitudes. I know the official Opposition has its own views on the matter, which I respect. The demand is now continuing for a public inquiry, but that is another question and I do not want to comment on that further, because that is rather far afield from the question posed by the Leader of the Opposition.

To sum up, Mr. Drury obviously was approached by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for advice and counsel as a senior and respected minister. He went to the minister and said, "Look, I am in this difficult situation. I was under great strain after the court decision came down about the alleged sugar combine and I made some imprudent remarks. I need your advice." It was just as any younger member of Parliament or minister would go for advice to senior ministers in any administration or any government, or just as a younger senator would seek advice and guidance from older senators.

The senior minister in this case made a mistake by intervening in the wrong way. On Friday he submitted his resignation and the Prime Minister tempered justice with mercy, pointing out the humiliation suffered by the minister, the great embarrassment caused to him during perhaps the sunset years of his public career after years of service. The Prime Minister felt that this was punishment enough.

Certain honourable senators may say that the Prime Minister's action was not tough enough. Some may want "more blood" as well as "the body" along with abject humiliation. But that is not the feeling of the government, and it is not the feeling of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I want to say at the outset that the Leader of the Government has once again indulged in his practice of replying to a question with a speech. It makes it very difficult for those of us on the Opposition side to try to be governed by the rules when he makes a speech where two sentences could have explained that it was the judgment of the Prime Minister, in view of the circumstances, to accept the one and not the other. At this time I will refrain from replying to the lengthy speech made by the Leader of the Government in defence of the government. I suggest to the Leader of the Government that this is not the way to deal with the type of question I asked. The only thing that can be accomplished by a speech such as the one he just made in reply to my question is the provocation of a debate.

I will go no further this evening, but I do reserve my right to speak further on this at a future date.

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, I do not rise to discuss the merits or the circumstances of this particular case. I am wondering whether the Leader of the Government can tell us whether there are previous cases on record in Canadian parliamentary history where a minister of the Crown, who resigned for an admitted impropriety, had his resignation refused by the Prime Minister.

I know there have been cases of ministers resigning for other reasons who have had their resignations refused, but are there any previous cases of a minister's resignation being refused when that resignation was the result of an acknowledged impropriety on the part of the minister?

Senator Perrault: So that I understand the question, you are asking whether there are other instances of where a Cabinet minister resigned on the basis of an impropriety, or an alleged impropriety, and had his resignation refused?

Senator Manning: Yes.

Senator Perrault: I must take the question as notice. I simply do not have all the historical facts at hand. I will undertake to determine whether there have been other such instances.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, may I ask the government leader a question? If the resignation of the Honourable Mr. Drury was not accepted by the Prime Minister because of Mr. Drury's long and distinguished service to the people of Canada, would the government leader be able to tell us why the resignation of the Honourable Mr. Ouellet was accepted?

Senator Perrault: I attempted to answer that question earlier. Mr. Ouellet, in his statement today, cited personal reasons for his resignation, the primary one being that he has an appeal presently before the courts. He felt it was impossible for him to function effectively as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs while this very critical and crucial case was before the courts.

As Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, he was in a very highly visible political position and, for that reason, he felt he should tender his resignation pending the outcome of the court proceedings.

He did admit as well, as I indicated earlier, that he had in fact discussed his contempt of court problem with the Honourable C. M. Drury. Although there was no suggestion that he had asked Mr. Drury to approach Mr. Justice Hugessen, I understand that he felt he bore responsibility for Mr. Drury's present difficulty and, under the circumstances, should resign, and the Prime Minister accepted his resignation.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the government leader if he is really saying that it is less serious for the minister who committed the wrong to have committed it than for the minister whose conduct caused him to commit it?

Senator Perrault: That is not the purport of my remarks at all.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am asking you if it is.

Senator Perrault: That is not the purport of my remarks at all. The Prime Minister, as the Queen's first minister in Canada, simply made the decision that the punishment Mr. Drury had experienced was sufficient for the impropriety which he had committed. He did not commit an illegal act. There has been no allegation of that kind.

Senator Flynn: You cannot say that.

Senator Perrault: It was not an illegal act.

Senator Flynn: You cannot say that.

Senator Perrault: It could not be subject to any kind of court proceeding.

Senator Flynn: How do you know that?

Senator Perrault: It was not an illegal act, and your leader in the other place, the man you applauded at your convention just three weeks ago, has made no charge of illegality.

Senator Flynn: That does not mean that it was not illegal.

Senator Smith (Colchester): As a supplementary, may I ask the Leader of the Government whether he believes it is necessary for a minister to be guilty of criminal or contempt accusations before his resignation may be required or justified?

Senator Perrault: Not at all and not necessarily. Every case must be regarded on its merits. There is no question about that.

● (2030)

I recall the days when, for example, a party of another persuasion formed the Government of Canada, and we all recall with vivid memories the cases involving ministers that arose at that time, and how difficult it was subsequently to have those matters brought to public light. In this case the Prime Minister, within hours of the accusations appearing in the Globe and Mail, acted to have Chief Justice Deschênes of the Quebec Superior Court move to undertake a complete investigation. On the basis of the investigation, when it was found out that there had been no illegality—

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Perrault: Perhaps an error in judgment, an impropriety.

Senator Flynn: Oh no.

Senator Perrault:—and after Mr. Drury's apology to the courts and his apology to the House of Commons, and the considerable difficulty and inconvenience that he has experienced over recent weeks, in the view of the Prime Minister the penalties were sufficient for any wrongdoing or bad judgment of which he may have been guilty. It is just that simple.

Senator Flynn: I object to the interpretation the Leader of the Government places on Chief Justice Deschênes' report.

Senator Langlois: Let Chief Justice Deschênes object to it; not you. You are not the author of the report.

Senator Flynn: I will not try to put on it the meaning that the Leader of the Government has.

Senator Langlois: You would like to put your own meaning on it. I understand that.

Senator Flynn: I am saying that Chief Justice Deschênes was not called upon to say whether ministers contravened the Criminal Code or otherwise. He just commented on the problem of the judges. As I mentioned to the Leader of the Government last week, we did not need that report because we had the admissions of the ministers concerned about their behaviour, and action could have been taken without any report from the Chief Justice. That is the point.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there was an earnest determination on the part of the government to make certain that any action taken would be based upon fact and not on rumour or wild accusations.

Senator Flynn: Admissions.

Senator Perrault: Not calumny and not vilification.

Senator Flynn: Admissions.

Senator Perrault: This was the intention of the government. I do not think any honourable senator here would question the capacity of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court.

Senator Flynn: I am not.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Nobody is questioning it.

Senator Flynn: Try to stick to the question.

Senator Perrault: The facts he made available to the government were in turn made available to the people of Canada when that report was tabled in the House of Commons. There was no question of illegality whatsoever. Let me suggest that if honourable members of the Opposition believe that there were illegalities, one course open for them is to make formal charges on the floor of the House of Commons—

Senator Smith (Colchester): Boloney!

Senator Perrault:—against certain honourable members, and bear the full implications of this action. But that has not been done yet. Under certain circumstances, if an allegation of some substance is made by one member against another member of the other place, as honourable senators are aware, and a subsequent House inquiry finds that the member accused is innocent, then the accusing member has an obligation to resign his seat in Parliament. Significantly, no action of that kind has been taken in the other place.

Senator Langlois: For lack of courage.

Senator Flynn: I have not said anything of that kind.

Senator Smith (Colchester): The Leader of the Government, having fiddled around with such great liberty with the rules, will find less to object to if a little more fiddling is done with the rules of this house. Nobody has made the slightest suggestion that there was any element of criminality in respect of Mr. Drury, that he is a straw man erected by the Leader of the Government in order to distract attention. One of the things he said tonight, which obviously was said elsewhere, is that what Mr. Drury said was alleged to have been done in the hope of avoiding a confrontation between the Executive and the Judiciary. I ask the Leader of the Government: What is the basis for any possible belief that a confrontation was developing between the Executive and the Judiciary?

Senator Langlois: Chief Justice Deschênes report says that.

Senator Croll: Deschênes said that.

Senator Smith (Colchester): The government just said that.

Senator Perrault: I was reading from the Deschênes Report.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am asking if he is advancing that as a reason which has some relevance to resignations and non-resignations? Has he any facts which would indicate that there was any likelihood of a confrontation between the Executive and the Judiciary?

Senator Perrault: Apparently, according to Mr. Justice Hugessen's statement, this was Mr. Drury's fear as one of the senior ministers and senior public servants of Canada. He held that fear and that concern. Apparently, he wanted to be helpful in the matter of making certain that the case was disposed of as fairly as possible in a manner which would avoid confrontation.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is exactly what terrifies us. If a senior member of the government said that I did what Mr. Drury did in order to help avoid a confrontation between the Executive and the Judiciary, the people of this country, and certainly this Parliament, would be entitled to know what facts there were to support such a belief.

Senator Perrault: I have made my statement. If the honourable senator wishes to have a debate, he knows how to proceed.

Senator Smith (Colchester): And how to do it too.

Senator Flynn: More and more you are beginning to look like your predecessor.

Senator Buckwold: That is a compliment.

Senator Flynn: Maybe for him it is.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1975

MOTION FOR THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Senator Langlois moved third reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, there are some comments I should like to make about this bill, if I may have your patience and indulgence for a short time. I would draw your attention at this moment to clause 9 of the bill which reads as follows:

Section 171 of the said Act—
That is, of the Criminal Code.

—is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

(2) In the absence of other evidence, or by way of corroboration of other evidence, a summary conviction court may infer from the evidence of a peace officer relating to the conduct of a person or persons, whether ascertained or not, that a disturbance described in paragraph (1)(a) or (d) was caused or occurred.

In a moment I propose to move that this clause be deleted. However, there are some remarks I should like to make about it before doing that.

I should like especially to draw your attention to the fact that this amendment purports to give the right to a court or a judge in a summary conviction case to infer from the evidence of a peace officer relating to the conduct of a person or persons, whether ascertained or not, that a disturbance has occurred. I submit to you with considerable vigour that that is merely a repetition of what the law is. There is no reason why the evidence of a peace officer should bear any more weight in a court than the evidence of any other credible witness. Any judge hearing the evidence of the police officer may draw from it whatever inferences it merits, and there can be no need, nor, indeed, justification, for inserting in the Criminal Code of Canada—a most solemn document affecting Canadians everywhere—a useless provision of this sort.

● (2040)

Perhaps in considering whether this sort of thing should be countenanced or not, it is desirable to consider for a minute or two the reasons upon which it is said that this amendment is advanced as a proper one for Parliament to accept. I believe it is proper for me at this stage to refer to what has taken place in committee.

Senator Grosart: It is.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If it is not proper, no doubt some honourable senator will draw my attention to the fact that I am wrong to do so.

Senator Grosart: It is proper.

Senator Smith (Colchester): When inquiry was made in the committee as to why this apparently useless—and I believe not only apparently but completely useless—provision was to be inserted in this solemn document, the Criminal Code, it was said that the Crown prosecutor—I think the term used was the city prosecutor—in the city of Vancouver had reported that he found it difficult to get convictions against people who were charged with creating a disturbance. In support of this allegation, which incidentally was made three years ago, and only now is bearing fruit—pretty empty fruit, too, I think—by way of justification, a case in the Supreme Court of British Columbia was produced. That case is entitled In the Matter of Irene Eyre and a Stated Case pursuant to Section 762 of the Criminal Code of Canada, and In the Matter of Her Majesty the Queen vs. Irene Eyre.

In this case a trial was held before a magistrate, and the accused was convicted. At the request of counsel for the accused, a case was stated for the consideration of a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. As I am sure all honourable senators know, a stated case is simply a case in which the magistrate who has made his decision one way or the other is requested to report to a higher court the facts which he found in the case, and the way in which he applied the law to the facts, and then the superior court is asked whether or not the magistrate made a mistake.

The charge upon which the appellant, who was a young woman, was found guilty was that in the city of Vancouver on a certain date she did unlawfully cause a disturbance in a public place by shouting and using obscene language. I have not used all of the words of the charge, but that is the gist of it. The judge on appeal said:

The real issue is as to whether or not it was established that a disturbance was caused. It is inherent in the conviction of the accused that the learned Provincial Court Judge did determine that a disturbance had been caused; otherwise there could have been no conviction.

Then the judge on appeal goes on to state the various facts which were stated by the convicting magistrate for the consideration of the higher court. I shall not attempt to read all of them, but I will try not to omit anything which is of real importance to the question under consideration.

The first three paragraphs in the stated case dealing with the facts said that on the 23rd day of June, 1972—and I said three years ago; it is four years ago, obviously—on the 23rd day of June, 1972, members of the Vancouver City Police Force attended at a certain place, and the attention of two of the officers was drawn to the accused. In front of the premises—apparently a private dwelling house, although I am not sure about that—the police found a large party of young people assembled on the front lawn, being about 50 in number, and they also found several other police officers. The facts stated that a certain corporal saw the accused lady with approximately five other people and asked her to leave the area, saying that if she did not she would be charged. He said this approximately three times, but the accused, accompanying her refusal with some very obscene language, refused to go. There was no evidence that anybody but the policeman heard the language. The attention of the particular corporal was drawn away from the accused person while he witnessed the arrest of another accused person by other police officers. The next he saw of the accused was when she was being assisted into the police wagon.

I come now to one of the fundamental paragraphs of the stated case, and I should like to read it precisely:

(g) that Corporal Reynolds found that her words were shouted loudly and that there were eight (8) citizens standing on the north west corner of Fraser and 59th Street, people were looking out of their windows and on a house immediately to the south of the place in question there was a woman standing on her front porch and in the 7400 Block of Fraser Street there were people standing on their balconies.

With respect to paragraph (g), which I have just read, and the other paragraphs to which I referred, which purported to state the facts, the learned judge on appeal states:

On those facts all that has been established is that the appellant said to Corporal Reynolds the words indicated above.

In other words, the obscene words. And as for paragraph (g) specifically, the appeal court judge states:

—the statement there is most unhappily worded because it was not for Corporal Reynolds to find that her words were shouted loudly. If he swore that her words were shouted loudly and that there were eight citizens standing on the northwest corner of Fraser and 59th Street, it was for the learned Provincial Court Judge to determine if indeed those facts were established and that a disturbance was thus created.

But the appeal court judge says:

All that was established is that the appellant spoke abusive words to Corporal Reynolds.

There is a good deal more to the case than that, but that is the gist of it. It was up to the Crown to prove by evidence of policemen or otherwise that there was a disturbance caused by the accused person. All that the trial magistrate could say was that Corporal Reynolds found that her words were shouted loudly and that there were eight citizens standing on the corner, and so on. The appeal court judge quite properly draws attention to the fact that the magistrate did not find that the officer swore that this was the case, or that there was evidence before the magistrate on which he could find that that was the case.

In the copy of the decision which I have, these are the words used by the judge:

There was no finding that the appellant was a member of the party or that she contributed to a disturbance created by the party.

Honourable senators, there are a number of other cases referred to in that case, but please do not be afraid that I will weary you by reading all of them. However, there are one or two references I should like to make, because these other cases referred to in this particular case were adduced in argument in support of the necessity for such an amendment as we have in this bill. One of those cases is an Alberta case which took place before a district court judge named Beaumont. The case was Regina vs. Youngren. It was a short decision, and I will read most of it:

● (2050)

I am of opinion that no disturbance was created by the appellant who spoke rudely and harshly to the police officer. Admittedly, some police officers have very tender feelings, but I cannot agree that to hurt those tender feelings ipso facto creates a disturbance contra the Criminal Code...

I think that really goes to the heart of the matter in that first case. What happened was that words were spoken which were offensive. Undoubtedly they were offensive. I would hate to have them spoken to me; but the fact that the court did not find that those words constituted a disturbance in the light of the manner in which they were spoken, or in the circumstances in which they were spoken, I submit, is not a reason why the Criminal Code should be amended so as to make it easier for persons in those circumstances to be convicted. What is even worse, I suggest, is that this amendment does not do it anyway, as I said when I began.

Here is another case. This is the case of Regina vs. Goddard. It is one of those referred to in support of this alleged need for amendment. It is a case in Ontario. Here again there was an appeal from a conviction for creating a disturbance. The appeal was allowed and the conviction quashed. I am looking at the moment at the headnote. I will not weary you with the rest of the case, because I think the headnote states the nub of the whole matter. The headnote says, in part:

The disturbance must be a public disturbance and all ingredients of the offence refer to activities in public. An emotional disturbance as a result of someone else's disorderly conduct is not sufficient.

I should like to refer to still another case which has been mentioned and which is really an illustration of how the eminent lawyers who adorn the bench in Saskatchewan can make a serious question amusing and interesting and still come to the proper conclusion. This is the case of Poole vs. Tomlinson. The question here again is one of creating a disturbance in a public place by shouting, under a local bylaw. The headnote says that before a person can be found guilty of creating a disturbance by shouting in a public place, facts other than the shouting must be proved from which the court can conclude that there was a disturbance.

The learned judge deals with the facts this way:

On October 31, 1956, some 50 young citizens of Prince Albert gathered on the street in front of the police station there and shouted "We want Morgan." This choral effort evidently irritated some unappreciative functionary within that institution—or disturbed his rest—for the appellant was forthwith arrested and hustled within. In due course he was charged "that he did create a disturbance in a public place within the city of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, by shouting, contrary to the bylaws of the city of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan." Whether the appellant was selected from out the throng because of the unmusical qualities of his voice or because he did not retire with sufficient alacrity does not appear. Neither does it appear who the mysterious Morgan was or whether he was being hailed as a Caesar or sought as a tyrant.

In due course the case came on for hearing before the learned magistrate. No evidence whatsoever was offered, the prosecution and defence having agreed on the following facts:

"(1) That at the time of the alleged offence at least fifty (50) or more persons were collected on the street in front of the police station in Prince Albert, Sask.

"(2) The accused, together with fifty (50) or more others, was yelling: 'We want Morgan.'

"(3) That the accused was then arrested."

That was the evidence before the court, or rather that was what the court had to consider. There was in fact no evidence. The judge on appeal said:

With quaint Hibernian logic, counsel for the respondent [The Crown] seriously and strenuously urged that in all such cases as the present someone must have been disturbed otherwise the accused would not have been charged.

Please note that. This was seriously put forward as an argument. It was urged that the accused must have been guilty or he would not have been charged.

The judge goes on:

Unfortunately, it is not that simple. What of the voice crying in the wilderness or the supplications of the righteous shouting "Hallelujah?" The question of whether or not a disturbance resulted from the act of an accused does not depend on its impact on any particular person. He might be a crank. What is music to one may be a nightmare to another. It must first be established that what was said or done could reasonably cause a disturbance in the circumstances and, further, that it did. That is a matter for the court to decide. It is not proper to assume the result from the bare act itself. There must be some evidence from which the court could reach a conclusion of fact or draw the necessary inference that a disturbance had resulted. The gist of the offence is the disturbance.

From the scant facts before the learned magistrate the accused and his fellow choristers may have been airing their cultural needs and if that be the case it would seem a shame to stifle their melody. For as Oliver Wendell Holmes was moved to lament:

"Few can touch the magic strings

And noisy fame is glad to win them,

Alas for those who never sing

But die with all that music in them."

On the facts agreed upon and submitted, these questions must be answered in the negative.

Those are the kinds of cases which the Crown did not win, and which are advanced as proof of the necessity for this amendment. I submit, honourable senators, that there is not the slightest justification in these cases for amending the Criminal Code. All these cases do is say that the Crown must prove its case by proper evidence.

The Criminal Code is a serious matter. It governs the public conduct, and the private conduct too, for that matter, in many respects, of persons as between themselves, as against the public, and as related to the Sovereign's peace. The Criminal Code surely is not to be trifled with, and Parliament is not to be asked to lend its authority and devote its time to remedying this kind of improper, unnecessary and trifling sort of amendment.

While I readily agree that this can do no harm, because it does not change the law and does not give the court any more powers than it now has, it is time that Parliament said to the people who are charged with administering the laws of our land, and in particular the criminal laws of our land, that they are expected to do their work if they are to get convictions, and that the courts are duty bound to ensure that the evidence produced before them by the prosecution is sufficient to warrant a conviction.

There is one matter that I omitted and which I should place before the Senate now.

In the committee it was said that after objection was first raised to this amendment, telegrams were sent to all the attorneys general of Canada asking whether they were in favour of the amendment. To nobody's surprise, I am sure, telegrams came back saying that it was a good amendment. Nobody, however, asked any association of defence lawyers; nobody asked the Canadian Bar Association or indeed, any bar association in Canada, whether they thought it was a good amendment. They might very well have got a different answer if that had been done.

It was also said, and I must disclose this fact as well, that the commission on uniformity of legislation in Canada, a body which meets two or three times a year, had considered this request from the city prosecutor of Vancouver and had concurred in it. The request was brought up at either a meeting of a subcommittee or before the whole commission on the uniformity of legislation, and when the attorneys general were asked if they thought it was a good thing they said yes. I ask you to remember, however, that nobody asked anyone who was concerned with the other side of the coin.

● (2100)

Nobody has been able to explain to us, or perhaps I had better put it that nobody has been able to explain to my satisfaction, what improvement this makes in the law or why the Criminal Code should be cluttered up with useless changes or, indeed, why the time of this Parliament should be taken up with such meritless propositions.

Consequently, honourable senators, if it is in order, I move that this bill be not now read the third time but that clause 9 be deleted and the subsequent clauses renumbered accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Langlois, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, that this bill as amended be now read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester), seconded by the Honourable Senator Haig, that the bill be not now read the third time as amended but that it be further amended as follows:

Delete clause 9 and renumber the following clauses accordingly.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I do not wish to take the time of the house but I would like to endeavour to give an explanation of this amendment. As you will no doubt have noted, Senator Smith, when introducing his amendment, said that we are not changing the law. But he still takes very strong opposition to the bill, notwithstanding the fact that we are not changing the law. And all the amendment says is that "a judge may infer..." There is really no obligation on the judge to change the present position when it comes to weighing any evidence adduced before him. But he "may infer"—and that is all the amendment says. This is based on the fact—and this point has been made before us in committee—that in the past judges have refused to consider the evidence given by police officers alone, with no corroboration from members of the public outside the police force, and in this connection we have had reference by the honourable senator to the case in Vancouver and to other cases.

When this amendment was suggested, and it is true that it was suggested by the prosecutor for the city of Vancouver, the attorneys general of Canada were consulted and they were all in agreement that this amendment should be brought about. In addition, the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Law were also consulted and they also agreed that such an amendment should be made. So we are faced with this situation today: we have the recommendations of the law enforcement officers of the land, namely, the attorneys general of Canada, and the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Law in Canada who have all recommended that the change should be made. Yet the honourable senator says after that, "Why are we doing that?" Yet there is nothing at all new in the amendment; we are not changing the law and we are not changing the present situation in which judges are placed when they have to weigh the evidence adduced before them. So, why the hue and cry about this amendment if we are not changing anything? Then the honourable senator says that we are adding something cumbersome, that we are adding something to our Criminal Code which means nothing. If we are adding nothing—and that is possibly an opinion which I am ready to accept—if we are making no change, then why this hue and cry about it?

There is no obligation on a judge to act differently from the way he has been acting in the past. Judges will still have to weigh the evidence as it is presented to them.

We were also told in committee that police officers had very great difficulty in getting people, not those participating in the disturbance but principally those who were complaining about it, to come forward and make themselves known and testify against those brought before the court on this charge. It is for this reason that the attorney general and others have come to the conclusion that it is about time we reminded the courts that they should infer or take into consideration in weighing the evidence the fact that there is evidence put forward by the law-enforcement agencies of this land. I see nothing wrong in doing this. We are not in any way—and I know I am repeating this—obliging the judge to take this into consideration but we simply say that he may infer from such evidence that a disturbance was caused by so and so.

Again, I think we should accept the recommendations made to the Department of Justice by the attorneys general of Canada and the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Law in Canada, and I think this is sufficient ground and reason for supporting this amendment.

Senator Flynn: Are you speaking now of the amendment proposed by Senator Smith?

Senator Langlois: The amendment proposed in the legislation.

Senator Flynn: I thought you were supporting the amendment proposed by Senator Smith.

Senator Langlois: You are very slow tonight, my friend.

Senator Flynn: I am quicker than usual.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, I was a member of the committee considering this question and I got into an argument with Senator Smith during the hearings on this particular section. I used the same arguments used this evening by Senator Langlois. At that time I disagreed with Senator Smith 100 per cent.

The matter was brought up again the following day, and at that point the officials from the Department of Justice produced the first case to which Senator Smith referred tonight, and to say that I was astounded is to put it mildly, because that case did not support the statements made to the committee by the officials from the Department of Justice upon which I had made the arguments similar to those made by Senator Langlois. I remember leaving the committee room that day and saying to Senator Smith, and admitting it, that I was more gullible than he because I had been prepared to accept these statements from the officials. Then, when they produced the case, that case just did not back up what they had said. I can only presume that the attorneys general and the commissioners were also as gullible as I was before I examined the case relied upon by the officials. I can also only presume that the attorneys general and the commissioners did not actually examine that case. I could not be at the committee meeting where the decision on this section was made because I had to attend another committee meeting, but I must say I was absolutely astounded to find out that the section had not been struck out. As far as I am concerned I support the position of Senator Smith.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, if a non-lawyer may be permitted to intervene in this technical discussion, I must say that I was rather horrified to hear the view of this matter put forward by Senator Smith (Colchester). I was not horrified by what he said, but horrified by the facts that he related to us. I was particularly horrified by that quotation from the Saskatchewan case in which the argument was made by counsel that the accused must have been guilty or he would not have been charged. That reminded me of a story told me many years ago by R. L. Calder, the former Crown prosecutor in Montreal, who said it was the habit of the late Judge Sicotte, when an accused was brought before him and pleaded not guilty, to look down at him over his glasses, shake his head and say: "If you were not guilty you would not be here." I think this is the same sort of attitude. What worries me about this is that, however little it may in fact change the strict law, it seems to me that the insertion of this provision in the bill is a sort of guideline or hint to the judge. It does not advise him to take this view, but it does strongly suggest to him, to my mind, that he should place a very strong emphasis upon the evidence of the police officer in question. This seems to me, if we are considering the interests of the accused, which I think we ought to, like something that would lead to a miscarriage of justice. The reports read by Senator Smith of the judgments in these cases seem to be very sound and well-based. I feel very uneasy about this suggestion to the judges that they should take special account of, and lay special weight upon, the evidence of a peace officer in such matters.

• (2110)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I do not know if the amendment proposed in the motion of Senator Smith will carry. I hope that it will, but if it does not, at least it should serve as a warning to the Department of Justice not to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code of this type just on the basis of one recommendation in an endeavour to satisfy someone in Vancouver who complains that he has difficulty in obtaining a conviction under a certain section of the Criminal Code when he could obtain one if he knew enough to lay the charge under another section.

My second point is that a fault with this amendment is that if it is to be really useful it has to be inserted after every section of the Criminal Code defining an offence. The same reasoning applies to every other offence in the Criminal Code, because any constable may give evidence with respect to any offence under the code.

Finally, in my opinion it is wrong, as was mentioned by Senator Forsey, to single out the evidence of a constable as against that of any other person.

I hope that the Senate will support the amendment proposed by Senator Smith. It would certainly constitute a good warning to the Department of Justice. In any event, the record will show that at least we were not sufficiently blind as not to recognize the silliness of the proposed amendment.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, as a member of the committee, I also raised this point at some length with the officials of the Department of Justice. It is the type of provision which I consider to be highly unnecessary and, in fact, quite dangerous. I objected to it then on principle, and I must say that I still object to its thrust. In my opinion, it is highly unnecessary. I might go even further than Senator Smith and say that I think it changes the law, in that it means that there is less emphasis or onus on the police officer to prove the fact that a disturbance took place. Therefore, I believe that this is the type of amendment that simply should not be included in this legislation.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I was a member of the committee which took the opposite view. In my opinion, it is very important that we have this type of amendment—not that of Senator Smith but the amendment to the Criminal Code.

Senator Smith (Colchester): You encouraged me for a moment.

Senator Buckwold: You need a little encouragement on occasion, Senator Smith.

Senator Langlois: That is wishful thinking.

Senator Buckwold: I speak with some experience of many years as chairman of the police commission in a medium-sized city in which disturbances by hooligans, young thugs and people hanging around created some very significant problems in the community. The individuals charged in connection with those disturbances were usually not convicted because of lack of evidence. It got to the point that the police really did not want to lay charges, and in many cases the community was outraged, asking why the police force did not do something about the situation. Honourable senators, if you are really interested in law and order in our society and concerned about the fact that there is developing a disregard for the laws of this country on the part of many, you must start correcting the situation which this particular amendment to the Criminal Code is intended to correct.

Senator Flynn: No, it will not succeed.

Senator Buckwold: It will succeed in the sense that at least the police officer will have some encouragement to lay a charge, and the judge then will be able to determine whether the evidence is there. I say to honourable senators, when we consider society as it is developing today, that one of the real basic problems that has been created will be corrected by this amendment.

Senator Flynn: No such thing.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Buckwold: And it will lead, in my opinion, to significant improvement in the attitude of the public and the attitude of those who create disturbances and, perhaps more important, it will be of encouragement to police officers to do their duty. I certainly hope that Senator Smith's amendment is not carried.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Would the honourable senator permit a question arising out of his comments? I notice that he said words to the effect that the persons he had in mind could not be convicted because there was not sufficient evidence. Does he really believe that people should be convicted without sufficient evidence?

Senator Buckwold: I do not think that is really a fair question.

Senator Flynn: It is a good question.

Senator Buckwold: Certainly, I do not believe that an accused should be convicted on insufficient evidence, but surely it should be possible to have a police officer give evidence that would be considered by the judge, something that has not been done—

Senator Grosart: No, no.

Senator Buckwold: That has not been the case up to the present time in many instances. My honourable opponents find this very amusing; it is one of the funny things that have been said, but that is the way the law reads, the way it has been interpreted, and that is why the attorneys general of all provinces, without any exception, have supported this type of improvement to the Criminal Code.

Senator Flynn: Encouragement to the police officers, you say.

Hon. Allister Grosart: I am amazed at the statement we have just heard, which does not seem to have very much to do with the stated effect of this amendment. I do not believe anyone has said that the purpose of the amendment before us is to encourage police officers to lay charges. This is a completely new concept, and one that I had not heard before in all the discussions, including those in committee, which I have read. I am disturbed, however, by what I have heard. Although I am not a lawyer, it seems to me that the intention here is to give greater credence in this particular case to the evidence of one citizen as against the evidence that might be given by another citizen. In other words, the intention appears to be to have the effect of giving greater credibility to the evidence of a police officer as against the evidence—perhaps contra evidence—of just as good and just as worthy a lay citizen. I would ask the sponsor of the bill if that is the intent? I cannot ask him to interpret the proposition, but I can ask him, as sponsor of the bill, if it is the intention to give greater weight to the evidence of the police officer as against that of another citizen?

• (2120)

Senator Flynn: In this particular case.

Senator Grosart: In this particular case—in the case of a disturbance.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, my answer to that question is in the negative, because, as Senator Smith has said, we are not changing anything in the law.

Senator Flynn: Then why?

Senator Langlois: Why? Because we have been asked to do so by the attorneys general of Canada. The attorneys general were consulted and they made representations to the Department of Justice. In my opinion, whenever such representations are made they should be listened to and taken into consideration. At any rate, the judges are left with the discretion to weigh the evidence as it is placed before them. It is not a question of weighing the evidence of a police officer against the evidence of another witness. It is in cases where there is no corroboration of the evidence of the police officer that the judge may infer that an offence was committed by the person who is brought before the court. The judge is left with the sole discretion, on the weight of the evidence, one way or the other. There is no change in that respect.

Senator Grosart: If, as the learned sponsor of the bill says, the effect is not to give greater credence to the evidence of the police officer, then what is it intended to do? What is the purpose of it?

Senator Langlois: I have already replied to that. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition did not listen to what I said. The only consequence of this amendment is that judges who have been reluctant, or who have refused, to take into consideration the uncorroborated evidence of police officers are reminded that they may infer from the evidence that an offence has been committed. Our information is that complainants are ready to file complaints about disturbances, but are reluctant to come forward and testify because they are afraid of those youngsters who are prone to create disturbances.

The only result of this amendment is that from now on a judge may—and I emphasize the word “may”—infer from the evidence of the police officer that a disturbance has been caused. If the judge does not believe the police officer and has reason to doubt his word, in his weighing of the evidence he is free at any time to put it aside.

Senator Grosart: I am grateful to the Deputy Leader of the Government, because I think I am now getting closer to an answer to my question. I believe he has said that the intent is to remind the judge of the law of evidence. Is that correct?

Senator Langlois: That is not what I said. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition did not understand what I said. He can read it tomorrow, when he may better understand it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): May I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government a question arising out of his earlier reply to Senator Grosart? As I understood him, he was making the argument that since the Attorney General of Canada wanted this change, therefore we had to agree to it.

Senator Langlois: I said that we should listen to the attorneys general of Canada.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Is he really advocating the position that because the Attorney General of Canada asked Parliament to do something, we must accept his wish?

Senator Langlois: Would the honourable senator repeat his question? Someone was speaking to me and I did not hear the question.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I will repeat my question. I thought I understood the Deputy Leader of the Government to say, in an earlier answer to Senator Grosart, something to the effect that the Attorney General of Canada wanted this amendment and consequently we should accept it. I asked the Deputy Leader of the Government whether he meant to put forward the proposition that if the Attorney General of Canada wanted Parliament to do something, we should accept his wish and do it.

Senator Langlois: My honourable friend used to be the Attorney General of a province, Minister of Justice, or something very close to it. I would reply to his question by asking what he would have thought if, after having made a recommendation to the Minister of Justice in the federal government, he had been totally ignored?

Senator Flynn: By Parliament?

Senator Langlois: No, by the government, which is proposing the present amendment. I said the government had a duty to consider it. I did not say that the government had to accept it. I said that consideration should be given to a recommendation unanimously passed by the attorneys general of Canada, and supported by the Conference of Commissioners on Uniformity of Law in Canada. I would not like to be in the position of a Minister of Justice who puts aside a recommendation of that kind.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I shall be glad to reply to the question of the Deputy Leader of the Government. When those kinds of propositions were put to me, I did my best to see that they were backed up by good sound reason and good sound law. Obviously, no one did that in this case.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT TO AMENDMENT

Hon. Frederick William Rowe: I have listened with interest, as I am sure have all honourable senators, to this argument. I am a little disturbed that we have here, on both sides of the house, some very eminent lawyers, some of the best legal minds in Canada, who are in dispute on this matter.

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Langlois: Lawyers are trained to disagree.

Senator Rowe: As I listened to the debate, I found myself utterly confused. I have heard eminent lawyers, such as the Deputy Leader of the Government, make one statement, and another of our colleagues make another. If it is in order, Madam Speaker, I would like to move an amendment to the amendment.

I move, seconded by Senator Norrie, that the motion in amendment be not now adopted but that the bill be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for further consideration.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Langlois, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, that this bill as amended be now read the third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester), seconded by the Honourable Senator Haig, that the bill be not now read the third time as amended but that it be further amended as follows:

Delete clause 9 and renumber the following clauses accordingly.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Rowe, seconded by the Honourable Senator Norrie, that the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester), seconded by the Honourable Senator Haig, be not now adopted but that the bill be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for further consideration.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment to the amendment say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against, please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

VISIT OF MEXICAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO CANADA

DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Inquiry of Senator Flynn:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the visit of a Mexican Parliamentary delegation to Canada from 3rd to 11th February, 1976.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I said the other night that I did not intend to speak since I was given permission to have the joint communiqué of the two delegations, Mexican and Canadian, printed as an appendix to Hansard of last Thursday. If no one else wishes to speak, Your Honour can declare that the debate has been concluded.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no honourable senator wishes to speak on this inquiry, the inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the Orders are called, may I have leave of the Senate to call attention to the fact that this is the seventeenth of March.

Senator Perrault: At least you know the date, anyway.

Senator Grosart: This is the day of the patron saint of all Ireland, who brought the enlightenment of the western world first, of course, to Scotland, where it was not understood, and then to England, where it was not appreciated and was rejected. I say this as a Protestant Irishman, of course.

My excuse for rising at this time is that as far as I know there are only two members of the Canadian Parliament who were born in Ireland. One, of course, is our distinguished colleague, Senator Andy Thompson, who was born in Ulster, although I am not quite sure whether that qualifies him. I am the other, having been born many years ago, of course, in the city of Dublin, of which the poet said:

Och, Dublin City, there is no doubtin',
Bates every city upon the say;
For 'tis the capital of the finest nation,
Wid charmin' pisintry on a fruitful sod,
Fightin' like divils for conciliation,
An' hatin' each other for the love of God.

That was written in 1826, and is recorded by Lady Morgan in her memoirs. The indication is, as we all know, that there has not been much change in the basic nature of those of us who were born in Ireland and claim Irish blood in our veins.

Having said that, honourable senators, I am sure you will all be interested to know that there is one whom we would all wish to be with us on this day and I refer, of course, to Senator Michael Grattan O'Leary. Unfortunately he is not with us; in fact he is very ill. But he has asked me to bring to his colleagues here his greetings on this particular day when he would so much love to be with us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is not possible for me to match the "blood eloquence" of Senator Grosart on this auspicious occasion. All of us have appreciated his remarks. Ireland, of course, is known as the land of saints and scholars, and certainly in Canada the Irish are also known as the race of politicians. Canadians of Irish descent have made a remarkable and proportionately higher contribution to the political life of this country than many other people. I cannot claim to have any Irish blood, but my good wife has some. But on behalf of all those of Irish descent on the government side, and those government supporters who today wish they were of Irish descent, may I join the honourable senator in the sentiments which he has expressed in observing this very great occasion. May I, as well, thank Senator Grosart for transmitting to all of us the greeting which he has received from Senator Grattan O'Leary. With that welcome message goes, in return, every good wish to Senator O'Leary from all of us.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on the operations of the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 12 of the said Act, Chapter 39 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Asselin be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester) on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Belisle be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator O'Leary on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

SESSIONS OF PARLIAMENT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM—QUESTION AND ANSWER

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I put a question to the Leader of the Government? As we have not had a Throne Speech since September 30, 1974, would the leader please tell us if the government has in fact abandoned the practice of holding approximately one session of Parliament per annum? Also, has this government abandoned the time-honoured tradition of periodically informing Parliament and the Canadian people of its legislative program for the proximate and more remote future?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I wish to give the assurance that the government has not abandoned the traditional practice of introducing from time to time general government plans and proposals in the form of a Speech from the Throne. The matter of the timing of the next Speech from the Throne is under consideration at all times.

Senator Flynn: Is it because the government has not been able to arrange or define its direction?

Senator Perrault: The government has never been afflicted by that problem, although the Opposition at times suffers from it.

Senator Flynn: In my opinion the people of Canada have had a feeling that this is the case.

TRANSPORTATION

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILROAD SERVICES IN NEWFOUNDLAND—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on March 10 the Honourable Senator Duggan asked the following questions with respect to the Canadian National Railways:

Will the leader please ascertain from the Ministry of Transport if the Canadian National Railways has sought, or is contemplating seeking, permission to increase CNR bus passenger fares in Newfoundland, and if so, to what extent?

Is it correct to assume that the government will not favourably consider payment of any deficit incurred by bus passenger service in Newfoundland as it would do if the deficit were incurred by a passenger train service, as it does in all other parts of Canada?

Did Canadian National Railways seek the advice and authority of the government prior to converting the passenger train service to a so-called passenger bus service and, if so, what advice did the government give Canadian National Railways, and also what authority in this respect?

The information which has been received from the Ministry of Transport is as follows: The CNR faced with rapidly declining patronage due to completion of the trans-Canada highway between Port aux Basques and St. John's, applied to the Canadian Transport Commission in September 1967 to upgrade its passenger service by substituting improved bus service for its rail service. Following public hearings which considered economic and service factors, the CN was granted permission to discontinue its rail passenger service for those points that could be better served by bus service on the trans-Canada highway as long as the requirement for passenger service continued.

With respect to deficit payments for the bus service, a recent Supreme Court decision ruled that the Railway Act permitted subsidy payments for railways passenger equipment only and that the CN Roadcruiser service was ineligible. It also ruled that the provincial government had jurisdiction to approve bus fares.

Accordingly, CN has applied recently to the province for permission to increase fares to offset rising costs as their fares have remained basically unchanged since inauguration of the bus service.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—MAINTENANCE COST SUBSIDIES FOR NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—QUESTION

Senator Bonnell: Would the Leader of the Government permit a supplementary question? Would he ascertain whether it is the intention of the Government of Canada to grant maintenance cost subsidies to the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, where rail service has been discontinued, in order to help pay for the extra maintenance costs of the trans-Canada highway in those two provinces, where there is always heavy transport of freight in potatoes and other commodities over our roads? As such transportation is now causing destruction to our roads, the cost of road maintenance will be greater, and I believe the CNR, through the federal government, should pay a greater share of the upkeep and repair of those roads.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is very likely that an inquiry has already gone forward from the Premier of Prince Edward Island to the Government of Canada. However, I will take the question as notice and will endeavour to obtain the replies which have been requested.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL, 1975

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate of the motion of Senator Langlois for third reading of Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, following the very interesting debate last night on the amendment moved by Senator Smith (Colchester), I wish to deal now with section 75 of Bill C-71, which has been referred to by some as the Morgentaler amendment.

My first concern is whether this appellation is still justified. Honourable senators will recall that the occasion for this amendment—I dare not say the cause—was the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada to uphold a decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal, where a verdict of guilty was substituted for a verdict of acquittal in an abortion case. It was the first time—and this was confirmed in committee—that the Quebec Court of Appeal, or any other court of appeal in Canada, had used this provision of the Criminal Code, which gives the right to an appeal court to substitute a verdict of guilty for a verdict of acquittal when there has been an error in law.

I would point out that an error in law is an error made by the judge in instructing the jury, or in conducting the trial. If the facts are admitted—in other words, if it is quite obvious that the facts have proven the guilt of the accused, the ordering of a new trial would not normally bring any decision other than a verdict of guilty.

On the basis of this particular case, which provoked outcries from the defenders at all costs of the jury and from those who are of the opinion that abortion should be granted on demand, the Minister of Justice decided that we should remove from the courts of appeal—I use the word “courts,” because it includes both the last court of appeal in the provinces and the Supreme Court of Canada—the right to substitute a verdict of guilty for a verdict of acquittal when the facts are admitted and there is obvious guilt. It is for this reason that it has been referred to as the Morgentaler amendment.

The amendment in question was originally proposed by the former Minister of Justice, the Honourable Otto Lang. He did not seem to have his heart in it, however, and that was probably one of the reasons behind the cabinet shuffle which saw Mr. Lang moved to Transport and Mr. Basford to Justice.

● (1420)

There was a second appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada involving Morgentaler, and the decision in that case was handed down two days ago. That decision rejected the petition of the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec for leave to appeal a decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal, which had sustained the verdict of acquittal arrived at by the lower court.

In the first Morgentaler case, the question was whether the accused could rely specifically on section 45 of the Criminal Code, which states that one must use reasonable care in performing a surgical operation. Other than in the first instance, where the judge said that such a defence should be considered, the courts were unanimous in the view that no one performing an abortion could rely on section 45. In the first case there was no factual defence of necessity. The Court of Appeal for the Province of Quebec, therefore, and the Supreme Court of Canada, did not decide whether the defence of necessity was available.

In the second case there was evidence offered in connection with a defence of necessity. Although the trial judge in the second case, in his instructions to the jury, suggested that this defence was not available, a verdict of acquittal was rendered. The Quebec Court of Appeal said that the defence of necessity was available. The judge writing the note in the appeal court said that the defence of necessity would have been available in the first case if there had been any evidence. But I suggest to you that this was not the tenor of the first decision. Also, it was only an obiter dictum. There was no evidence offered in that regard in the first case. The matter of the defence of necessity was only raised in the course of argument.

In any event, the Quebec Court of Appeal, in dealing with the second case, said that the defence of necessity is available, and the Supreme Court of Canada, in its decision of two days ago, rejected the petition of the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec for leave to appeal that decision. Implicit in the Supreme Court of Canada decision is the fact that, insofar as an abortion is concerned, a doctor can offer the defence of necessity. In other words, if an individual can convince a doctor that she will become very depressed and suicidal if an abortion is not performed, the doctor would then be in a position to raise the defence of necessity. That is the result of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision of two days ago.

[Senator Flynn.]

The amendments made to the abortion laws in 1969 seemed to offer, if not a wide-open door, at least a half-open door to any medical doctor visited at his office by a patient saying, “I am completely depressed. I want to be aborted. You have to do it, otherwise I am going to kill myself, or I am going to become ill or insane.” That is a problem we have to deal with in other ways.

The reason I put these facts before you, honourable senators, is to demonstrate the effects of the Morgentaler cases, No. 1 and No. 2. Incidentally, the Morgentaler case No. 1 is not yet completed because, as you know, a new trial has been ordered. What will result from this new trial is conjecture, but after the decision of the Supreme Court, we can easily guess. These cases are entirely irrelevant now. The amendment proposed in clause 75 of Bill C-71 says that a court of appeal, which includes the Supreme Court of Canada, will not from now on be able to do anything but order a new trial if there is an error in law, when all the facts are admitted and the guilt of the accused is obvious and cannot be disputed.

If this were the only problem, I do not think we would worry too much. However, the point I tried to make on second reading and in committee was that this occasion drew attention to a problem which is much more important than that of abortion, or of the decision in the Morgentaler case No. 1. Under the present law we are, as far as jurisprudence is concerned, giving the last word to the jury, not only in matters of fact but also in matters of law. As I have said before, I have no objection to the jury's having the last word in a matter of fact, but I have the strongest objection to a jury's having the last word in a matter of law.

The Minister of Justice appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on March 10, last Wednesday. I asked the minister at that time to justify the amendment, the deletion of this power of a court of appeal to substitute a verdict of guilty for a verdict of acquittal. As you know, the appeal court has the right to change a verdict of guilty to a verdict of acquittal. The appeal court has the right to say that the jury was wrong in fact when it convicted this person, and proceed to acquit that person without even ordering a new trial. When I asked the minister why he would delete this power of the court, which has been used only once in 36 years, he quoted from Trial by Jury by Sir Patrick Devlin, as he then was, who became Lord Chief Justice of England. He quoted at length, but I do not think I am distorting the opinion of the Chief Justice by quoting only the last part of the quotation made by the Honourable Mr. Basford. Mr. Justice Devlin says, and I quote:

● (1430)

Wherever there is a trial by jury, the condemnation must be by a judgment which is both lawful and a judgment of the country. If his countrymen condemn a man and they exceed the law, he shall go free—

That is what I said. If the jury is wrong, the court of appeal will correct the situation.

—if the law condemns him and nevertheless his countrymen acquit, he shall go free.

That is the end of the quotation of Sir Patrick Devlin. I am now quoting from the comments of the Honourable Mr. Basford:

That is the basis of the amendment as proposed.

I wish you would accept that, and I repeat Mr. Basford's statement:

That is the basis of the amendment as proposed.

And also Sir Patrick Devlin's statement:

If the law condemns him and nevertheless his countrymen acquit, he shall go free.

My first comment would be that if his countrymen acquit him, maybe; but a jury is not his countrymen. That might be the case in the old sense of the word, but it cannot be under present conditions. One jury is not representative of the whole population of Canada. I suggest to you that if a jury does that, then you will have one law in a given area of this country and another law somewhere else. You know that very well.

I am not referring to the abortion case, I am thinking of something else at this time. However, even if you were to consider the opinions, as far as abortion is concerned, you would come to the same conclusion. Where there is a divergence of opinion among the public as to whether or not certain acts should be considered crimes, you may have a jury in one area condemning someone and in another area acquitting him for the same act.

I ask you, is this fair? Are we going to accept the argument of the Minister of Justice when he says that this is the end of it, that his countrymen—12 of them, and sometimes only two of them, have a definite opinion among the group—will decide whether they will or will not apply the law? That is exactly what he says:

If the law condemns him and nevertheless his countrymen acquit, he shall go free.

Are we to accept that this situation is proper today?

Senator Croll: The judges do the same thing. Two different judges may give you two different verdicts, so what is the difference?

Senator Flynn: There is the appeal court to correct that, whereas here we have no appeal court. This is the very point I am making. Senator Croll is helping me with my argument.

Senator Croll: I am not trying to.

Senator Flynn: No, I am sure you're not trying—not trying to understand, that is. But you can be trying.

The appeal court may correct the error of a judge. But the appeal court may only correct an error in law and not one in fact made by a jury. What if somebody were to murder the Prime Minister today and say, "My defence is that I am rendering a service to the public," and the jury says, "Yes, you are right?"—

Senator Lamontagne: You have to find a jury for that.

Senator Flynn: You would be surprised, or maybe you have a short memory. My friend Senator Lamontagne is not able to transpose the example I am giving to some other cases, but he should be able to do that.

I say to honourable senators who respect and revere the jury system that the best way to destroy it is to give the jury the power to decide in matters of law as well as fact, to have the final word whether it is a question of fact or a question of law. That will surely end up destroying the jury. I suggest here that the minister, on the basis of this simple argument that the jury should have the last word even in a matter of law, is moving in the wrong direction. I suggest to you that the problem is not confined to the unique occasion of this Morgentaler decision; it involves the whole jury system and the question of whether we are giving the jury too much power in matters of law.

I have said before and I repeat again that I detest the idea that we should amend the Criminal Code on the basis of only one case. In this situation, as I have tried to explain to you before, the case has become irrelevant because of the decision handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada two days ago. It is no longer relevant.

We are moving in the direction of giving more power to the jury in matters of law, whereas we should be making sure that the jury is limited and restricted in its purposes and jurisdiction to matters of fact. Obviously, this amendment has come about as a result of outcries in the popular press. When the Minister of Justice was asked why he made the amendment, he gave his reasons, and I have told you what they were. But it also appears that the government was influenced by these people who claimed that the jury system was in danger. In my opinion the system will be in real danger if the jury is given too much power, if it is not restricted to its proper role, which is the weighing of the facts only in a case.

I will never accept the idea that a jury can change the law of the country. That is up to Parliament. Honourable senators who believe they have something to say in matters of legislation must, I submit, accept my proposal that the last word should never be given to the jury in a matter of law.

My argument, therefore, is that in this particular case, instead of reacting to the outcries of the most vociferous of those expressing opinions, the minister should have referred the whole question of the jury system to the Law Reform Commission of Canada. Mind you, there were numerous expressions of opinion in the press and elsewhere which were opposed to this amendment, but they were not listened to at all. I have many clippings indicating that this amendment is taking us in the wrong direction.

Senator Croll: Did the Law Reform Commission wish to have this matter sent to it?

Senator Flynn: When I asked the minister why he did not send the matter to the commission, he answered, "It already has too much work to do and we don't need it." But in my opinion it should go to the commission, and that is my suggestion. As I say, other opinions have been expressed. Indeed, all the judges I have talked to—

Senator Croll: Oh, you talked to judges, did you?

Senator Perrault: Oh! Oh!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, Oh!

Senator Flynn: I was really expecting that reaction. I am not naïve enough to have supposed that there would not be such a reaction, but the difference is that I know when it is proper to talk to a judge and when it is improper to do so. I can speak to a judge about anything except a case which is pending before him.

Senator Croll: This is pending, is it not?

Senator Flynn: No, a final decision of the Supreme Court has been handed down, and, in any event, I was not talking of the Morgentaler case at all.

Senator Croll: Don't get too serious.

Senator Flynn: I am being serious, because, although occasionally I do not mind your trying to divert me, I do object to your trying to divert the attention of your colleagues from the main point I am attempting to make now. I have talked to many judges who exercise their functions in the field of criminal law, and they all recognize that there is a problem, not connected with any case actually before them but with regard to cases that they have heard before.

● (1440)

I want to make myself clear. I have not mentioned any specific case. I asked the Minister of Justice whether he had consulted the Judiciary, and he started out with the same kind of remark that you just made, Senator Croll, with the object, of course, of trying to divert attention from the subject; but this is one case where he could communicate with the judge. He should know that he can do that, and he should know when he may not do that. He should have consulted the Judiciary about this matter.

The Judiciary are all concerned with this problem, because there have very often been cases where not all 12 of the jury, but perhaps only two of them, have a personal opinion on a certain matter, and will not render a verdict of guilty, even though the facts are admitted. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that this problem is more important than the problem which gave rise to the amendment that was put by the Minister of Justice.

I ask you, honourable senators: What should we do? I suggest to you that we should simply delete this clause of the bill. There is no technical problem with regard to that. The government side is always concerned with the problem of making an amendment, and with what is going to happen in the other place as a result. Let me remind you that we have already made 13 amendments to the bill, and it has to go back there in any case, but if we were to delete this clause the other place would at least have to consider our views. If they do not like the amendment, they can resist it, but we will have brought to the attention of the public the fact that the Senate is not a slave to public opinion as we find it generally expressed in the popular media. I would say that those who favoured this amendment were more vociferous than the rest, but I suggest that they do not represent a majority.

We should delete this clause, as I say, and have the Minister of Justice and the government refer this matter to the Law Reform Commission, which should study in depth the jury system as we know it, and compare today's needs in this regard with the needs of 600 or 700 years ago, at the time of Magna Carta. At that time, of course, the jury was needed to protect the individual from abuse by the Executive, which then controlled the Judiciary. This, however, is not the case today. Today, if there are occasional interventions they are considered breaches of ethics and the matter is usually corrected, but interventions of today are not in the same category as those of centuries past, as Senator Croll will readily recognize. This, however, is not the problem. Let the Law Reform Commission examine the jury system in the light of today's needs and report on it.

[Senator Croll.]

If we adopt this amendment we will, to my mind, be going in precisely the wrong direction by confirming the power of a jury to change the law, or to refuse to apply the law. This is something that the Minister of Justice admitted himself.

I therefore ask you, honourable senators, to follow my suggestion. I consider that this is an appropriate occasion for this body to do something about a problem which I consider to be an important matter of principle. If we act incorrectly now our actions may have extremely serious repercussions in the future. If we adopt this amendment it will be very much more difficult for us to correct abuses by juries in the future. There should be a warning given against going in the direction taken by the Department of Justice and the Minister of Justice by saying, "Leave the law as it is."

If this amendment is adopted at this time it will correct nothing, not even the Morgentaler case, especially in view of the decision which was made two days ago. Let us keep the law as it is and examine it in depth. If we come to the conclusion that the solution lies in an amendment of this type, then perhaps at that time we could accept it. At present, however, we are responding to public reaction, reacting to one single case which has now become irrelevant, and that is the wrong thing to do.

The Senate is here to say, "Stop, look and listen." I am quite sure that no harm would result from the deletion of this section. Only good can come of it, especially if it were accompanied by an examination in depth of the whole jury system.

Senator Croll: Would the honourable senator allow me to ask one question?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Croll: Would you disagree with the statement that in 99 cases out of a hundred a man charged with a criminal offence would rather be tried by a judge and jury than by a judge without a jury?

Senator Flynn: I do not disagree with that. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. I am not arguing against the jury system. I am simply saying that juries should be confined to the jurisdiction that belongs to them, namely, the facts. The suggestion of Senator Croll is entirely wrong. It tends only to confuse the issue. He is trying to blur my argument by saying what he has just said. I am not against the jury system, I repeat, and if you would like me to repeat it a hundred times, I will. If you tell me, however, that you are not worried about a jury's being able to refuse to convict despite the fact that the evidence is undisputed that a crime has been committed, and in effect say, "We do not care what the law is, we are going to acquit this man just the same," then all I can say in reply is that it worries me a great deal, and I think it should worry the rest of you.

I therefore move, seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-71 be not now read the third time, as amended, but that it be further amended by deleting clause 75 thereof and renumbering the following clauses accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Langlois, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, that this bill be now read a third time.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald, that bill C-71 be now read the third time, as amended, but that it be further amended by deleting clause 75 thereof and renumbering the following clauses accordingly.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, it is not very often that I disagree with my friend Senator Flynn on what we conceive to be a matter of principle. In this case, however, I do.

We have discussed this matter in committee. I listened with great attention to the arguments that Senator Flynn put forward then, as I have listened to him today, and I still do not fear the consequences of this amendment. I think that the rights of each person in Canada are fully protected. My feeling is that we are not taking away from the courts of appeal the right to adjudicate finally on any matter where a jury has rendered a verdict which may be wrong in law or in fact. The essential part of this amendment is that the court of appeal can and will order a new trial. I cannot conceive of any occasion on which a court of appeal in Canada would look at a judgment of a lower court or a jury and, where it saw there were obvious flaws and mistakes in the jury's concept of what the law was, not order a new trial. I think this is our protection above all.

● (1450)

As I pointed out to Senator Flynn before, I have great faith in the jury system, as he has, but I realize that people who compose juries and, indeed, judges themselves, are capable of making errors. However, I think all the protection we require is in this section as it stands. Therefore, in this case it is very important, if a jury makes a finding, that that finding should stand unless the court of appeal finds it has made an error in law. In such a circumstance I am absolutely confident that the court of appeal would send the case back for a new trial. I think this is exactly what this section demands.

Senator Flynn: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Under the present provision the only factor which would allow the court of appeal or the Supreme Court to order a new trial is an error in law committed by the judge. The court of appeal will not intervene if the error in law was made by the jury.

Senator Neiman: The court of appeal will intervene by ordering a new trial.

Senator Flynn: No, they cannot.

Senator Croll: The judge too.

Senator Flynn: No. They cannot.

Senator Neiman: It is a plain order in subparagraph (i).

Senator Flynn: Cite me one case.

Senator Neiman: Well, according to your own statement, Senator Flynn, we know that the Morgentaler case was the first time a court of appeal has entered a verdict of guilty. I have heard of hundreds of cases in my years of practising law—and I am not a criminal lawyer—and it is quite common practice for the court of appeal, when it does not approve of a verdict, to send the case back for a new trial. This is done time and time again, and will continue to be done.

Senator Flynn: In those cases there was an error in law made by the judge, but if there were no error in law made by the judge and the facts were admitted the court of appeal then could not intervene.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I wish to speak very briefly to the amendment. I should like to begin by saying that I find myself in a very unhappy position indeed in being forced to disagree with our able and charming colleague who has just spoken, but on this occasion it seems to me that the matter is of such importance, and I feel so strongly about it from a point of view different from hers, that I must try to overcome that reluctance to disagree with her and voice a few comments in support of the amendment.

I do so, not as one who is opposed to the jury system, but as one who is its great admirer, and as one who has faced a great many juries with varying success. If I may I will just take a moment to ask you all to think of the importance of the jury system, and, as I know many honourable senators have done, to think of yourselves and your client standing alone, charged with a serious offence, faced with all of the resources at the disposal of the state, and nothing to ensure that justice is done but the law, the judge, the jury and the strength of your own case and your ability to present it. And since many of you have been through that sort of experience I know you will agree with me when I say that the jury system is one of the bulwarks and, indeed, at one time was, and may still be, one of the chief bulwarks of our system of life in society and of our liberties.

So, honourable senators, when I speak in support of this amendment, I do so, not as one who has any doubts about the jury system in any essential way, but as one who believes in it firmly, and as one who also knows that juries, like every other human institution, can make errors. I think we have passed the time in the evolution of our society when we can accept the continued making of the same error in contravention of the same law as necessary to protect our freedoms and our liberties.

Senator Neiman said—and I do not take any issue with her on this—that if there is a mistake in law made by a jury in a criminal case the court of appeal can order a new trial. It may be that when the new trial is held before a new jury, with that new jury receiving different directions from the judge, the error in law will not be repeated. But what guarantee is there of that? Juries, like you and me—perhaps I should just confine this to myself—can be wrong not only once, but can be wrong again and again in a case which involves strong emotions or strong beliefs centered on some particular fact or feature of life. So, what guarantee is there in the law now, the case having been sent back for a new trial, that the new jury will not do exactly the same as the first one did? And, if the feeling is strong enough, perhaps it will happen a third time. The passing of this amendment in the bill before us would take away from the courts the right to remedy that situation and ensure that the law, despite deliberate perversity, is after all capable of being enforced.

It is said, and it was said by the Minister of Justice in committee, that this law which the bill seeks to repeal has been in force for nearly 40 years, and has only been used once, and therefore it cannot be any good. Well, honourable senators, there are a number of fallacies in that argument. The first one is that it fails to recognize the fact that the very existence of a law which forbids something, or which gives the power to do something, may be a very salutary instrument in preserving law, decency and justice.

How many trials for treason have there been in Canada within your memory, honourable senators? How many? Does anybody advocate that that section of the Criminal Code which imposes a penalty for treason should be repealed because it has not been used for a long time, or not very often? To me the fact that it has not been used very often is no argument at all for repealing it and, indeed, may be a very good argument for feeling there is absolutely no necessity for repealing it. I feel too that the presenting of the amendment proposed in the bill is simply a quick reaction to an emotional situation about which many people felt strongly, and still do feel strongly, I have no doubt.

● (1500)

That is not the way in which to go about making carefully considered and useful changes in our law. Legislators, surely, when dealing with a matter as serious as the Criminal Code of Canada, a document as solemnly enacted as the Criminal Code of Canada, should not respond to every storm of criticism which happens to arise with respect to a case in connection with which there are strong emotions involving, perhaps, a considerable number of people disagreeing with others. Surely the Criminal Code is to be amended after careful study, after deliberate study, at a time sufficiently removed from any emotional circumstances. We could then, at least, have the best possible hope that the result would not be influenced by emotion, but that careful judgment and sober thought—so far as this chamber goes, I do not believe it would be wrong to use the expression “sober second thought”—would prevail.

Consequently, I support the amendment moved by my leader, and I invite all other honourable senators to do the same.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion in amendment please say “yea”?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion in amendment please say “nay”?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion the “nays” have it.

Senator Flynn: The “nays”, yes.

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

The Hon. the Speaker: I declare the motion in amendment lost.

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

The Hon. the Speaker: On division?

Senator Flynn: On strong division.

Senator Croll: On weak division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion for the third reading of the bill, as amended?

Senator Flynn: I do not think we should have amended this bill at all. I cannot see how you can accept the amendments made in committee.

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed, on division.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 11, the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Keith Laird: Honourable senators, it seemed to me at one stage that there must be a conspiracy to keep me from speaking. I recall to your memories that last night, after some unexpected problems arose in this Chamber and we had that momentary pause, I did threaten to punish some of you by making you listen to me. However, there seemed to be something happening at the other end of the hall in which you were all interested, so I relented and, therefore, stood this order until today.

I take an opposite point of view from that of the sponsor of this bill, Senator Davey, who knows much more than I with respect to mass media, for which I must admit I have a certain amount of diffidence. However, in spite of the subject matter of the bill, the root of the problem goes so much deeper, and is of such great concern in our relations with the United States of America, that I have no alternative but to indicate that I simply cannot vote for Bill C-58 in its present form. I must say that while it is tempting to think in terms of voting against it on second reading—because, in general, second reading is taken to be acceptance of a bill in principle—I do think that in these circumstances I would be justified in not taking any step to frustrate the bill's being considered in committee.

Senator Flynn: There is no danger. Even if you vote against it on second reading, it will be referred to committee.

Senator Laird: In any event, regardless of that, I certainly wish to make it plain that I desire the bill to be referred to committee. Let me put it this way to my friend, Senator Flynn: If we reduce this bill to a skeleton, perhaps we can put on some different kind of flesh, with which I might go along.

I am fortified in that stand—and this is a new point, which has not been made by any of the previous speakers, all of whom have been excellent—by a problem which could arise, and that is the constitutionality of any amendment we might make in this house to a tax bill. I certainly do not intend to go into that in detail, because I am sure it will be considered fully in committee. In any event, that does form a very good reason for my now saying that in no way will I frustrate the reference of this bill to committee, because in my opinion it should be so considered. In fact, I happen to know that, in contemplation of this, various organizations have been invited to appear before the committee to give evidence. Naturally, the broadcasters and Maclean-Hunter have been invited.

By the way, just pausing at that point, some indications have been given in the speeches made so far that this is really a contest to a certain degree between Maclean's magazine and Time magazine. I must admit that I cannot see it that way at all. Frankly, I like Maclean's magazine, and read it. I read it in both the English and French editions, because usually the material is substantially different one from the other. I like it and, in my opinion, it is a good magazine. However, it is certainly not the kind of publication that Life was putting out. However—

Some Hon. Senators: Time.

Senator Laird: I am sorry; Time. But when I am speaking about Time, let me make this frightfully plain, that I have absolutely no brief for Time magazine, especially since they blithely assumed that this bill had passed Parliament. Like blazes it has passed Parliament; it is now in the Senate, and it is a long way from passing Parliament. I have no special brief for them, neither do I have any possible argument in favour of giving Reader's Digest and Time special treatment.

I am, I must admit, concerned by the deep implications involved in the broadcasting provisions of Bill C-58. In no way do I intend to repeat the excellent speech made on that aspect by Senator van Roggen. By the way, if you did not hear him or have not read his speech, I recommend that you take time to do so. It is an extremely good speech, well researched, and it deals with the full implications of these broadcasting provisions. You see, the thing that really concerns me greatly with respect to this bill is that it is simply another irritant thrown at the United States of America.

● (1510)

We are doing one thing after another to annoy that great country, that country which is our best friend, our biggest trading customer, the country on which we are almost entirely dependent for defence against foreign aggression—and this at a time when there never was a more interdependent world. What we are doing, with measures like Bill C-58, is moving back in the direction of isolation. What a time to pick for doing that!

As I have said, those who have spoken previously on this subject have stolen practically all my thunder in respect of details. All that I really intend to do today is to emphasize one aspect, which is that I do not like the addition of another irritant to the United States.

We are constantly doing this. I cannot go over the whole list but, for example, many honourable senators know the reaction to such legislation as the Foreign Investment Review Act. I admit that the Foreign Investment Review Agency has done an excellent job and a fair job, but nevertheless it is something very hard to explain to the Americans. Why must they take the chance, if they are going to buy something, of getting a favourable decision from the Foreign Investment Review Agency? Why must they go through all that rigmarole and perhaps be turned down? That is one thing.

I noticed in yesterday's Globe and Mail—this is not within our jurisdiction—an article dealing with potash. It appeared in the business section of yesterday's issue, and the first paragraph reads:

The U.S. Senate, by an unrecorded voice vote, has adopted a resolution expressing concern over the proposed nationalization of part of Saskatchewan's potash industry.

There are so many other things. We in Ottawa are perhaps not responsible for a number of them. As an example, I point to the greatly increased land transfer tax on the purchase of property in Ontario by a non-resident. There are so many examples that I could keep going. It is just one irritant after another. The funny part of it is—I found this out from personal experience—that if we take an independent stand on some big issue like insisting on not breaking off relations with Cuba, I find that they do squawk at the beginning but eventually they understand our point of view.

We are constantly throwing irritants at the Americans and, I tell honourable senators, they are reaching the point where they are getting downright angry. In saying that, I do not speak academically or from an ivory tower. I am speaking from very practical experience. I have spoken to dozens, perhaps hundreds, of Americans about these problems, and in the last couple of months I deliberately accepted a couple of speaking engagements where the format was a speech followed by a question period. I spoke to two important and influential groups. One was the Senior Businessmen's Club at Grosse Pointe, which is a suburb of Detroit, and the other was the Rotary Club in Fort Myers, Florida. Honourable senators will understand the great personal sacrifice on my part in speaking there in January. In each case the format was a speech followed by questions.

There is no doubt in my mind about the attitude of the American people. I obtained some clippings, which unfortunately I did not bring with me, of articles written by American newspaper columnists who were, in fact, almost vindictive in their abuse of us and who listed various irritants. Such views were expressed, for example, by the American ambassador. Honourable senators may recall his comments. I do not remember how he expressed it, but he hit the nail on the head. They were realistic comments on how the United States feels about us.

During the weekend I read the Sunday edition of the Detroit Free Press, which is one of the most friendly, one might almost say pro-Canadian, publications, being so close to our border. Here is what that newspaper had to say about this particular bill:

A bad taste has been left all 'round in the magazine dispute, and it's not likely to go away with the shifting of advertising revenue to Maclean's, the Canadian newsmagazine, and other purely domestic publications.

It is not even certain that this will occur. Whatever the competitive outcome, Canadian readers will be denied a magazine edition that for 33 years has been an important source of information and entertainment.

Surely that was not the intent of the O'Leary Commission that was established in 1960 to suggest ways of halting the decline of Canadian periodicals. It would be ironic if the pursuit of that commendable goal should restrict, rather than expand, the reading choices available to the Canadian public.

That is the attitude of a very moderate publication.

I continue to stress—because previous speakers have covered other aspects so thoroughly and in detail—that we cannot keep throwing these irritants at the American people and not expect a very violent reaction. We know what is going to happen. We are going to twist the elephant's tail once too often, and the elephant will turn around and use one of its tusks on a sensitive portion of our anatomy as we are running away. That is what will happen.

I therefore appeal to honourable senators to consider Bill C-58 in its wider implications and not just the material contained in it, even though, particularly in the broadcasting aspect, it is bad enough. This sort of thing, in combination with other irritants, is going right to the root of our relations with the United States, and we simply cannot afford to be on other than good terms with a country which, as I have said, is our best friend, our best customer, and our only real protection against foreign invasion. We just simply cannot afford to do that sort of thing.

Senator McElman: Would the honourable senator not agree that the purport of the editorial that he quoted from the Detroit newspaper was based on a wrong premise, in that it suggests that the choice of magazines which Canadians have would be reduced?

Senator Laird: I believe they did misunderstand the situation. The honourable senator will recall my saying that I did not consider this a contest between Maclean's and Time, as they seemed to think it was, because the magazines are quite different and are not really competing. I think they failed to understand that when they made their comment about Maclean's magazine.

Senator McElman: The purport of the editorial seemed to be that Time would be available only in the United States and not in Canada.

Senator Laird: I suppose it might be so construed. Time will be available in Canada, but I am informed that where formerly it's price was something like $18 a year, it has now been decided that for Canadians the price will go up to $30. I am speaking from hearsay. The honourable senator can check that for himself.

Senator Robichaud: It is a fact.

Senator Laird: Senator Robichaud says it is a fact.

• (1520)

Senator McElman: That fact does not affect its availability in Canada.

Senator Laird: If you want to pay the price, you can get it, just as you can get a great many other things if you are willing to pay the price.

Senator Smith (Colchester): You cannot get the Canadian content, though.

[Senator Laird.]

On motion of Senator Lafond, for Senator Lang, debate adjourned.

STATUTE LAW (VETERANS AND RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 11, the debate on the motion of Senator Carter for second reading of Bill C-86, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, little remains to be said after Senator Carter's excellent presentation of this bill and explanation as to the purport of the proposed amendments. As you are all aware, Senator Carter has been a great friend of the veteran for many years, but it might surprise you to learn that he is a veteran of both World War I and World War II. How he ever got into the Royal Newfoundland Regiment at age 15 is beyond me, but apparently he did.

Bill C-86, if enacted, will amend two acts of Parliament relating to life insurance for war veterans—the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act. The proposed amendments will, I know, receive sympathetic support in this chamber, as does all legislation concerning war veterans.

The acts in question have been of great importance to veterans, though it is surprising, perhaps, that their provisions have not been more widely used. Their purpose, of course, was to allow veterans who were unable to meet the medical standards set by commercial insurance companies to obtain life insurance coverage.

It is interesting to recall some of the statistics given us by the sponsor of the bill. As he mentioned, approximately 48,000 policies under the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act were issued between 1920 and 1933, representing a face value of just under $109 million. However, some 18,000 of those policies have been settled by way of death claims, with about the same number having been surrendered for cash value, and some 9,000 were terminated for other reasons. It is good to know that just over 2,500 of these policyholders are still surviving, all of them now being over 70 years of age. The average age, in fact, is 82. Perhaps there is something in the old saying that old soldiers never die; they simply fade away.

It is also interesting to note that under the Veterans Insurance Act, which applies to veterans of World War II and the Korean War, some 56,000 contracts were entered into between 1944 and 1968, with a face value of $185 million. Just over 9,000 of these contracts have already been settled by way of death claims, and 4,200 were terminated for other reasons. Nineteen thousand policies still remain in force, with a face value of about $60 million.

It is somewhat disturbing to note that for some reason or other, 23,500 of these policies have been surrendered for cash value. This seems to be a high proportion. I only hope they were surrendered because it was to the advantage of the policyholders and not because of economic necessity.

Honourable senators, I realize I have not been discussing the amendments contained in this bill, and I ask your indulgence to make one further observation before doing so.

Quite often, legislation dealing with veterans is considered to be social legislation; indeed, it is sometimes considered as welfare legislation. During the course of debate on this bill in the other place, it was at least implied that this was some kind of social legislation. To my mind, it is wholly wrong to consider such legislation as social or welfare legislation, although it may, of course, deal with the social needs of veterans. I do not believe legislation which confers benefits of one kind or another on veterans should be considered as a gift from a grateful country or, in any sense, a welfare scheme. I believe such benefits are payments due from Canada for extraordinary services rendered at its request by these veterans of World War I, World War II and the Korean War. These men and women were asked to make an extraordinary contribution, a sacrifice, if you wish, not normally asked by one's country, and those who answered that call, those who made that extraordinary contribution and, indeed, those who suffered as a result of wartime service, deserve payment—extra payment, if it can be so called.

I think of all legislation relating to war veterans which confers benefits or payments for services rendered, not as social legislation or social benefits, which are or could be available to other Canadians, but simply as compensation for services rendered, which services, in many cases, resulted in permanent disability to those who served.

Honourable senators, Bill C-86 provides for a change in the manner of insurance settlements as policies mature through death. This is a worthwhile provision, and one to which there seems to be no objection. It also provides that the so-called common-law spouse, designated by the veteran as his or her beneficiary, may be paid the proceeds of the policy in two circumstances, the first of which is where the couple had resided together and had represented themselves as man and wife for a period of at least three years immediately prior to the death of the veteran, and where marriage was prohibited on account of a previous marriage. I would not expect, in light of the fairly wide grounds for divorce available, that a great many would require that provision. However, there may well be cases where the couple did not marry for reasons other than being barred from so doing by a previous marriage. The bill does not deal with that aspect.

The provision I have just dealt with has caused some concern as it is felt that it might create an injustice insofar as the legal spouse is concerned. This, I feel, is a legitimate concern, although the bill does offer some protection in that regard.

The second circumstance under which the proceeds of the policy may be paid to the so-called common-law wife is where the couple had resided together and publicly represented themselves as man and wife, where there was no bar to marriage, for one year immediately preceding the death of the policyholder.

I do not know why the period is one year under this provision and three years under the other. I would have expected the time periods to be reversed, or both made three years so as to prevent any benefit under these policies from accruing to the common-law spouse in a temporary relationship, although that same provision, I know, can be found in various other pieces of legislation.

I mentioned the concern that one of the provisions of this bill could result in an injustice to a legal spouse; that by doing away with one injustice we may be creating another. However, I think there is at least some protection for the legal spouse in the authority the bill gives to the minister. The minister must be satisfied about the circumstances, and must direct that the beneficiary named be considered the spouse of the deceased veteran.

● (1530)

Our Ministers of Veterans Affairs have all been men of high character and high quality, and we have also been fortunate in the high quality of the people in the Department of Veterans Affairs who have administered these acts. Given this situation, I think the chance of an injustice being done to the legal spouse is remote, so I believe we can in good conscience support the bill.

I do not think it is necessary to give this bill a more detailed examination in committee, as I believe the remarks of the sponsor, Senator Carter, and of myself have made the situation clear.

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Carter speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I rise merely to thank Senator Macdonald for his splendid contribution to this debate, and also for his very kind references to myself. I endorse fully the statement he made that this is not social legislation, and should not be considered as such. I am grateful to him for saying he does not think we need refer this bill to committee. The ranks of the veterans covered under the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act are getting thinner every day, and I think it advisable to pass the legislation at the earliest possible date.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Croll: Now.

Senator Flynn: It might as well be at the next sitting. The bill cannot get royal assent today.

Senator Carter moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REGULATIONS RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS— MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, February 25, the debate on the motion of Senator Laird for the adoption of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, which was presented on February 24.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

● (1540)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté: Honourable senators, I would like to specify at the beginning of my speech that my comments on the report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration are in no way meant to be an attack against the members of that committee who do an excellent job, but this time they had to tackle a difficult motion.

In addition I would like you to believe that even if my remarks seem rather harsh to some people, they are not made to ridicule the recommendations included in the report, but rather to make a constructive contribution.

Honourable senators, those comments will be brief although the report of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration suggesting rules entitled: "Regulations of the Senate respecting attendance of Senators at sittings of the Senate and deductions to be made from the sessional allowance" has given rise in me to all kinds of thoughts. I come to the specific point of my disagreement, which is paragraph 2 of the report published in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, on Tuesday, February 24, 1976, which seems to reflect on our pride as senators. I quote:

Your Committee recommends that a Senator, when certifying his or her absences from sittings of the Senate for reasons of public or official business include in such certifications the nature of the public or official business, and the date and location where such public or official business was performed.

I find that the proposal to certify the nature and the location and other details when a senator is absent from a sitting of the Senate for reasons of official or public business, is unworthy of the confidence that should be given to members of the Senate.

It is not normal that a committee on internal economy, because it is bi-partisan in its composition, in the present situation, should be made aware of the nature, the location and the date of functions pertinent to public business of senators. Besides casting serious aspersions on their credibility, this proposal risks seriously jeopardizing the confidentiality of some representations and under an administrative pretext, questions the ethics of the members of the Senate. If politics worry some senators, they should hardly be sitting in their place in the Senate, next to the other place, in a building where it is practically the only thing being dealt with. That being said, since we accept that senators can be absent on public business, according to the definition given by Mr. E. R. Hopkins, former Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel to the Senate, the business of the House should not be held up by finicky rules, and that the extra senatorial responsibilities performed in spite of fatigue and tension inherent in such responsibilities should not be tempered with.

I do not agree at all, I repeat, with the establishment of this little "home court" which, officially, would serve as a censor but which, practically, as Senator Laird admitted during the sitting of February 25, would in fact function under an official.

I might now, if you permit me, draw a parallel between the manner in which the matter of attendance is dealt with here in the Senate and the manner in which it is dealt with in the other place.

In the other place, first of all, attendance is not taken in the very chamber of the House of Commons, whereas here it is taken at the entrance to the Senate, not only by a clerk of the Senate, as we could imagine, but indeed by two officers. I am not sure whether there are not also some in the galleries. The list of senators in attendance is found on the front page of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate the following day, whereas it is not published for the other place, for the good reason that it is not registered. The only exception is at the time of a vote; the names are then published in the House of Commons Debates.

Let us now deal with absences. The reasons which can warrant absence are the same in both houses, under sections 37 (1) and (2) and 38 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, except that here in the Senate, when someone says he or she is ill, his or her word is not quite sufficient a physician's certificate must be secured. Woe unto the senator who is ill for more than three days and who takes care of himself without a physician's help, he will be penalized.

Let us now come to absences for "public business". Here in the Senate, if we are absent for the above-mentioned reason, we must send, for each day of absence, a letter to the Clerk of the Senate telling him we had to take leave for reasons of "public business". In the other place, there is no need to report such absences, either orally or in writing.

Now the committee says it is not satisfied with the terms of the present rules and wants to force senators to state "the nature, the date and location" of the public or official business. One does not have to be a genius to notice that the House of Commons, in its internal regulations, has obviously more respect for its members than the Senate has for its. Well, if we are to keep registering attendance in the Senate, let us keep doing it, since it is the tradition. But, in spite of all the precautions to obtain attendance, participation in the debates is not necessarily better. Indeed it suffices to go beyond the bar of the Senate to be recognized and have one's name, as I said before, on the front page of the Senate Minutes. I may be exaggerating a bit but one could almost in the same dash go out again through the door one has just entered and still have respected the letter of the law. Who knows, perhaps we should expect that some day a time clock will be installed at the entrance to the Senate to check arrivals and departures, coupled with close supervision to make sure that no senator—would one dare—punches the card of a friendly colleague?

All things considered, the lack of confidence could go further. Has it not occurred to the committee that the senator who claims to have attended such and such a meeting, an interview or a "public function" may have somewhat glossed the truth? He should then be required to come back with a note attesting to his presence, as we used to do at college with the confession ticket. The circle of mistrust would then be complete.

In the other place, the only proof required when a member has been absent, because of sickness, official business or "public function", is that he should fill in a form indicating the number of days he was away and sign it.

With your permission, I shall table a copy of this form so that my colleagues can read it and see if the form used in the House of Commons would not be suitable for the Senate.

To conclude my remarks, because of the suspicion which transpires in this way of dealing with the matter of the absence of senators—which is a tricky situation, I admit, because of the administration of the proposed rule which appears inapplicable in view of the lack of discretion of the procedure—I disagree with the recommendations of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. I, for one, shall not abide by these requirements.

For these reasons, in view of the fact that the report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, to which was referred the subject matter of a motion containing proposed regulations entitled "Regulations of the Senate respecting attendance of senators at sittings of the Senate and deductions to be made from the sessional allowance", which was submitted for approval of the Senate on Tuesday, February 24, 1976, is obviously in conflict with the freedom of action which should preside at official functions and "public affairs", I intend to move an amendment requiring that the report be amended so as to satisfy both the honour and the freedom of action of senators.

Therefore I move, seconded by Senator Robichaud, that:

The report of the said committee be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the committee with instructions to study the possibility of modifying the formula proposed in the report to record and control the absences of senators and of adopting a procedure similar to that of the other House in this regard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Laird, seconded by Senator Petten, moved that the report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration be adopted and, in amendment, Senator Côté, seconded by Senator Robichaud, moved that:

The report be not now adopted but that it be referred back to the committee with instructions to study the possibility of modifying the formula proposed in the report to record and control the absences of senators and of adopting a procedure similar to that of the other place in this regard.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

[English]

On motion of Senator Robichaud, debate on the motion, in amendment, adjourned.

SCIENCE POLICY

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, I remind the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Science Policy that we will meet now instead of the original time of 3.30 p.m.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 18, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Oberle and Darling had been substituted for those of Messrs. Macquarrie and Bawden on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED—FIRST READING

Senator Molgat presented Bill S-33, respecting United Grain Growers Limited.

Bill read first time.

Senator Molgat moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Senator McIlraith, for Senator Deschatelets, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the National Capital Region, presented the following report:

Thursday, March 18, 1976

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on the National Capital Region has the honour to present its second report, as follows:

Your committee recommends that it be authorized to retain the services of advisers and such additional professional, stenographic and clerical staff as is required during the committee's consideration and review of matters bearing upon the development of the National Capital Region.

Respectfully submitted,

Jean-Paul Deschatelets,
Joint Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(e), I move that this report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the house has heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, the reason for asking that special consideration be given to this report is that the committee plans to meet on Monday. Since the Senate does not meet until Monday night and the committee hopes to discuss plans for retaining the advisers and various types of professional and other assistance enumerated in the report, I would ask for the indulgence of the Senate in this connection.

Senator Flynn: I understand that this is only in connection with a meeting to discuss the retaining of staff. Of course, if the Senate is to share in the expenditures, the committee would have to submit a budget for the approval of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Senator McIlraith: Yes, that is correct. The request is only to enable the committee to discuss the matter with a view to preparing a budget which, of course, will be submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Perrault, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Austin and Lafond be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move, seconded by Senator Lafond, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, March 22, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the motion is put, I should like to give the usual short summary of what we can expect for the coming week.

First, in the area of committees, in moving the adjournment until Monday evening we have taken into consideration the volume of work facing our committees and the necessity of devoting Tuesday mornings and afternoons to committee work.

On Tuesday morning the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet at 10 a.m. on the subject matter of Bill C-83 an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 2.30 p.m. to continue its examination of Canada's relations with the United States. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will meet at 3.30 p.m. to deal with supplementary estimates (B), and the Special Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has called a meeting for 8.30 in the evening.

On Wednesday the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. If Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, has been referred, the committee will commence its consideration of the bill on Wednesday morning; otherwise the committee will continue its examination of Canadian textile problems. The Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet on Wednesday when the Senate rises. That should be at approximately 3.30 in the afternoon.

On Thursday there will be another meeting of the Foreign Affairs Committee, at 9.30 a.m., on Canada-United States relations. It is also expected that there will be a meeting of the Special Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments on Thursday, but this has not been confirmed.

In the Senate, we will continue with the second reading debate on Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, and the other items on the Order Paper, and deal with such legislation as may come to us from the other place.

Senator Flynn: Would the Leader of the Government dare say what we may expect from the other place in the way of other legislation?

Senator Perrault: In reply to the Leader of the Opposition, I must say that the attitude of the Opposition in the other place will largely determine the legislation which may be coming to us.

Senator Flynn: That is a clear answer.

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted to add to what the government leader has said, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is meeting at 10 a.m. and also at 2.30 p.m. on Tuesday.

• (1410)

Senator Flynn: You are becoming a slave-driver.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government if it is the intention to adjourn the Senate on Wednesday, or any other day, at approximately 3.30 p.m., to avoid the situation which has developed on the last two Wednesdays when, as I indicated previously, a large number of senior civil servants were sitting around waiting for the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy to get under way. Is it the intention to set 3.30 on Wednesday afternoons as a fairly definite adjournment time?

Senator Perrault: That is a subject of serious consideration and discussion at the present time. It is hoped that Senator Bourget, and his associates, who have assumed some of the responsibility for coordinating committee activities, can meet next week with all committee chairmen. I hope to have a more precise answer to your question after that meeting. I am pleased to report that as a result of the cooperation between the opposition and government forces—

Senator Grosart: As usual.

Senator Perrault:—and under the leadership of Senators Bourget and Cook, as well as representatives of the opposition, notably Senator Macdonald, we are in the process of developing a schedule which should avoid many of the difficulties with which we have been confronted in the past.

Senator Everett: I would hope, honourable senators, that the government leader, in light of the proposed new schedule for sittings of the Senate, would give consideration to causing Wednesdays to be a committee day, and not have the Senate sit at all on Wednesdays.

Senator Perrault: That suggestion will be given serious consideration. There are caucus obligations on Wednesdays, however, on the part of both opposition and government forces which many senators would like to fulfill, totally apart from their other activities.

Senator Everett: I do not know if that was intended to be an answer to my question. I am suggesting that if Wednesdays were set aside as a committee day rather than a sitting day for the Senate, bearing in mind that caucus obligations only extend until noon, the afternoons could be totally devoted to committee work.

Senator Grosart suggested that the Senate might adjourn at 3.30 p.m. on Wednesdays, so that committees can sit. I question whether that would be satisfactory. The fact is that once the Senate sits at 2 p.m., you cannot be sure when it will adjourn. It may adjourn at 3.30 o'clock; it may not adjourn until 5 o'clock. For that reason, there is a lot to be said—and I feel the government should give this serious consideration—for having the Senate adjourn on Tuesdays to sit again on Thursdays, with Wednesdays then being available for committee sittings. I can assure the Leader of the Government, on the basis of committee sittings as opposed to the work in this chamber, that Wednesdays would be fully utilized.

Senator Perrault: Your suggestion will be given serious consideration.

Senator Grosart: May I ask a supplementary of the Leader of the Government? If as leader you were to move the adjournment of the Senate at or about 3.30 p.m. on any day, would you anticipate any difficulty in having that motion passed by the Senate?

Senator Perrault: It would be presumptuous of me to attempt to read the minds of honourable senators.

Senator Everett: I might say, if Senator Grosart were speaking, the whole issue might be in question.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I merely want to say that if it were by order of the Senate that the Senate should sit from 2 o'clock to 3 o'clock, or 3.30, on Wednesdays, that order would prevail.

Senator Grosart: Of course it would.

Senator Flynn: Assuming there was such an order, there would be no difficulty in the Senate's adjourning at that time. I would much rather the Senate sit at least for an hour on Wednesdays than not sit at all, following which we could carry on with our committee work.

Senator Perrault: I want to assure the house that both proposals will be considered at the meeting next week, at which time we will be in a much better position to discuss the matter more fully.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I understood from what Senator Goldenberg said a moment ago that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will be sitting on Tuesday afternoon. I also understood the Leader of the Government to say that the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will also be sitting on Tuesday afternoon. I wonder if anyone can answer this question. When the decision was taken in respect of those two committees, did one committee know that the other was going to sit simultaneously? It was my understanding that one reason why we extended our sittings to sit on Monday evening was so that we would not have a major duplication of committee sittings.

At present the Foreign Affairs Committee is engaged in some very important considerations, which I believe is also true of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, of which Senator Goldenberg is chairman. Is there no way that we can avoid having these two committees sitting at the same hour? I am sure there must be some honourable senators who are members of both committees, and I think it is most regrettable that, in spite of extending our Senate sittings to Monday evening, we still have continued duplication of committee sittings.

Senator Bourget: That is what we are now looking into. We are trying to arrange to have one committee sit at, say, 9.30 a.m. and the other at 10.30 a.m. so that Opposition senators, particularly, of whom there are so few, could at least attend one committee for an hour and then go on to the other committee. That is what I am working on with Senator Cook. As the Leader of the Government just said, next week there will be a meeting of all committee chairmen, when these sorts of questions will be discussed. The suggestion of Senator Rowe will certainly be examined at that time.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, without belabouring the point, may I say that while I appreciate the disability under which the Opposition in this chamber labours in this regard—and it is to their credit that they make such valiant efforts to discharge their responsibilities as committee members—it is also a frustrating experience for members on our side as well, who are members of and interested and concerned in the activities of two committees, to find that simultaneously with the sitting of one the other is holding an important hearing as well. We cannot attend both. In addition to giving consideration to the predicament of the Opposition, serious consideration should also be given to the frustration experienced by all members of the Senate who are members of two or more committees when they find that two or three of them are sitting simultaneously.

Senator Bourget: Senator Rowe's point is well taken. I again assure him that we will look into it so as to prevent a conflict for members of our side of the house as well. We will discuss that next week.

Senator Flynn: I am quite sure you will discuss it, but I am also quite sure that you will not find an answer. I would say to Senator Rowe that if he is a member of two committees and they happen to sit at the same time, the only solution is to give up one, or both.

Senator Bourget: As I said, we could help solve the problem by having one committee sit at, say, 9 a.m. or 9.30 a.m. and the other at 10.30 a.m., which would enable members to attend the first for at least one hour before going to the other.

Senator Flynn: A token appearance.

Senator Bourget: We could discuss this all afternoon, but I think we should leave the matter until our meeting next week.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in view of the difficulty we have experienced in the past, I am sure that all of us understand that this committee is faced with acquiring the wisdom of Solomon in the matter of providing solutions to some of the time problems which exist here. I can report that in preliminary conversations with honourable senators good progress is being made, and I hope we can have at least most of the solution next week.

Senator Flynn: I hope they don't cut the baby in two.

• (1420)

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, since we are discussing the sitting hours of the Senate, it might be an appropriate time to ask the Leader of the Government if it is the intention of Parliament to recess on Wednesday afternoon of Holy Week. I realize this can only be a tentative plan, but it would enable some of us to make tentative arrangements to spend Easter with our families.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, bearing in mind the essential point that public interest must come first, it is hoped that the Senate will be in a position to adjourn for the Easter recess on April 14 or 15. This will also be the tentative adjournment date in the other place. The lively events of recent days in the other place suggest that that schedule could be altered.

Senator Flynn: That is no threat.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARIES

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF MEDIUM SECURITY PRISON IN SAINT JOHN—QUESTION

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I direct a question to the Leader of the Government. What is the intention of the government with respect to the construction of a medium security penitentiary off the Martinon bypass in the city of Saint John?

Contrary to the wishes of a member of Parliament for the area, who is reflecting public opinion, and contrary to the appointed member of this house, who also endeavours to reflect public opinion, it would seem in the light of the recent statement by the Solicitor General that, irrespective of public opinion, it is a foregone conclusion that this medium security prison is going to be constructed in an area which has been designed for future housing development in the city of Saint John.

I consider this a very serious matter and I question the motives of the government, through the Solicitor General, in proceeding with a decision of this nature contrary to public opinion and the public interest.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the government is, of course, ever mindful of public attitudes in those areas where it is anticipated there will be a need for security establishments. Be that as it may, and because I have received no specific information from the office of the Solicitor General regarding plans for the area, I must take the question as notice, and hopefully I will have a reply next week.

STATUTE LAW (VETERANS AND RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE) AMENDMENT BILL, 1976 THIRD READING

Senator Carter moved third reading of Bill C-86, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REGULATIONS RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS— MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Laird for the adoption of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, which was presented on February 24, and on the motion in amendment thereto of Senator Côté, which was made yesterday.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I am highly impressed with the attendance in the Senate at present. It is really excellent for a Thursday afternoon.

Senator Denis: It is because you had to speak.

Senator Robichaud: If I agreed to second the motion in amendment made by my friend, Senator Côté, it was not because we are either seat-mates or friends, but because I completely agreed the arguments he put forward on his motion.

Senator Denis: When did he do that?

Senator Robichaud: Yesterday.

Senator Denis: I had forgotten.

Senator Flynn: What a misplaced question.

Senator Robichaud: I have said before, and I now repeat, that I believe in this institution, and I believe in the people of whom this institution is composed. When they were summoned to the Senate they were not summoned because of an inferior background; they were brought here because of their integrity and because it was believed they could make a contribution to Canadian society.

I believe in the integrity of all the members of this house, regardless of their political affiliation. If they had not been summoned here because of their integrity I would perhaps hesitate to do so, but that is not the case. However, this body has itself proposed a rule that would, I suggest, call into question the integrity of its members, and this I cannot accept.

The subject of this proposed rule is public and official business that would justify the absence of a senator. I do not feel that a senator who had the qualifications he was expected to possess before he came here, and who does possess those qualifications, should have to answer to any official of the Senate, or to any committee of the Senate, as to the nature of the official or public business upon which he has been engaged on any particular day, or for a certain number of days of any particular month.

I think there ought to be a certain discipline within our ranks, and I think there is such discipline, but I do not think it should be as rigid as this proposed rule would require. Neither do I think it should be as rigid as the kind of discipline I had to go through when I was in elementary school where, if I wanted to go to the toilet, I had to raise one finger; if I needed a drink of water, I had to raise two fingers; and if I wanted to change desks to ask a friend of mine in the same class for certain information, I had to raise three fingers.

Senator McIlraith: Did you ever get your signals crossed?

Senator Robichaud: That is what I had to do in those days, but I do not think we should be submitted to a similar type of regulation here. We should have confidence and faith in the membership of this house. I do not think that every time senators are absent on official or public business they should have to report the nature of the business or what happened while they were attending to it.

Are we getting to the point where, if a senator attends a convention in Winnipeg, Vancouver, Moncton or Sussex, he or she must report what meeting he or she attended, and state what hotel he or she stayed in? I do not believe in that. I believe in the integrity of senators. They should only have to report that their absence was caused by public or official business elsewhere, and that should be sufficient.

● (1430)

Having said that, honourable senators, I come back to the matter of the 21 days' absence, because if this motion in amendment is adopted I hope this matter will be considered by the committee. Twenty-one days' absence—that is meaningful in a way, but in the present circumstances it is meaningless. It is too strict. This session commenced in 1974. In 1976 we are still in the same session, and we still have only 21 days on which we can be absent without justification of some kind. I do not think that is fair. I think the committee should look into this matter, and I think further that the committee should extend this period of 21 days.

Furthermore, according to the report that was submitted to this house by our colleague, Senator Laird, on February 24, we have to report the reasons for, and other details connected with, our absence. But who is going to determine the validity of those reasons, honourable senators? Is it going to be an official of the Senate? Is it going to be a committee of the Senate? Then, what happens if the official refuses to accept the reasons given by the senator and the matter comes before the committee, and the committee again questions the integrity of the senator? Has the senator come before the committee to justify his absence and to tell them, "I attended such-and-such a meeting; I stayed at such-and-such a hotel; I was on official business"? Really, I think this is stupid. I heard the word "ridiculous" used, but I say this is stupid. I believe in the integrity of the members of this house. I am not going to deny the fact that there is a percentage of senators who do not attend to their duties, but I will add that there is a much larger percentage of senators who do attend to their duties and I do not think their integrity should be questioned. I am speaking now of the majority of the people who are here today, and who will be here next Monday evening.

I want at this point, honourable senators, to come back just for a moment to the matter of committee meetings. It has already been discussed this afternoon, and everybody had a valid argument. I do not think it is quite a tragedy, but I do think it is completely unfair that some honourable senators should be called upon to attend two or three different meetings, all scheduled to meet in different places and at the same time. The situation that allows this to happen should be corrected.

I fully accept the idea that we should meet on Monday night, and that we should attend committee meetings all day on Tuesday and on Wednesday mornings, but I suggest we should arrange the business in such a way that no senator is called upon to attend two or three meetings at the same time.

Generally speaking, the majority of senators, even though some are not here this afternoon, are present when their presence counts most. To me, this is a very important factor, honourable senators. I think we are rendering a great service to the community, and I do not think we should suffer the discipline that would be imposed upon us by the suggestions made in the report presented by my friend, Senator Laird, and his committee.

Therefore, I support the motion made yesterday by my colleague, Senator Côté, that the report be referred back to the committee. Although I am not a member of that committee, I shall endeavour to be present when it meets to give further consideration to this matter.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, I need hardly say that I am profoundly disappointed with the first paragraph of this report. I have already spoken twice at length in this chamber on this motion, and I also appeared before the committee—which was very well attended indeed, as Senator Laird pointed out—when it finally got around to discussing my motion in December. There is no point in beating a dead horse. I can only say that when I proposed this motion I sincerely believed that not only was it right and proper but also that if it had been adopted, with any improvements that other senators with their greater wisdom and experience might have suggested, the prestige of the Senate would have been greatly enhanced. The Senate would have set a fine example that would be much appreciated and approved by the public, particularly at this time. Alas, that is not to be, and I will say no more on that part of the report dealing with my motion.

[Senator Robitcaud.]

When I was first appointed to the Senate, I was briefed by various officials. I was considerably surprised when I was informed that when a senator claimed an exemption from the penalty of $120 per day for being absent more than 21 days in a session because he was absent on public or official business, it was not necessary for that senator to specify the public or official business that caused his absence. This, of course, made it impossible for anyone, other than the absentee senator, to judge whether or not the activities responsible for his non-attendance properly qualified as public or official business. To me that was wrong and indefensible.

Senators should set an example and be above suspicion. The only way they can do so is by recognizing the obvious conflict of interest—and I underline "conflict of interest," because here I am not talking about integrity—and insisting that they make themselves subject to reasonable scrutiny by others when making a statement which results in financial benefit to themselves from the public treasury.

I am informed that in actual practice the vast majority of senators do specify the details of the public or official business that they have been engaged in when they are claiming an exemption from deduction for non-attendance.

On November 14, 1974, Mr. Hopkins gave the opinion referred to by Senator Laird as to the meaning of "public or official business," an opinion with which I might say I completely agree. As was pointed out by Senator Laird, this opinion was distributed to all honourable senators on December 10, 1974. Mr. Hopkins concluded his opinion by saying:

Finally, I would think that in doubtful cases it should not be left exclusively to the officials of the Senate to determine whether or not the Senator has been away on "public or official business". Such doubtful cases should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration for decision or even possible reference to the Senate itself. Under this procedure a Senator would receive the judgment of his peers.

I assumed, with this opinion, it would automatically follow that senators would have to give details of the public or official business which caused their absence; otherwise, how could doubtful cases be resolved in the manner suggested? I might say that I talked to Mr. Dean at the time, and he presumed the same thing. However, no official action was taken by the Internal Economy Committee to follow up this logical and sensible step until several weeks ago. Now that they have done so, I am pleased that they have at least taken this one small step which will reform a practice that could in no way be justified, and could be subject to grave abuse.

• (1440)

I should like now to say a few words about Senator Côté's proposed amendment. First I would point out that it is constitutionally impossible for the Senate to follow exactly the same practice as the House of Commons. I remind Senator Côté that section 31 of the British North America Act provides:

The Place of a Senator shall become vacant in any of the following Cases:

(1) If for Two consecutive Sessions of the Parliament he fails to give his Attendance in the Senate.

That is why the Senate must record attendance, otherwise it would be impossible to determine that a senator had not attended for two sessions. The situation is entirely different in the other place. There is no constitutional or other requirement that a member loses his seat for non-attendance. That is not to say that there is not a practical manner by which a member of the House of Commons may be retired for non-attendance. If a member is constantly absent from the House of Commons, and during his absence he is not engaged in public or official business, his constituents quickly get to know about it and they will no doubt take appropriate action to retire him at the next election.

Let us examine the procedure in the House of Commons. The member there each month signs a form, under oath, headed "Attendance". Senator Côté in his speech says:

At the other place, the only proof required when a member has been absent, because of sickness, official business or "public function", is that he should fill in a form indicating the number of days he was away and sign it.

That is not strictly correct. In addition to filling in the form the member must swear an affidavit, verifying under oath that the statement is true and correct. If a member of the House of Commons lies about his attendance, he commits perjury. Personally, I would find it repugnant to require senators to sign an affidavit verifying they were away on public business, and thus make themselves liable to criminal prosecution if they happened to make an error.

What does the Commons attendance form provide? It starts off by saying:

I was present at Ottawa and attended in my place at the House of Commons in each sitting day of the House (while the House was in session) during the month of ..... A.D. 19 ....., with the exception of ..... days during the said month.

There is no necessity for that sentence in the Senate because our attendance is recorded.

The only other statement in this form, besides the oath and the formal identification parts, is the second sentence, which reads as follows:

Of the said days of absence, ..... were unavoidable, my absence on those days being due to illness or public or official business.

If we adopted that procedure, we would be taking a retrograde step. Under our present practice, the senator must at least identify the dates on which he was away on public or official business. If we eliminated even that requirement as proposed by Senator Côté, we would certainly be exposing ourselves to ridicule by the press and public. The Senate gets exposed to a lot of ill-informed and unjust criticism. Please let us avoid the justified criticism that would follow if we took a step backwards and adopted Senator Côté's amendment.

On motion of Senator Lafond, debate adjourned.

FREE TRADE

AN ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION FOR CANADA—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I regret to ask again that this Order of the Day be stood. As honourable senators are aware, I am not generally in favour of Orders of the Day being stood indefinitely. Therefore, if any other senator wishes to speak to this inquiry, I will certainly be glad to yield to him.

I repeat that the reason I have stood this item at several sittings of the Senate is that the matter will be under discussion by one of the committees of the Senate, and I believe it is advisable for me to make my comments on this inquiry after the evidence is heard by the committee.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, March 22, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 22, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, including statement of accounts certified by the auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 26(3) of the Bank of Canada Act, Chapter B-2, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Department of the Solicitor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 5 of the Department of the Solicitor General Act, Chapter S-12, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Commission of Inquiry relating to public complaints, internal discipline and grievance procedure within the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, dated January 16, 1976 (His Honour Judge René J. Marin, Chairman), established under the authority of the Solicitor General of Canada, pursuant to Order in Council P.C. 1974-1338 as amended by Order in Council P.C. 1974-2415.

Copies of "Statistical Handbook—Selected Aspects of Criminal Justice", dated March 8, 1976, issued by the Department of the Solicitor General.

Copies of Statistics relating to the Gun Control Question, dated March 1976, issued by the Department of the Solicitor General.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 23, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in relation to the reply he gave last Tuesday when I asked him why the Prime Minister had accepted the resignation of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and had refused to accept the resignation of the Minister of Public Works two days before.

The Leader of the Government, as reported at page 1891 of Hansard, said, "We have had three cases of alleged impropriety." A little later on he said, "improprieties, yes, but illegalities, no." I wish to ask the leader on what grounds he bases his affirmation that there was no illegality in connection with these cases?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I simply used the words "illegalities, no" because of the findings of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, who pointed out that there had been no illegality at all.

With regard to the earlier question asked as to why one resignation was accepted—

Senator Flynn: I am not coming back to that.

Senator Perrault: —that is simply a discretionary matter decided by the Prime Minister. It was a decision made by the Prime Minister. Simply, there really have been no accusations of illegality levelled by anyone, either in the other place or in this chamber, and if the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make a charge here this evening we urge him to do so by all means, if he has a specific allegation to make.

Senator Flynn: I thought the answer would be the one given. The Leader of the Government has said repeatedly in this house—as has the Prime Minister in the other place—that there was no illegality. I asked on what basis they asserted that. Was it on the basis of the opinion given by the Minister of Justice? Chief Justice Deschênes was not even asked to state whether or not there had been illegalities. He was asked to report on the reaction of the judges involved.

I ask the Leader of the Government to come clean and tell me if an opinion has been given by anyone to the effect that there were no illegalities involved in all these matters.

Senator Perrault: The report of the Chief Justice was tabled in the other place. The basis for my remarks is to be found in the report of the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec. Nothing in the report of the Chief Justice suggested any illegality. The report suggested that there were indiscretions.

It is very difficult for some of us to understand—

Senator Flynn: That's obvious.

Senator Perrault: —that if in fact illegalities were committed, why the justices of the Quebec Superior Court did not report these matters five or six years ago, or even a number of weeks ago in the case of the latest alleged impropriety.

Senator Flynn: Come clean.

Senator Perrault: There have been no accusations of illegality by any elected member in the other place, or by anyone in this chamber, or by anyone associated with the Judiciary.

Senator Flynn: I did not say there had been.

Senator Perrault: I fail to understand what the honourable senator is attempting to determine this evening. Is he suggesting that we have a public inquiry to enable the Opposition to go on a fishing expedition for red herring? Is that his suggestion?

Senator Flynn: No.

An Hon. Senator: I guess there is one over there now.

Senator Flynn: I am merely asking the Leader of the Government if he himself claims there was no illegality. It was his assertion last week that there had been none, and I am wondering what his basis was for that assertion. It cannot be the report of Chief Justice Deschênes, because he was not asked to look into that aspect of it.

I am wondering whether the Leader of the Government bases his assertion on an opinion of the Minister of Justice, or of the Solicitor General. On what precise basis does he make that assertion?

We on this side never asserted that there had been any illegality. It was the Leader of the Government who asserted that there had been none, and I am simply asking for an explanation of that assertion. On what basis do you make that assertion?

Senator Perrault: On the basis of every conceivable piece of available evidence—the report of the Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court—

Senator Flynn: No, don't give me that Chief Justice report stuff.

Senator Perrault:—and the significant lack of any accusation on the part of anyone in public life in this country of illegality. None of the justices involved, for example—and bear in mind that the Chief Justice asked for a detailed report from three distinguished members of the Judiciary of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec—suggested that there was any illegality. Not one of the justices involved suggested any illegality, and I know that the honourable senator has great respect for the Quebec Judiciary.

Senator Goldenberg: May I ask a supplementary question?

Senator Flynn: I will bet it's not meant to be of any assistance to me.

Senator Goldenberg: I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government whether it is not a fact that the Minister of Justice said in the other place that he had a report from the law officers of the Crown to the effect that there was no illegality committed?

Senator Perrault: Yes, of course, and I reported that in my remarks on this matter in the chamber.

Senator Flynn: Not so.

Senator Perrault: The Prime Minister and the government have sought out the opinions of the law officers of the Crown, and there is no basis for any kind of action at all. There were no illegality. There may have been improprieties. This appears to be the case in one or two of the instances, but there have been no illegality.

An Hon. Senator: Just a human mistake.

Senator Flynn: To correct Senator Goldenberg's statement, the Minister of Justice said in the other place that there was no illegality committed, but he never said that he sought the advice of the officials of the Department of Justice in that respect.

If that is the opinion of the Minister of Justice, would the Leader of the Government not agree that it is the opinion of one who is, at the same time, judge and party? Under those circumstances, I would like to have an independent opinion. We cannot expect the Minister of Justice to accuse his Cabinet colleagues of illegality.

Senator Langlois: Are you doubting the word of the Minister of Justice? If so, say so clearly.

Senator Flynn: I have read his remarks. Just look at the record and stop grumbling.

Senator Langlois: For once, come out clean.

Senator Flynn: I am coming out clean. I don't care whether you feel I am or not. And you had better remain seated.

Senator Langlois: Is that an order?

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): He can speak as a senator.

Senator Flynn: I speak as a senator to you, too.

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): Would you like my hand?

Senator Flynn: I was hoping you would intervene, because I'm sure you will end up putting your foot in your mouth.

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): This whole thing is just a quarrel of words.

● (2010)

Senator Flynn: Are you replying instead of your leader now?

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): I am not finished.

Senator Flynn: What are you doing now?

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): If you want me to explain—

Senator Flynn: You can ask a question but you cannot reply for the Leader of the Government.

Senator Bourget: I think this is all out of order.

Senator Fournier (de Lanaudière): We are lucky to have the rules.

Senator Flynn: Indeed.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, only one senator may occupy the floor at a time. May I just repeat again that after receiving Chief Justice Deschênes' report, the government then consulted with the law officers of the Crown, which governments do from time to time. When the honourable senator served in a previous government—

Senator Flynn: I have heard that one before.

Senator Perrault:—this was a procedure followed by his Cabinet colleagues.

An opinion was sought as to whether there was illegality involved in the actions of the three ministers and, indeed, one of them was not even a minister at the time of this alleged impropriety.

Senator Flynn: I am not saying that.

Senator Perrault: The law officers of the Crown said there was no basis for any action because no illegality had been committed. I think, on the basis of that opinion, the Prime Minister has quite properly stated that it is not the intention to take further action unless allegations are made of a specific nature in Parliament. They can be made here. For example, if the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make a specific allegation against any of the three named individuals in this controversy—

Senator Asselin: That's the same story.

Senator Perrault:—then he may wish to proceed to do so.

Senator Asselin: That's the same story.

Senator Perrault: Until specific allegations are made here or in the other place, the government believes it acted entirely properly.

Senator Flynn: If the Leader of the Government is right in saying that an opinion was sought of the officials of the Department of Justice, or the Department of the Attorney General, would he care to table that opinion?

Senator Perrault: If it will help to remove any of the doubts which exist in the mind—

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault:—of the Leader of the Opposition, for some reason which is not immediately apparent to me, I will certainly make some inquiries about what may or may not be made public in that connection.

Senator Flynn: Thank you.

Senator Perrault: Senator, I believe I did use the words "no illegality" in a very proper and accurate sense the other day.

Senator Flynn: If you care to table the opinion, fine.

Senator Croll: I believe the honourable senator knows that normally he does not—

Senator Asselin: Is this on a point of order?

Senator Croll: It is not normal to make opinions of the Department of Justice known, or put on the record. It is not the practice to do that. It is not normal to do that and, therefore, it is not done.

Senator Flynn: Why does the honourable senator intervene at this time, when his leader has already said that he will try to see whether he can produce the opinion? This is an interesting question for Parliament to consider.

Senator Croll: He is not a lawyer and does not quite understand. You are a lawyer, and you know better than that. He is attempting to help you out in some way by offering to give you something to which you are not entitled.

Senator Flynn: I am certainly entitled to this.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this is an unusually heated start for our week's deliberations. I gave no commitment that I would produce any report. I said I would attempt to determine that material which could be made available to the honourable Leader of the Opposition. I think that is an opinion which can be delivered by a person whether or not he is a member of the Bar.

Senator Flynn: I accept that.

Senator Forsey: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question. I notice that he has repeatedly used the phrase "alleged improprieties." I thought there was no question that improprieties had been committed. I have read the debates in the other place and it seemed to me that everybody concerned admitted there were improprieties, though not illegalities.

I was a little startled to hear the Leader of the Government say "alleged improprieties." It seemed to me quite clear from the report of the Chief Justice, from the admissions of ministers in the other place, that improprieties—grave or otherwise—had been committed. So I am a little uneasy that the Leader of the Government in this house should keep using this word "alleged."

Senator Perrault: Surely this is a matter of semantics. They may be described as improprieties or indiscretions. However one wishes to describe these actions, surely it is a matter of terminology.

Senator Flynn: Very good!

TRANSPORTATION

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—MAINTENANCE COST SUBSIDIES FOR NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on March 17, Senator Bonnell asked whether the Government of Canada would grant maintenance cost subsidies to the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island to pay for the extra maintenance costs of the trans-Canada highway, because the rail service has been discontinued there and because the rail traffic is now being handled on the highway.

The CNR has not in fact filed to the CTC for the abandonment of these rail services on either Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland. These rail services are not being discontinued.

PENITENTIARIES

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF MEDIUM SECURITY PRISON IN SAINT JOHN—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on March 18, Senator Riley asked the following question:

What is the intention of the government with respect to the construction of a medium security penitentiary off the Martinon bypass in the City of Saint John?

The information made available to me is as follows: Although there have been petitions which are opposed to the construction of a prison in the Saint John area, there have also been petitions in favour of this decision.

The final decision in all of these cases is based on the approval of the local civic government. In this case, on second reading the local government voted nine to four in favour of the prison. The final vote was taken on February 9, 1976, and this time the vote was nine to two in favour of the decision. This decision is not irrespective of public opinion but rather reflects public opinion in terms of the city council's vote. As far as the area being considered for future housing, the city council approved of a zoning change to allow for construction of the prison. It may be worth noting that the Solicitor General of Canada spoke on an "open line" show in New Brunswick on March 12. Although there was criticism about the prison, much of the criticism was directed at the makeup of the local council and not at federal officials.

I understand that the police chief of Saint John has come out in favour of this decision, although the police association is opposed to the decision.

In any case, the government intends to construct this medium security institution off the Martinon bypass in the city of Saint John. This decision was reached after consultation with the Regional Advisory Committee and New Brunswick officials and after having obtained sufficient public support to permit the city council to approve the institution and the necessary zoning changes.

Because of the requirement for a medium security institution in the Maritimes and because statistics indicate that sufficient inmates come from the Saint John area, a decision was made to conduct a search for suitable sites in the area. The Department of Public Works and penitentiary service representatives, in conjunction with city officials, located a suitable site on property controlled by the city near Green and Ferguson lakes. This site was selected because the surrounding vacant land and lakes will provide a suitable buffer zone from the nearest community. The site is approximately ten miles from the city centre and approximately two miles from the nearest resident of the community of Martinon.

When the site was identified the city council advised the Canadian Penitentiary Service that before council would approve the institution and zoning change, public input and sufficient public acceptance would be necessary. This would be the responsibility of the Canadian Penitentiary Service. These terms were publicly stated by Mayor Flewelling in reply to an unofficial announcement of the proposal.

As a result of this announcement, petitions opposing construction on the Green Lake site were received from residents of Martinon and a local wildlife association. Although aware of the petitions, the city council, on August 28, 1975, approved in principle the construction of an institution within the city limits and invited the Canadian Penitentiary Service to discuss location.

In October 1975, a formal request was made by the Canadian Penitentiary Service to the city for the transfer of land. This formal request permitted the council to arrange a public information meeting to ascertain public reaction. At this meeting, representatives of the Canadian Penitentiary Service made a presentation to the residents of Saint John to obtain necessary support. This was followed by a presentation by Mr. Sheehan, Director of Dorchester Institution, to the District Labour Council. To obtain further community input, Mr. Sheehan conducted an open line radio program.

Honourable senators, I apologize for this rather unusually lengthy reply.

Senator Flynn: Oh, oh.

Senator Perrault: As a result of the public response and general acceptance, the council of the City of Saint John tabled the motion for the construction of an institution and obtained formal approval on February 9, 1976. Upon receipt of the council's approval, the Department of Public Works began negotiations with the City of Saint John for the acquisition of the site and necessary rights of way.

Honourable senators, this is all of the material I am able to produce at this time.

Senator Flynn: And it is quite enough, too.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to put to the Leader of the Government a supplementary question. He said that the chief of police of Saint John had approved the construction of this institution at the particular location that he mentioned. However, he glossed over—and indeed I ask him if he did not gloss over—the fact that the police association of Saint John did not want it there, any more than all the people in the area concerned?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I did give that information. I said that the police association was opposed to the decision. But I am really unable to provide any more enlightenment on the subject now. I have provided what I consider to be an unusually long and detailed reply to the question.

Senator Asselin: You had better send a copy to the honourable senator.

TRANSPORTATION

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SERVICES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—QUESTIONS

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government arising from the answer he gave to Senator Bonnell's question of March 17. Senator Bonnell is not here this evening, but I am sure that, since we discussed the matter earlier, he would want to have this question asked.

I appreciate that the leader has given us information which has been supplied to him. Obviously he is not in a position to answer all questions in detail, and the information has to be obtained from the appropriate departments of government. In this case I presume it was the Ministry of Transport. The statement was made that there has been no request for a subsidy in respect of the Canadian National Railways in Newfoundland because the CNR has not abandoned its railway services in that province.

Is the government, and particularly the department concerned, not aware that some seven or eight years ago the CNR abandoned completely the passenger rail service between St. John's and Port aux Basques, a distance of 550 miles, and substituted a bus service? As a consequence, the passenger traffic which would ordinarily be carried by the rail service is now being carried over the one and only trans-insular highway in Newfoundland, namely, the trans-Canada highway, between St. John's and Port aux Basques. This has added immeasurably to the burden, the pressure, the weight, the volume, of traffic using the trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland.

I have to suggest to the Leader of the Government that the answer given to him by the Ministry of Transport, or by somebody, is misleading, when it says that the CNR has not abandoned its rail service in Newfoundland. It has not abandoned its freight service, but it has abandoned 100 per cent its passenger service. So that answer, given to the Leader of the Government, is incomplete and misleading.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the original question asked by Senator Bonnell did not make reference to passenger rail services or freight rail services. It just simply made mention of "rail service." The question was:

Would the Leader of the Government permit a supplementary question? Would he ascertain whether it is the intention of the Government of Canada to grant maintenance cost subsidies to the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, where rail service has been discontinued, in order to help pay for the extra maintenance costs of the trans-Canada highway in those two provinces . . .

The answer simply states that the CNR has not filed with the CTC for the abandonment of these services. If the honourable senator is referring to the discontinuance a few years ago of the so-called and quaintly named Newfie Bullet, that is certainly known to all senators, and certainly to the CNR. But we are really discussing whether there will be further line abandonment. Presumably the understanding of the CNR when approaching the question posed by the honourable senator, was the belief that the honourable senator was asking about freight services in Newfoundland and whether this service was to be closed down. The reply, in essence, is, "These rail services are not being discontinued."

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government give us a little more light on the question which was asked by Senator Duggan? I know that there was a reply to it the other day, but it seems to me to be quite clear that the main point, as I understood it, raised by Senator Duggan was that now these bus fares might go up and, according to the reply he got, would not be looked after by some subsidies such as would have been available for the railway. This is rather a serious matter for people who are using the bus passenger service across Newfoundland. I think this is the nub, as I understand it, of Senator Duggan's question and I don't think we really had a thoroughly satisfactory answer to it.

Senator Perrault: Well, honourable senators, the entire question of the cost of transportation and the rationalization of transportation and all these matters are under continuing review by the government. Costs appear to be rising everywhere. I understand that on the west coast an announcement is pending about an increase in ferry passenger fares. I would think that it would be most unusual if during a period of galloping inflation although, encouragingly, because of the restraints program, the inflationary process is being modified somewhat, we did not have an advancement in certain transportation fares in this country, whether on the east coast, the west coast or in central Canada. But every effort is being made by the government to make certain that these fare increases, if in fact they occur, do not work an inordinate hardship on those least able to pay.

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, might I ask the Leader of the Government if he would make inquiries to ascertain if it is the intention of the CNR to abandon the rail passenger service between Sydney and Truro and to substitute a bus service?

Senator Perrault: I shall take that question as notice, and I hope to have a reply tomorrow evening.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I would like to ask another question with respect to Prince Edward Island. Canadian National Railways got a motor transport licence for all highways in New Brunswick through Canadian National Transportation. Since there seems to be a great deal of feeling on Prince Edward Island that that is a move toward the abandonment not only of passenger services but also of rail service, could the Leader of the Government find out from the Canadian National Railways whether it is their intention to apply to CTC to abandon all rail services on Prince Edward Island?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice, but I want to assure Senator Riley that the Government of Canada is deeply aware of its historical commitment to the people of our great Atlantic provinces with respect to transportation in that area.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED—SECOND READING— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Senator Molgat moved second reading of Bill S-33, respecting United Grain Growers Limited.

He said: I trust, honourable senators, that my subject will not bring out red herrings, because they are not very common on the Prairies. I am really dealing with a basic Prairie question—the subject of grain.

I am particularly pleased to present this bill, for two basic reasons. The first is that United Grain Growers is a very old, respectable and honourable company, which was organized in the very early days—as a matter of fact, back in 1902—by an act of the Manitoba Legislature. It was subsequently recognized and incorporated by the Senate and the House of Commons in 1911 under the then name of the Grain Growers Company Limited.

This was a movement by grain growers themselves in Western Canada to take hold of their own grain merchandising operations. They were then unhappy by reason of what they viewed as the cartels, the big corporations, and decided to take this into their own hands and establish their own company.

The second reason I am particularly pleased to present this bill is that one of our former colleagues,—no longer here, but certainly well known to many who are here—the late Honourable Tom Crerar, was the first president of the then Grain Growers Company Limited, a name which was subsequently changed by this chamber to United Grain Growers Limited. Tom Crerar, that great western leader whom I am sure many of you knew intimately, was one of those men who headed the group who developed this small company into a major western corporation. Today, United Grain Growers Limited, under the leadership of its president, Mr. A. M. Runciman—known as “Mac” to those of us who deal with him—has been doing a tremendous job in western Canada for grain growers.

Throughout the years, other grain organizations—call them cooperatives, if you will, or growers’ organizations—such as Manitoba Pool Elevators, Saskatchewan Pool Elevators and Alberta Pool Elevators, have developed. In all of this there has been a spirit of friendly competition between these various groups. Evident throughout these developments, however, has been a desire, and certainly a basic structure, to assist the grain growers of Western Canada. Therefore, this legislation before us today is simply a continuation of a number of bills which have been before us in past times, before I came here, all indicating the growth of this particular company and the need for further capital expansion.

Basically, the bill requests an increase in the capital structure of the company to $25 million from the present base. This is simply indicative of the growth and expansion of United Grain Growers Limited. In my opinion, it is a credit to the management of the company and its shareholders. I strongly encourage the passage of this bill, because it indicates once again that those who are prepared to do something for themselves and work to that end can grow in this country and, certainly, United Grain Growers Limited has done exactly that.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Paterson: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is United Grain Growers purely and simply a farmer-owned company?

Senator Molgat: Yes, Senator Paterson, United Grain Growers is completely owned by the farmers who deal with the company, who sell to the company and who control the company in its totality. United Grain Growers at this stage is operating basically in the three Prairie provinces. The shareholders come from the areas in which the company has elevators, and they control it completely. It is a shareholder concern and, all the shareholders being farmers, it is owned by the growers.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I may ask Senator Molgat, the sponsor of this bill, if he can offer a little more information? If I may say so, his explanation seemed rather thin in view of the fact that in this amending bill the company is requesting a doubling of its share capital, and extensive changes in its dividend rights. Can the honourable senator inform us of the reason for the requirement for additional capital, for what it will be used, and by whom it will be subscribed?

Secondly, what are the essential changes in the dividend rights? We see in the explanatory note that there will be a rate of three per cent, which will be in addition to five per cent. Perhaps Senator Molgat will tell us what dividends have been issued in the past, so that we will have a clearer picture of what is being requested in this petition.

Senator Molgat: Senator Grosart, I wish I could give you more detailed information. Unfortunately I am not a grain grower although I am a westerner. However, it is my belief that Mr. Runciman, the president of the company, will be available to appear before our committee to answer those specific questions. In general terms, the shareholdings are strictly those held by farmers or grain growers themselves, so all dividends accrue to grain growers and not to anyone else. There is no possibility in this case of an outsider who is not a grain grower obtaining dividends from the corporation, so all benefits will accrue directly to grain growers. I am sorry I cannot respond to the question as to the percentage.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Davey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, for the second reading of the Bill C-58, intituled: “An Act to amend the Income Tax Act”—(Honourable Senator Lang).

Hon. George McIlraith: Honourable senators, Senator Lang adjourned the debate on this motion. He is not present tonight, and I do not believe he will be present. In that circumstance, I ask permission to speak now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator McIlraith: Thank you, honourable senators, for your courtesy. I wish to make a few brief remarks in connection with this apparently simple bill dealing with two very important subjects.

I have said that the bill is apparently simple, but I find it to be very complex and, indeed, difficult to assess fully in its implications. It deals with two subjects, as represented by the minister proposing the bill in the other place, one of which is the periodical press, and the other, of course, is the broadcasting media—the permitting of Canadian advertisers to use foreign broadcasting stations to transmit advertising messages to other Canadians.

● (2040)

These are complex subjects, and the bill does not appear to deal with them directly. It deals with them in only an indirect way. Indeed, it attempts to deal with them in a simplistic way. In my view, it is wholly ineffective in achieving its purpose in relation to those two subjects. What is worse—and this is important—the bill, in my view, is harmful to a great many innocent Canadians, and is dangerous as a legislative precedent.

The bill is sometimes represented as a tax measure. Indeed, it comes to us in the form of a bill to amend the Income Tax Act but, in point of fact, it is clear, when we examine the subject and its implications, that it is nothing of the sort. My authority for saying that is found in the language of the minister when proposing the bill in the other place. While I do not wish to quote at length from his speech, although I am tempted to do so, it is interesting to note that in explaining the legislation the minister chose a format that set out in eight numbered paragraphs certain things which the government does not want, and these can be found in Hansard of the House of Commons, May 8, 1975, at pages 5592 and 5593. Of those eight matters which the government seeks to abolish by this legislation, six have no reference, directly or indirectly, to anything relating to taxation. The other two, which do make reference to taxation in some form, make reference only by way of an implied intention to help the Canadian periodical industry as a competitor with the foreign periodical industry.

Not content with that, the minister, after setting out the negatives, set out the positives—what the government wanted. In this connection, he had four numbered paragraphs. None of those positives make reference to anything related to taxation. I could quote them at length, but they are in the Hansard and I have given the reference. It is interesting to bear that in mind because, in dealing with the subject—and I believe it to be a very important subject—we must deal with it for what it is, and not the superficial format of the legislation on the subject.

I should say at once that it is clear, throughout the whole of the minister's presentation, that the measure was put forward as being designed to assist the magazine industry in Canada, and to deal with the use by Canadian advertisers of the broadcasting media operated in another country to reach Canadian customers. Presumably the latter part of the proposition is intended to help Canadian broadcasters exploit the monopolies assigned by the regulatory authority—and, by the nature of the operation, there must be monopolies in a certain context—to their own greater financial advantage, presumably by giving them a competitive advantage. I have no quarrel with any attempt to help Canadian broadcasters develop their potential capacity.

I shall try not to repeat points raised by other honourable senators. I heard the speeches, and I have read them carefully. I am sorry that Senator Davey is not in his seat tonight. I read his speech a couple of times, in addition to hearing it. I hope that in my remarks I shall not repeat any of the arguments already advanced.

Senator Asselin: But you do favour the bill?

Senator McIlraith: I do not favour the bill, but I do favour an attempt by government to deal with the unfairness it is alleged the bill will overcome. Perhaps I can develop that in my remarks.

I should like to deal with the points separately. I shall deal first with the press, and then with the broadcasting aspect of the bill. The most effective way of controlling competition faced by Canadian periodicals is, in my view, a more direct form of legislation. I have always felt that one of the ways of controlling a company is through ownership of that company. The bill seeks to provide that a foreign periodical shall be so considered, unless, among other things—there are several other things mentioned—it be 75 per cent owned by Canadians. I have no quarrel with that principle since I believe in Canadian control of cultural matters, and it may be important that we retain control of, or develop, a strong Canadian media. Therefore, I have no quarrel with any attempt to control ownership of the media in order that we might have presented a Canadian point of view.

However, I note in the bill that the requirement for ownership is 75 per cent. I am inclined to think that that aspect did not receive specific attention, but was merely a consequence of legislation passed some 10 or 12 years ago.

[Senator McIlraith.]

At that time, a 75 per cent ownership requirement was instituted to deal with another problem—that of new media coming into Canada—whereas the problem alleged to be dealt with by this bill concerns media which have been well established in Canada over a number of years and, in terms of efficiency of operation and so on, have been well operated.

Whether that Canadian control should be 55 per cent or 75 per cent is not particularly important. I merely raise it as being perhaps unreasonably high in relation to some of the media that is shut out by the provisions of this bill. I refer to such magazines as MD of Canada, to which I will make further reference later—magazines, the content of which is wholly Canadian or almost wholly Canadian, or as close to being wholly Canadian as it can be.

● (2050)

The editorial staff of MD of Canada is all Canadian; its editorial work is all done in Canada. It is as Canadian as it can be, except on the point of ownership. In this case, there is a difficulty in that respect. The owners of this monthly periodical—this magazine whose content is Canadian and whose editors are Canadian—are willing to sell to Canadians, but Canadian ownership cannot be achieved for the simple reason that no Canadian or group of Canadians will buy it, the reason for which must be obvious to everyone. It is a magazine distributed, without charge, to some 30,000 doctors. Because of its circulation, it is not the kind of advertising medium for which advertisers pay high fees. When advertisers do not pay high fees there is no big profit; when there is no profit, buyers do not buy.

For the life of me, I do not understand why we want to throw a magazine such as that out of Canada when it is obvious that Canadian ownership cannot be achieved, and when there is no reasonable prospect of any other company in Canada putting out a publication of that type. It is a magazine which serves a useful purpose, and it is in our interest to keep it in Canada. I do not know of any magazine that is as Canadian as MD of Canada.

There is another method of controlling competition in the Canadian magazine field flowing as a consequence from Bill C-58, that being the definition in the Income Tax Act of a Canadian periodical. That definition is worded in a rather curious way. It related to content, and provides that a Canadian periodical does not include—and honourable senators will notice that it is put in the form of a negative—"a periodical the contents of which are substantially the same as the contents of a periodical published outside Canada." It must be "not substantially the same as".

A magazine can be wholly Canadian-owned with a wholly Canadian editorial staff, with all of the articles written by Canadians, but if it is substantially the same as any periodical published outside Canada it is to be considered a non-Canadian publication. That is a most curious provision and a most curious approach to the problem with which we are concerned, which is to help the Canadian periodical press to compete with the foreign press.

Of course, the expression "substantially the same as" can be interpreted by two methods—at least, I knew of only two methods, but I now have my doubts. I am revising my opinion somewhat on that. I thought the only two methods of interpreting that expression were by judicial interpretation—and there is quite a bit of law to be found on that—or legislative definition, either of which is effective. I do not have the temerity to define that phrase by the judicial interpretation method, a fact that will please honourable senators because of the time involved. We do not have a legislative definition, of course, but let me read what the minister had to say on that subject when presenting Bill C-58 in the other place. I refer honourable senators to House of Commons Debates of May 8, 1975, page 5594, where the minister said:

I should like to make it quite clear that there is no intention of introducing, in connection with the proposed amendments, a new Canadian content rule or a new formula for measuring how substantially a magazine published in Canada must be different from another published abroad in order to qualify for the benefits of section 19 of the Income Tax Act. Such a criterion has been part of the taxation law since 1965; it is not new and it is not unique. All periodicals published in Canada are bound by the "not substantially the same" clause in section 19 and have been for nearly ten years.

As I say, I thought there were two methods of dealing with that. The minister, in referring to the periodical press in introducing Bill C-58 in the other place, was referring to Time and Reader's Digest; he was not referring to the other publications, one of which I mentioned a moment ago.

In looking at this particular legislation, the situation was that "not substantially the same as" was being interpreted as 40 per cent the same as, and then it was increased to 50 per cent. I do not know what is meant by "not substantially the same as." I suppose what is meant is that it would have to be something other than just a token difference. That point can be argued at length. Certainly, there would have to be something more than a difference of 5 per cent, or something of that sort.

But what happened? I would ask honourable senators to bear in mind the minister's statement in presenting Bill C-58 to the Parliament of Canada. Suddenly, there were negotiations with those two publications, one of which, Time, tried to meet the criteria. I have some difference of opinion over Time's treatment of this house in assuming that the matter was ended when Bill C-58 passed the other place; one can attribute that to arrogance or ignorance. In either case, as far as I am concerned, it was totally unsatisfactory to me as a Canadian.

Getting back to the point at hand, Time, as a Canadian corporate taxpayer operating in Canada for some decades, sought to meet the criteria as set out in both the legislation and the minister's statement. Apparently, it was in the process of meeting those criteria—

Senator Asselin: Time tried to meet the criteria before the bill passed the other place.

Senator McIlraith: Yes, that is right, probably relying on the minister's statement. It was apparently able to meet the ownership criterion quite successfully. It was in the process of coming up with a format to meet the content criterion that I have referred to, the 50 per cent Canadian content rule—that was the interpretation put on it—and it apparently had met it when it was then told that 50 per cent Canadian content was not satisfactory. Having met all of the criteria that were supposedly in the bill, Time was then told that it was not satisfactory. Suddenly, the Department of National Revenue was interpreting that clause as meaning that it must be 80 per cent "not substantially the same as."

Well, then what do you do? Do you try by litigation to get rid of that interpretation, or what do you do? In that respect, I have a lot of sympathy with the officials of Time Canada. They made their choice—a choice I do not like but, nonetheless, they made it.

I wonder, honourable senators, who made the decision to raise the Canadian content rule from 50 per cent to 80 per cent in the arbitrary way in which it was done? Do any of you know the particular tax official or bureaucrat who effectively made that decision? I hope none of us knows. I certainly do not, and it would not be proper if we did know. He is not directly answerable to any authority. We must assume it was a ministerial decision and, of course, the minister is answerable for it. It seems to me to be an unsatisfactory way of dealing with an important subject.

● (2100)

I am one of those who believes in a free press. I believe that such decisions made in such a manner, affecting a substantial part of our press, is an interference with the freedom of the press to deal with a subject that is vital to all of us and to our liberties.

I want to take the trouble, if I may, to read from page 3 of Volume I of the report of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media:

Though it will be apparent to those who read its pages that this is a pre-eminently Canadian document, we make no apology for beginning with a statement by a distinguished American jurist, Justice Hugo Black, in a case involving the right of newspapers to news, wrote that "the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is essential to the welfare of the public... a free press is a condition of a free society."

By the way, that remark is taken from a United States Supreme Court case in 1944. Here is what the Senate Committee said about that:

This notion is basic to our idea of a free society.

I share those views. However, I find myself terribly concerned with the freedom of the press and of the media. If it is possible for someone, however identified or unidentified, to arbitrarily change a ruling of such vital significance on content—dealing with the definition of Canadian periodicals and foreign periodicals—from 50 per cent to 80 per cent, I find that method not satisfactory to me as a free Canadian. It is not satisfactory to me, and I ask if it is satisfactory to you.

For reasons that are not very clear to many of us, Reader's Digest is reputed to have met the criteria I have been dealing with. If we know so very little about how it has met the criteria, is that the kind of use of the content provisions of the statutory definition of what constitutes a Canadian periodical we would like? Is that satisfactory?

Is it capable of being used by some other government at some later date as a form of censorship without answerability? Will the bureaucracy be able to exclude a magazine that it does not like or, conversely, permit a periodical that fails to meet the prescribed criteria to remain? This is a question we must ask ourselves.

I respectfully submit that it is not a proper way to legislate on a subject as important and vital as this, and that the government and Parliament can find a much fairer and more direct form of legislation—that is, fairer to the Canadian readers, who I think are important; fairer to Canadian advertisers, who I think are important; fairer to businesses operating in this country, to publishers of periodicals and advertisers who use them, and consumers who buy the products being advertised. Advertisers have a habit of only buying advertising where it is advantageous for them to buy, which enables them to sell more of their products. We should remember it is Canadian advertisers with whom we are dealing here. The advertisers are selling their product to Canadian consumers. Presumably it is a help to Canadian consumers, but if manufacturers market their products well, that is helpful in providing employment in a period when the economy of this country requires more employment from the private sector.

Senator Asselin: Hear, hear.

Senator McIlraith: I am puzzled as to why this method of punishing Canadian advertisers should be used to deal with a problem that has to do with assisting the Canadian periodical press. I would like to assist it, but to me this method is not a fair or satisfactory way of doing it.

I should like now to deal with the broadcasting aspect of the bill, and its implications in that respect. The Toronto area seems to get all the news attention in this regard. Perhaps that is by reason of its size and wealth and the number of people there, perhaps that is as it should be—I do not know. In any event, there is undoubtedly a problem with the Buffalo broadcasting stations drawing off a large amount of Canadian advertising revenue, and using it to develop the industry in the United States.

That is a problem and I am the first to admit it, so let us examine exactly what the problem is. Is not the problem that the Canadian advertisers seek to use those stations because they are a better media for reaching the Canadian consumer than any other media? As I said a few moments ago, I find Canadian advertisers pretty shrewd people and pretty thrifty with their money, and hard-boiled about the matter. They go there because that is the best coverage for that segment of the Canadian market they can get.

What we are doing by this legislation is punishing those Canadian advertisers by taking that benefit away from them, and making it impossible for them to advertise on those American stations and, therefore, impossible for them to reach their Canadian customers. Is that a good way of solving the problem? I respectfully submit it is a bad way.

It is unfortunate that the broadcasters and the publishers of magazines are dealt with in the same bill because they are very different subjects. We should remember that the broadcasters are controlled by regulatory bodies. They are granted a limited type of monopoly, each by his own government in his own country, and are subject to various types of regulations by the appropriate regulatory bodies. Is not the correct way of dealing with this problem to have this Canadian money used for the development of better media in Canada, stronger media in Canada, so that Canadians can develop a broadcasting capacity that will be attractive to the advertisers.

[Senator McIlraith.]

I would suggest that the better way of doing it would be by negotiating some regulatory agreements with the United States, but they should not be negotiated by the Canadian broadcasting regulatory body. It should be the technical advisers only on that kind of negotiation. It is a bigger, more important subject because the amount of money involved is substantial; it is much more. The regulatory body of the broadcasting media should merely be the technical advisers on all matters relating to broadcasting. But there should also be a proper feed-in by those concerned with the economy of this country, by those concerned with getting the best possible advertising, by those concerned that the consumers get the best service possible from the companies which advertise their products. In other words, the whole Canadian interest should be examined, and that negotiation should be carried on in a responsible way at the very senior level between the two governments. Then, in the light of what arrangements are made, the necessary regulatory action can be taken. Conceivably, this could involve legislation, but I suspect that it probably would not. It seems to me that that is the way to deal with it.

Incidentally, to my knowledge nothing has been said in the debate so far about those Canadian broadcasting corporations which have had very considerable assistance in developing their stations through their advertising into the American market. I do not have the figures, but I suspect that by the nature of things a much smaller amount of money is involved. Nevertheless, it would also require to be dealt with at the same time. Both aspects should be dealt with on an equal basis.

Senator Rowe: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Would these agreements be between the governments of the two countries concerned?

Senator McIlraith: Oh, yes.

Senator Rowe: Nobody else would be involved in the agreements?

Senator McIlraith: It would be between the governments, and the governments presumably would agree to take action within their own regulatory agencies. There are various ways of working it out. I do not presume to know what the final outcome would be.

I should like in a moment to refer to the Toronto problem, but first I will refer to the Bellingham problem. There the situation is totally different, but Toronto, with its weight and power, has had its way in the legislation—or a segment of the Toronto population has had its way—and the problem is quite different there.

With respect to the Bellingham station, the Canadian advertisers have to use it because they have no other media at this point. Not only that, but the interesting thing in the Bellingham situation is that the Canadian advertisers' money does not go out of Canada. It is all paid to a Canadian corporation in Canada and is, therefore, exclusively under our own control. Part of that money is used for the development in Canada of talent, dramatic and otherwise, in the broadcasting media.

I am not sufficiently well informed on the point to say with authority, but it may well be that not enough of that money is being spent in Canada. It may be that we should require them to spend a larger proportion of that Canadian advertising money to develop the Canadian talent in radio and television. There may be problems of that sort. It may be that we should be taxing that Canadian company more heavily. But this bill does not deal with any of those issues.

What does this bill do? Once again it takes something away from Canadian advertisers who are trying to sell goods to Canadian consumers at a time when this is to our advantage. It takes away from the Canadian advertiser the one good assistance he has in doing that, namely, the right to advertise his goods. Surely, at the very politest, that is a left-handed way of dealing with the problem. Surely it is not good enough.

Senator Flynn: With this bill we will collect less income tax from that company.

Senator McIlraith: Oh, yes, I know.

I hope I have made my points. I hope they are supplementary to what has already been said. The bill has caused me grave concern. Unlike some others who have opposed this bill, I recognize at once that there are problems to be dealt with in both these areas. I am quick to admit that, but I find the bill totally wrong in principle. It is totally wrong in concept, and it is totally wrong in the way in which it tries to deal with the problem.

I have very reluctantly, after much consideration and thought, come to the conclusion that the only proper thing to do is to seek to kill this bill so that the government may come back with carefully thought-out legislation to deal with the real problem; a form of legislation which will be fair to Canadian readers of periodicals, to Canadian listeners of broadcast material, to Canadian advertisers, to Canadian consumers who buy the products being advertised, and to the companies doing business in this country.

Honourable senators, I thank you for listening to me so patiently. I hope my remarks have contributed something useful to the solution of what I regard as a difficult problem.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I should like to say just a few words on Bill C-58. First I should like to point out that these regulations which stop Canadian advertisers from using foreign periodicals really affect only the small companies or small businesses, because all big businesses or big advertisers having the capacity have had the common sense to buy into and control companies in the United States. Those of you who have been following the financial news lately know that our big companies have been falling all over themselves buying in the United States. Either they are buying companies or they are creating subsidiaries, and, of course, every time that happens it means that jobs are being exported to the land of the bold and the free below the border.

Honourable senators, among other things, in many cases this bill prohibits Canadian companies from doing business with other Canadian companies, because if a Canadian company is controlled in the United States, the bill prohibits another Canadian company from doing business with it or for it. For example, although Time Canada is a Canadian company, you would not be allowed to advertise in it under this bill.

Suppose the government were to come along and say that you couldn't buy a truck from General Motors of Canada and charge it up against your business? The fact is that you can buy a truck from General Motors of Canada and claim the cost of its operation as a business expense. Why? Because the company is 100 per cent owned in the United States. Are you going to be told you cannot buy oil from Imperial Oil, because 60 per cent of it is controlled by Exxon? This, however, is what you are asked to accept. Time Canada is a Canadian company, but if I want to advertise in it I cannot charge the cost as an expense. Does that make any sense?

• (2120)

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): That is a little different from your statement that you are not allowed to.

Senator Beaubien: You are not allowed to in terms of economics. You can throw your money out the window if you like.

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): You know that you can get it at half price?

Senator Beaubien: That's childish talk.

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): It is a statement by Time magazine. They are selling advertising in this country at half price.

Senator Flynn: That is not a very good argument for the bill.

Senator Beaubien: They are selling advertising at half price, because otherwise they are going to go out of business.

There is one other argument that I should like to make. When Senator Laird spoke to us the other day in what I thought was a very good speech, he referred to the Canadian habit of doing everything we can, for no good reason, to antagonize our big American neighbour. Without taking too much of your time, I would remind you of the delegation that we sent to the United States, headed by our senior senator, Senator Hayden. On November 11, 1971, Senator Hayden, Senator Macnaughton and I went down to the United States with about 22 members of the House of Commons. We went there with our tails between our legs because the President of the United States had, a few months before, slapped a 10 per cent import tax on everything that came from Canada, and only from Canada. If that had been allowed to go on for a few more months it would have ruined our economy in many ways. So we went down there ready to be terribly kind and pleasant and we were, and in return they were nice to us. A few months later they removed the import tax.

There are people who sit back and pretend that it doesn't matter, at a time when the United States is having trouble with Cuba, that our Prime Minister goes down there and makes a big to-do and has his picture taken with Castro. But where does that behaviour get us when, about two weeks later, the American President calls that dictator an international bandit? Certainly, if you are a little guy and you are up against somebody like Joe Louis and he has you backed into a corner, you will fight back to defend yourself. But to kick a big guy in the shins just for the hell of it simply doesn't make any sense. We should grow up and realize that we are terribly lucky to have neighbours who are so much like ourselves that it is difficult to tell us apart. Are we not lucky to have Americans as neighbours? Any time we have been nice to them and behaved sensibly they have responded. I think it is time we mended our ways.

On motion of Senator Lafond, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 23, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on the administration of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 35 of the said Act, Chapter 25 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

NEW OFFICES—INTERIOR WALL DECORATION—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he can find out for us whether it is true that the new quarters of the Public Service Commission are decorated with suède walls, and there I don't mean s-w-a-y-e-d, but suède, s-u-e, accent grave, d-e—suède walls. I was credibly informed this afternoon that this was so, and it did not seem somehow to jibe with the calls upon us for restraint. I should be very glad if the Leader of the Government could find out whether there is any truth in this astonishing story, which I got from an eye-witness.

Senator Flynn: It is to save energy.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have no knowledge of suède walls, whether in fabric form or "swayed" walls in architectural or engineering form. However, I shall take the question as notice and I shall make the appropriate inquiry. May I say, however, that some of the reports circulating today about alleged extravagances in ministerial and governmental offices are, in my view, somewhat exaggerated.

Senator Grosart: Have you been in all of them?

Senator Perrault: I shall certainly undertake an inquiry about the alleged suède walls in the offices of the Public Service Commission.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, last evening, after my presentation of the bill respecting United Grain Growers Limited, I was asked a question by Senator Paterson and another question by Senator Grosart regarding the structure of the company. Part of my reply was completely accurate, and I must thank my honourable colleague, Senator McNamara, for bringing the matter to my attention.

The company, in fact, is completely controlled by grain growers. The class B shares, which are the only voting shares, can only be held by active grain growers, bona fide farmers. Each one of those farmers has only one vote, regardless of the number of shares he may own.

There is a second class of shares, the class A shares. These are investment shares which can be purchased on the stock market, and which carry a dividend, but they carry no voting privileges. Class A shares, however, can be held by others than grain growers. There is a limit to the number of these shares which may be held by any one person. These are $20 par value shares and under the present limit one individual can hold only 2,500. The bill proposes an increase in these shares which have no voting rights.

So, the company, in fact, is controlled by grain growers, but others may purchase class A shares for investment purposes.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked yesterday concerning the opinion provided for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada by law officers of the Crown in respect of the Deschênes Report. I now have some information for honourable senators.

Upon receipt of the report prepared by Chief Justice Deschênes, the Minister of Justice immediately and forthwith referred it to the law officers of the Crown as was, in his view, his duty, obligation and responsibility as Attorney General.

The Minister of Justice had the letter of the Chief Justice reviewed by the law officers of the Crown to determine whether it disclosed any conduct constituting a willful intent to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice within the meaning of the Criminal Code or whether there was conduct interfering with the course of justice amounting, in law, to contempt. These, in fact, constitute the terms of reference provided for the law officers by the minister.

● (2010)

The Minister of Justice was advised subsequently that there was nothing disclosed in the letter of the Chief Justice which dictated the need for further action by the Minister of Justice in accordance with his duties under the law, and he then advised the Prime Minister.

I have confirmed that it is not the practice to table or to otherwise make public the written opinions provided by the law officers of the Crown for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the Leader of the Government if it was, in fact, a written opinion that the Minister of Justice received from the law officers?

Senator Perrault: It is my understanding that the opinion was in the form of a memorandum sent by the senior law officers of the Crown to the Minister of Justice.

Senator Flynn: My understanding is that the opinion sought was based exclusively on the letter from Chief Justice Deschênes.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have described in some detail the request submitted to the law officers of the Crown by the Minister of Justice, and I repeat it. "The question was whether it (the Deschênes report) disclosed any conduct constituting a willful intent to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice within the meaning of the Criminal Code or is conduct interfering with the course of justice amounting in law to contempt."

This is the reason why the Prime Minister has taken the position, and the government has taken the position, that based on this opinion there have been no illegalities—

(At this point the lights in the Senate Chamber went off for a brief period.)

I want to assure honourable senators that despite the brief blackout the Government of Canada pays its light bills.

Senator Flynn: It is quite obvious that the government closed its eyes to the other evidence that could have been secured, and asked only for an opinion on the Chief Justice's report, which was not a report requested of the Chief Justice as to any illegality by ministers because Chief Justice Deschênes said that he had nothing to say about the ministers, only about the reaction of the judges. I can see that the light went out on some part of the story.

Senator Langlois: We were as much in the dark as you were.

Senator Perrault: Certainly, the power failure reinforced the view that the Opposition may be the entity in the dark in this chamber.

Senator Flynn: It is your fault.

Senator Perrault: Seriously, if the honourable senator has any material which would justify a charge of illegality, by all means it should be made available to the appropriate sources so that appropriate action can be taken.

Senator Flynn: Is the government prepared to supply all the material it has?

Senator Smith (Colchester): The answer is no, I think.

Senator Asselin: Is the answer no?

COMMITTEES

NOTICE OF MEETING

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, before we proceed to other matters, may I make a brief announcement?

I invite the Leader of the Opposition, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, the Whips for both the government and the opposition, as well as all committee chairmen, to meet in my office after the Senate rises in order to review the plan which has been developed by Senator Bourget and his committee of senators for the operation of Senate committees. It should be a very brief meeting. I can report that excellent progress has been made during the past week, and it may be a useful meeting to have at this time.

Senator Grosart: It will not conflict with any other committee meeting at this time.

Senator Perrault: Yes, I hope that it does not conflict with any other committee meeting.

THE HONOURABLE ELSIE F. INMAN

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with reference to another matter concerning one of our colleagues, regretfully I must report that the Honourable Senator Inman is again in hospital—Kings County Memorial Hospital in Montague, Prince Edward Island. I know that all honourable senators join in wishing Senator Inman a speedy recovery.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Davey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, for the second reading of the Bill C-58, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act".—(Honourable Senator Lafond).

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I adjourned this debate in my capacity as Acting Whip of the government, and with leave I would yield to the Honourable Senator Manning.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Ernest C. Manning: Honourable senators, I will detain the house only briefly while I make a few comments on this bill, which has already been discussed quite fully in this chamber. Probably just about everything that needs to be said about it has already been said.

I did not have the opportunity to hear all the addresses that were given, but I was particularly impressed by the analysis of the bill made by Senator Hayden, and also by the address of Senator van Roggen. In fact, most of the points I had intended to make have been made in those two addresses, and others, and it is unnecessary to enlarge on them to any degree. It is my sincere hope that when this bill goes to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, the committee will be able to recommend some significant amendments which will overcome the objectionable features which cause concern to many of us.

The more one reads the bill and tries to assess its implications, the more difficult it is to escape the conclusion that it was motivated by a narrow, negative nationalism that is unworthy of the Parliament of Canada. What this does is make it impossible for Canadian advertisers, for economic reasons, to any longer use the publications affected by this bill, which are produced in the United States, or which, at least, have their base in the United States, such as Time magazine. The bill also will make it impossible for Canadian advertisers to use American television stations which they have been using, undoubtedly because they feel those stations reach a large section of the Canadian people, and which use, in their judgment as advertisers, represents the best use of their advertising dollar.

Leaving aside the valid arguments that can be advanced, such as protecting Canadian publishers, retaining money in Canada, and so on, this type of legislation represents a very serious interference in the legitimate decisions of advertisers as to where they should place their advertising to get the best value for their money. Of course, it can be argued that they can go on doing that, but this bill, by preventing them from deducting those costs as legitimate expenses for income tax purposes, will undoubtedly have the effect of reducing to a very large extent their use of the media that they have been accustomed to using.

We should perhaps be even more concerned with the indirect effect that this has on the Canadian public. When I say that this legislation is motivated by negative nationalism, it is because I sense behind this action another of the all too frequent instances in recent years of the government's trying to protect the Canadian people from themselves and from being influenced by the impact of publications and television programs coming in from the United States, which the government seems to think will undermine our Canadian identity and impair our Canadian culture. In my view, that type of argument is superficial and simply does not stand up. Surely the Canadian people are mature enough to decide for themselves whether they want to watch Canadian television programs or American television programs.

Perhaps the thinking behind this legislation stems from the fact that a number of recent surveys have indicated that a great many Canadians have a strong preference for American television programs. These stations, therefore, have a very large Canadian viewing audience, which, as I have indicated, makes them attractive to Canadian advertisers. I am sure many honourable senators saw a survey in this field which came out not long ago. It was interesting to note that of the fourteen top television programs that emerged in this survey, with the exception of two, one of which was a special production by the CBC and the other a special production by CTV, all the remaining programs with the largest viewing audiences in Canada were American productions. In my region of Canada, cable television has become very popular in the last few years, largely because Canadian viewers do desire to watch American programs.

In my view it is unrealistic, and extremely unwise on the part of the Canadian government, to follow a course which amounts to administering a slap in the face to American television stations and American publications, behind which is the erroneous assumption that by this kind of thing the culture of Canada can be protected and a greater Canadian identity developed. Canadians do not need that kind of protection. I believe we are mature enough to make our own decisions, and it is not the prerogative of government to interfere in matters of that kind.

I am not acquainted with the situation with respect to American television in the eastern and central parts of Canada, but I do know that on the west coast, as I am sure senators from that part of Canada will bear out, American television stations that are making a policy of beaming into Canada have gone a long way to do everything they could reasonably be expected to do to show themselves good corporate citizens in this country. They have established a Canadian identity; they have, for the most part, retained their Canadian revenue in this country; they have made vast capital expenditures in Canada for the provision of facilities in the area of public communications; they have encouraged Canadian artists, Canadian actors, Canadian writers and Canadian culture. However, simply because their base is outside the country, under this legislation they now face the loss of their advertising revenue, after having made large expenditures in Canada feeling that they were doing the proper thing as good corporate citizens.

In the matter of publications, those affected are pretty well down to Time magazine and, as several honourable senators have pointed out, it is very difficult to escape the conclusion that as far as Time is concerned the government's intention was to put it out of business. When Time agreed to the requirements as far as percentage of Canadian ownership and management was concerned, and even said they could live with a relatively high percentage of Canadian content, the minister kept on increasing the percentage until it was up to 80 per cent. This, of course, made it utterly impossible for the magazine to carry on its type of publication. I believe one honourable senator said that the indication was that if Time magazine had said it could live with 80 per cent Canadian content the minister would have raised the requirement to 100 per cent. The obvious objective was to get rid of Time magazine and to force Canadian advertisers to bonus mediocrity in the form of second-rate Canadian magazines which wanted to take the place of Time. Maclean's is, of course, the one that comes first to mind.

I suggest, honourable senators, that when we are dealing with a publication such as Time we know that people never bought Time magazine to obtain news and information with respect to Canada. They bought Time because it was a publication that had worldwide news-gathering facilities. It carried not only detailed information relating to geographic areas around the world, but also had a significantly large number of departments in which readers could gather information that was of interest and importance to them. To suggest to such a publication that it could carry on any semblance of its objective as a publication with 80 per cent Canadian content was utterly ridiculous. I doubt if many people bought Time magazine even to read the Canadian section, because all that section did primarily was to summarize in its own particular style the national events in this country, which are reported every day in our daily press, and of which we were all knowledgeable before we read of them in Time. The whole handling of this matter is incomprehensible. It is hard to understand why a government would become involved in a thing of this kind, which was so totally unnecessary and which naturally created the impression south of the line that Canada does not value a warm, cooperative relationship, in business or otherwise, with our neighbour. What other interpretation could be placed on this arbitrary, heavy-handed, crude way of dealing with this matter?

Personally, I like the suggestion made by Senator van Roggen, that any real problems that do exist in the matter of the impact of American television in Canada—and the same is true in the matter of Time magazine—the intelligent thing would have been to have appropriate representatives from each country sit down together and work out a treaty which would respect the interests and viewpoints of both countries. Certainly this legislation is not the way to deal with any problems that exist.

As I said at the outset, I do not want to delay the house, but I would like to make one brief comment with respect to another aspect. This, I am sure, has already been brought to the attention of honourable senators. You have undoubtedly received information regarding the excellent publication MD of Canada, approximately 30,000 copies of which are distributed free in this country to the medical profession. It is primarily a medical publication, but it is unique in that in addition to medical information it contains a large section devoted to the arts, culture and a broad range of interests of this type. MD of Canada points out that if they are denied the tax benefit that they have enjoyed in the past there is no way they can carry on this type of operation in Canada. I would put on the record part of a paragraph from a letter written by Dr. William Gibson, the distinguished Canadian physician who is editor of this publication. He makes what I consider a valid observation:

• (2030)

—advertising dollars which now go to MD of Canada will not as a result of Bill C-58 be re-directed to other publications for physicians. Those who now advertise in MD also advertise in all other publications directed to the same audience. It would be unreasonable to expect an advertiser, in the absence of MD of Canada, to place a second advertisement in a publication already carrying the same advertisement... most important, it is almost beyond possibility that a publication comparable to MD of Canada could be produced and operated successfully in Canada with only physicians in Canada as its audience. MD of Canada is produced by a staff of researchers and writers of great competence and skill, who have been associated with this particular publication for many years. The cost of producing and publishing any one issue is very high and, therefore, to operate this magazine must have an audience beyond that of only physicians in Canada.

Honourable senators, we can perhaps assume that when this legislation was drafted and passed in the other place no thought or consideration was given to its devastating impact on this kind of valuable publication. MD of Canada is just one more example of an excellent publication which will be put out of business if this bill is passed as worded.

Honourable senators, may I repeat the hope that the committee will recommend significant amendments to meet these valid concerns and objections to the bill, if in the committee's judgment it should not go so far as to kill the bill altogether.

Senator Flynn: Why not now?

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Manning a question? In his opinion does this legislation in any way, shape or form hinder the circulation in Canada of those portions of Time magazine, other than the Canadian section about which he spoke? I agree with his comments in that regard, but does the legislation in any way hinder the circulation in Canada of the balance of Time magazine?

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, no, of course, it does not interfere with it. As everyone knows, Time, having withdrawn the Canadian edition, is now selling the American edition in Canada, the only difference being the increase in price. It is now $1 instead of 75 cents.

The fact remains that Canadian advertisers are denied the use of that most widely-read publication, unless they pay the total cost of advertising without its being treated as a valid, deductible expense.

On motion of Senator McElman, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

REGULATIONS RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS—
MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 18, the debate on the motion of Senator Laird for the adoption of the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, which was presented on February 24, and on the motion in amendment thereto of Senator Côté, which was made on March 17.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Lafond: Honourable senators, I already spoke when the report was tabled so I will try to be as short as possible on this amendment.

My remarks at the report stage dealt specifically with the question of the organization of committees and the time when these committees met. I would like to commend the leaders of the government and of the opposition and their assistants who have made good progress during these few weeks, thanks particularly to the diligence of Senator Bourget who took on some responsibilities in this regard. I foresee brilliant success. I hope this will come within two or three weeks.

When the original motion was proposed by Senator Godfrey in May 1975, many of us thought that it was perhaps a little naive and untimely. We discussed it shortly and referred it to a committee. The committee produced its report. As Senator Godfrey himself said in reply to the proposed amendment, I also regret the decision of the committee contained in the first paragraph. However, I admit that the committee studied the problem carefully and proposed a sensible solution. Therefore I accept it.

Now, we are considering an amendment suggesting that the report be sent back to the committee and that they redraft paragraphs 2 and 3. I must say I readily accept these two paragraphs. If I said that last May some of us found Senator Godfrey's motion a little naive, I have the impression that some of us can now consider Senator Côté's motion as a little frivolous. I say this without any prejudice at all, because I understand very well the thinking on this subject of Senator Côté and Senator Robichaud, who seconded the motion, and very likely of several other members of this house who have served their political apprenticeship in an elective assembly where they were responsible to the electorate, where they have been raised politically and faced with this exclusive responsibility towards their constituents.

I do not support this amendment. I also invite my colleagues to reject it, because I believe it does not attack—not more and perhaps a little less than the initial motion moved by Senator Godfrey—the problems we are confronted with. Moreover, it seems to me that since I have come here we have never mentioned the core of the problem and neither did the press.

It is a manpower issue in the Senate. I shall not quote figures at all stages but recalling the basic question, let me remind you of this. In the Senate we have a total of 104 members all told. The other House has 60 per cent more members. However, our business is about the same, except for the estimates and certain financial issues, and our legislative business—I repeat—is quite the same, without the usual political considerations for which we do not blame the other place.

So we have approximately 40 per cent the number of members in the other house to do roughly the same work.

Senator Bourget: I am sorry to interrupt the honourable senator, but if he were to figure it out, he would notice it is far from 40 per cent, for we have 102 members and they have 264. So if you make the calculation you will find out it is over 200 per cent; they are two and a half times as many as we are. I am sorry for interrupting you.

Senator Lafond: Well, we are less than 40 per cent as compared to the other place.

Senator Flynn: He is right, it depends how you look at it.

Senator Lafond: However, of our total of 104 seats, on February 3 this year 12 were vacant. Talking about the reform of the Senate, Senator Croll mentioned the fact that we always have vacancies. It would seem that on the average between 10 and 15 per cent of our seats are vacant.

● (2040)

In addition, and that is unfortunate, the fact is that by the very nature of this Chamber, the average age is much higher than that in the other place. There is also the fact that, regrettably some of our colleagues are almost permanently disabled and are therefore in no position to contribute to the business of the Senate. What is more, some of our colleagues are ill off and on, reducing our work force further. Of the small number available, some are often or constantly called upon to represent Parliament on official business abroad or at home. That happened much oftener when we had—if you will allow me to say so—a minority government; then the government called much oftener on the members of the Senate to represent them abroad.

In addition, I have a feeling that some honourable senators accepted their appointment to the Senate with the idea, if not the resolution—which they may have made a habit of by now—of devoting to the Senate maybe one, two or three weeks out of four. Some of our colleagues also have to assume, for the political parties they represent, rather heavy duties. I know whereof I speak because, in the last three or four years, I was one of them.

[Senator Lafond.]

Still, it seems to me, considering all that—though I have no figures for each category—and in spite of that, the daily business of the Senate goes on. The Senate must work in spite of everything. In addition to our business in the Senate, and with a small number of really active senators, let us not forget that we have to supply the manpower, the attendance, men and women, the senators to sit on nine standing committees, two special committees, four joint committees and two special joint committees. All this takes manpower but, from the figures I just quoted, it can be imagined how many senators remain to handle the Senate's routine business. It seems to me that in some cases they are the victims of some unfair treatment.

The key problem is not who records the attendance, whether it be someone from our staff or not. The key problem is not to know who does the checking. It is only a matter of remembering, in our daily prayers, to whatever God, whatever our religion may be, that part of our commission that is the essential requirement we endorsed, the requirement upon which was predicated our acceptance of the Senate summons.

I would quote once more that part of our commission which, in my view, we should remember daily. It goes like this:

AND WE do command you, that all difficulties and excuses whatsoever laying aside, you be and appear for the purposes aforesaid, in the Senate of Canada at all times whensoever and wheresoever.

That in my view is the crux of the matter. If we were numerous enough to honour the obligation we undertook when we were summoned to the Senate, the amendment moved by Senator Côté then becomes ineffective and useless.

Senator Côté: I should like to put a question to Senator Lafond. He may find it very easy to suggest that certain motions are naive and others frivolous, but is he not aware that the committee report referred only to attendance in this house? This had nothing to do with committee attendance. All Senator Lafond mentioned is committee attendance as opposed to attendance in this house. Do you not think you are completely beside the subject?

Senator Lafond: Not at all. I believe I addressed myself as much to Senate attendance as to committee attendance.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Having worked for many years with my old friend, Senator Lafond, I regret not being able to support his point of view.

It seems to me it would be to the advantage of the Senate to return this proposal to the committee. My opinion is that several questions were not really investigated enough, particularly as regards the distance problem. That is a question which senators must resolve for themselves I suppose. Nevertheless, it is extremely important if we are to do our duty as representatives of regions. I think for instance of our new colleague Senator Lucier from Whitehorse in the Yukon. Everyone should take a minute to imagine how long it takes him to get to Ottawa. I did not ask him but he surely can tell us himself and I suspect it takes him at least a whole day if not two.

Then is Senator Lucier in the same position as another senator who lives in Ottawa? Not at all. It seems to me that the committee must carefully examine this matter. If we are given the choice, shall we go and live in our own region and keep in touch with the people we are supposed to represent? Shall we do our work as regional representatives or shall we all come and live in Ottawa?

I for one do not think we should all come and live in Ottawa, because I suggest that a senator would then fail to assume his responsibilities and would not really be in touch as he should be, I would suggest, with the people he represents.

Therefore, I think that the committee must consider the matter on a much wider scale than it has been able to do until now. Moreover, when I refer to Senator Lucier, you probably know that there are many other senators who are living much closer to Ottawa, at a distance of 100, 200 or 300 miles but who, because of a lack of transportation or accessibility, may endure the same difficulty.

So I suggest it would be very useful for the Senate to examine this whole matter in depth. Frankly speaking, I have no excuse to offer for those who should be here and are not. No way. We have been appointed here to accomplish a task. On the other hand, we have to admit that when it comes to accomplishing this task there are many differences between those who live somewhere very near and those who cannot reach Ottawa easily.

I would not like—and I know that the press can in this case present the facts in a very difficult manner—to indicate that senators do not want controls, that they want no part of a responsibility system, etc. However, with these risks in mind, it seems to me that the committee should re-examine the matter and determine how senators can better do their duty, better represent the public and take care of their responsibilities, which in their area are often quite legitimate, while doing their duty in the Senate.

For my part, I believe we should take the matter back to the committee and let it examine further all the issues which concern representation here in the Senate.

● (2050)

[English]

Hon. George C. van Roggen: Honourable senators, I had not intended speaking to this matter but I feel constrained so to do following the remarks of Senator Lafond and Senator Molgat. I come from not as far as Whitehorse, as Senator Lucier must do, or from Nanaimo, as Senator Bell must do, but twice as far as Senator Molgat comes to attend in the Senate.

I should like to start, without sounding self-serving, by saying that I have no apology whatsoever to my conscience or anyone in Canada for the manner in which I have applied myself to my duties as a senator since being appointed to this chamber, and the time I spend here and in British Columbia on matters directly related to the Senate and its business.

The committee report makes no allowance whatsoever for distance of travel, as I understand the report.

Senator Grosart: It does.

Senator Flynn: It is not relevant.

Senator van Roggen: I am sorry, senator, I did not hear you.

Senator Flynn: I said that distance is not relevant to the report.

Senator Grosart: It has nothing to do with the report.

Senator van Roggen: It has insofar as I am concerned. I am going to develop my reasons for that in a moment.

I put it to honourable senators that if a senator from as far away as Vancouver endeavours, as I have, to come here for three weeks a month to attend to government business, and then crowd public business in Vancouver into the fourth week, he is in a far different position from those senators who just come from a half hour's distance away. I would not be serving my constituents better by simply moving to Ottawa and living here. It would then be impossible, as Senator Molgat pointed out, to look after the interests of British Columbia or stay in touch with the situation in British Columbia.

If I have occasion to do government business of any nature whatsoever in British Columbia on the Tuesday of that fourth week, when I try to arrange these matters and crowd them into that one week, does this mean that I should fly eight hours in order to be here on the Wednesday and fly back another eight hours on the Thursday?

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the honourable senator has read the report. The report says nothing about any of the things he is mentioning. The report merely asks why a senator is away, and says nothing else.

Senator van Roggen: What should I say I was doing on the Wednesday or Thursday, if I was busy in Vancouver on the Tuesday? Am I to make up a story, or fly all the way here, at a great expense to the taxpayers of Canada, on Wednesday and fly all the way home again on Thursday?

Senator Grosart: Why not?

Senator van Roggen: You ask why not, Senator Grosart. I say to you that that is gross stupidity, a waste of the taxpayers' money and a ridiculous proposition. This, after all, is a country 5,000 miles in breadth. The capital happens to be in Ottawa, and we have to recognize the fact that we do not all live in Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa.

Senator Flynn: I suggest to the honourable senator that he could send a letter saying, "I could not be present on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday because I had to be in Vancouver on Wednesday." It is as simple as that.

Senator van Roggen: I understand perfectly that if I have to be in Vancouver on a Wednesday, then I cannot be here on the Tuesday and Thursday.

Senator Flynn: You could not be here on the Wednesday either.

Senator van Roggen: I gave a specific example of having government business in Vancouver on a Tuesday. Theoretically, I could get a flight on Wednesday morning, and be here Wednesday evening. I would miss the Wednesday sitting, but I would be able to attend for two hours on the Thursday afternoon before we adjourned, at which time I would travel home again.

I submit that the committee has not considered this matter adequately insofar as this particular aspect is concerned. I support the amendment for the sole purpose of having the report referred back to the committee for consideration of this type of problem. I do not, with respect, think that those who have to travel great distances have been given adequate consideration.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 24, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Canadian Transport Commission for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 28(2) of the National Transportation Act, Chapter N-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 22 of the Ministries and Ministers of State Act, Part IV of Chapter 42, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Lists of Census Commissioners appointed as of March 17, 1976, for the 1976 Census of Canada.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976, and I would ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of today and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix p. 1948.)

The Clerk Assistant (Reading):

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st of March 1976 were referred, has in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, March 3rd, 1976 examined the said Estimates and reports as follows: 1. In obedience to the foregoing, the Committee made a general examination of supplementary estimates (B) and heard evidence from the Honourable J. Chrétien, President of Treasury Board, Mr. B. A. MacDonald, Deputy Secretary and Mr. R. L. Richardson, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch, Treasury Board.

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Sparrow moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN COINS

REPORTED CHANGE IN DESIGN—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question arising out of something that appeared in a letter in the Globe and Mail yesterday, from a gentleman describing himself as Visual Arts Head, Central High School of Commerce, Toronto. He says:

I understand from a recent article on coins that the government may change the fronts and/or backs of the present currency in 1977.

He then adds:

Some of the controversy seems to revolve around the use of the Queen's head—

And then he goes on with other matters which are not pertinent to my inquiry.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government could give us any information on any plans that are being made for changing the coins and, in particular, anything that the government may have in mind, absit omen, à Dieu ne plaise—I can add, God forbid—any plans the government may have in mind for removing Her Majesty's head from coins?

Senator Perrault: I know of no plans to remove the portrait of Her Majesty from the coins of Canada. Certainly one plan current for the coinage of this country is to improve its purchasing power. However, I shall take the question as notice and endeavour to provide a more helpful reply.

COMMITTEES

IMPLEMENTATION OF NEW SCHEDULE OF MEETINGS

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to inform the house that the schedule for meetings of Senate committees, which has been developed by the coordinating committee chaired by the Honourable Senator Bourget, will be operative during the week of April 4. This date has been set as a result of consultation with the Acting Director of the Committees Branch, who advises that plans are already set by the various committees for the week of March 28. It is felt that honourable senators would like, however, to have this information. Again may I say that the evolution of this schedule has been possible only through the best possible kind of co-operation, not only from the chairmen of the various committees but from all honourable senators, including our friends in the loyal opposition.

• (1410)

With respect to another matter, may I say that it is good to see more light on the Opposition side of the chamber this afternoon.

Senator Flynn: But again it is not your fault.

Senator Buckwold: It is not your fault either.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, this has been a very interesting debate, but up to this point a very one-sided one.

Senator Flynn: As it should.

Senator McElman: I will get to you in a moment, Senator Flynn.

By my count, there has been one speaker really in favour of the bill, the sponsor, Senator Davey, whom I congratulate on a detailed and persuasive presentation, and there have been nine speakers who have shown, I guess one could say, something less than enthusiasm for the bill. As one who supports the bill and is in favour of its principle—

Senator Flynn: Bravo! At long last.

Senator McElman: —you will perhaps permit me to make the dreadful pun that this debate has a bit of “pro” and a lot of “con.” In view of the imbalance of the debate thus far, you will perhaps lend me your patience for a bit longer than one would normally take.

Some of the statements made in the debate have been quite astounding to me. I have formed the habit of watching the Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Jacques Flynn, for his reaction during debate, and I sensed, perhaps inaccurately, that he, too, has been astounded by some of the comments made by some senators. I admire Senator Flynn, not only for his usual affable personality but also for his shrewdness as a debater and a tactician. He also has given frequent evidence of having a very long and accurate memory, and I sense it is that fact which may have motivated him, I suggest, very shrewdly, to stay out of this debate.

Senator Flynn: The debate is not over yet.

Senator McElman: I appreciate that, and I am still hoping.

Senator Smith (Colchester): He is just waiting for game that is big enough.

Senator McElman: Senator Flynn undoubtedly remembers well the debates in the Senate and the House of Commons of June 1965.

Senator Flynn: I do.

Senator McElman: I am sure you do. I am referring to the debate on Bill C-118 at that time, which was in truth the mother of this legislation, Bill C-58.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Flynn: A first mistake does not excuse a second one.

Senator McElman: I suspect that if Senator O’Leary were here with us today—and I truly wish he were—he would say that Bill C-118 of 1965 was a mother who had compromised her principles, and I would agree with him.

Senator Asselin: Was it a good mother?

Senator McElman: That earlier bill, Bill C-118, was entitled an act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, and it established the principle on which this bill is founded. The debate on that bill in both houses, in the media and the country, waxed hot. The minority Pearson government was in office. The government was under great pressure from diverse factions over Bill C-118 as well as other issues. A general election was in the wind and, indeed, it came about four months later, on November 8 of that year.

I think those things are worth stating at this point because they are related to what we are considering today. A goodly number of senators who are here today were in Parliament at that time and some of them who intervened in this debate would seem to have forgotten their involvement in 1965.

Senator McIlraith was President of the Privy Council and Government House Leader in the Commons when Bill C-118 was piloted through there. Senator Hayden was then, as now, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and also the sponsor in the Senate of the bill on second reading.

Senator Cook, Senator Walker and Senator Beaubien, who have spoken in this debate, were also on that committee at that time. Senator O’Leary and Senator Flynn carried the debate on this bill in the house, and the opposition to one particular aspect of it in both the house and in committee. In recent days, I have been reading the debates of both houses on that occasion. I would urge other senators who, like myself, were not here at that time, to do the same in order to get Bill C-58 in proper perspective.

I wish to use a number of quotations from those debates today. In this current debate, several honourable senators have spoken glowingly and perhaps, one could almost say, patriotically of Time Canada being a Canadian magazine. They have quoted others to support the view that it was, indeed, the best Canadian magazine.

Senator Flynn: That is what Senator Davey said in his report.

Senator McElman: Let me call a witness to the contrary. I would quote the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, as reported at page 2425 in the Debates of the House of Commons of June 15, 1965. He said:

Well, what about Time magazine? Read Time magazine week by week. As the hon. gentleman who preceded me said, it masquerades as Canadian but it has only four or six pages of Canadian news in the Canadian edition. Canadian? Read the articles, and read the degree to which, week by week, Time magazine views Canadian problems from the point of view of the government of the day. Is the government fearful of the control of Canadian thinking by another country? On the occasion when I visited Commonwealth countries, Mr. Chairman, I found one item in Time magazine during that entire trip which had to do with Canada, and it was in miscellany. Canada gets less attention than does a republic with a population of 300,000.

That was John Diefenbaker and, honourable senators, on that subject I agree with him.

I would now quote from Senate Hansard of June 28, 1965, at page 281. The speaker was Senator Grattan O'Leary, one of the finest journalists Canada has ever produced, and Chairman of the Royal Commission on Publications of 1960 and 1961. I would say he is an expert witness. He said:

... I do want to deal briefly with what are known as Canadian editions represented by Time magazine and Reader's Digest.

A Canadian edition, so-called, is a periodical whose editorial content is lifted in whole or in large part, from a parent edition outside Canada, and then used in Canada to attract Canadian advertising. In other words, outside or foreign editorial matter is dumped into Canada—in fact, is dumped into Canada in a way that adds up to the most vicious form of dumping.

The truth is that the printing of "Canadian editions" is not a publishing endeavour at all; it is an importing business. Businessmen discovered that editorial material developed for foreign markets could be re-used as a structure to entice Canadian advertising. With a product already paid for by a market ten times larger and twelve times wealthier, the businessman need only set up offices for the solicitation of advertising. And that is exactly what was done.

● (1420)

As Benjamin Franklin wrote so many years ago in his Advice to a Young Tradesman, "time is money." He was well ahead of his time. Others have since added to that, "and money is power."

Emerson, in his Society in Solitude also wrote words that would be echoed by those Canadian periodicals which have been either bankrupted or diminished by Time Canada's unwanted, or, rather, unwarranted advantage over them.

Senator Flynn: "Unwanted," I think is correct.

Senator McElman: Emerson wrote: "The surest poison is time."

Senator O'Leary said much more in 1965 on this whole subject and I will quote further from his remarks later. But last evening Senator Manning further diminished the proposition that Time Canada was a Canadian magazine when he said that one did not read Time for its so-called Canadian section but rather for its greater content, giving a view of world affairs. Senator Manning was "right on" with those comments. He recognized Time Canada for exactly what it is: an American magazine giving an American viewpoint of world affairs. There is nothing wrong with that, and most of us do enjoy reading it. But the masquerade that it is really Canadian should certainly be removed and forgotten.

Before dealing with some of the other fantasies which have been developed, let me turn to what has become the nub of this question, as identified by some honourable senators.

Some have said that they are concerned with the principle of the bill; a very few have suggested that they will vote against second reading, which is, of course, approval in principle and not in administrative detail. The only trouble is that there have been almost as many interpretations of the principle as there have been speakers. Some obviously believe the bill to be without principle. The latter are very close to the truth, but in a sense other than they intended.

Bill C-58 does not, nor does it seek to, establish a new principle in law. Clauses 1 and 2 of the bill seek to restore to its fullness the principle established in Bill C-118 in 1965. It was established then, but then in the same bill subverted and compromised by the exemption, under the act, from the application of the principle to Time and Reader's Digest.

In my view this bill is a courageous and mature move to recover from that demeaning debacle of 1965. This bill says nothing about the required level of ownership of newspapers and periodicals, although one senator appeared to suggest that this bill would set that level at 75 per cent and then went on to state, "Whether that Canadian control should be 55 per cent or 75 per cent is not particularly important." Well, the requirement of 75 per cent ownership was established in 1965 in the early bill and remains unchanged. It is not in this bill. I would add that it is not only particularly important but is extremely important when dealing with the mass communications media of a nation.

This bill says nothing about the requirement that a Canadian newspaper or periodical cannot be accepted or operated under licence by its parent in the foreign country. That, too, was established in the law of 1965. This bill does not say that in order to be considered under the law as a Canadian issue a periodical must be printed, published and edited in Canada, and that its content must not be substantially the same as the content of one or more foreign periodicals. Those details of law were established with the passage of Bill C-118 in 1965. They each form part of a principle. They were the mechanics of implementing, or giving effect to, that principle. The principle that was then enunciated in law was best expressed by Senator O'Leary when, on June 28, 1965, at page 280 of Hansard, he quoted from the report of his royal commission as follows:

Our sole purpose has been to find a way to guarantee for Canadians their own communications media.

That guarantee, we are convinced, is vital. For while Canada and the United States may have the same basic cultures, they each at the same time have domestic and other tasks and problems—political, social and economic—which differ widely. Canada's particular responsibilities, her government, her constitutional structure, her ideals and aspirations, her memories and milestones, even her discords, are facts in her existence which cannot be approached understandingly or usefully by communications media owned or controlled in another country, even though that country be friendly. Only a truly Canadian printing press, one with the "feel" of Canada... can give us the critical analysis, the informed discourse and dialogue which are indispensable in a sovereign society.

Senator O'Leary went on to say:

Our sole aim was to try to secure a climate of competition in which Canadian publications, serving Canada worthily in a vital area, should have a chance to survive.

That principle, so well enunciated, and so well expressed, in Bill C-118 of 1965 was immediately subverted by the exemption from it that was granted to Time and Reader's Digest. This exemption was not a matter of principle; it was a matter of government policy, and, I suspect, expediency, arrived at under the most extreme and, I suggest, improper pressure from outside Canada.

Let me call again upon Senator O'Leary. At page 282 of Senate Hansard of June 28, 1965, he gave his commission's definition of what should be considered a Canadian periodical. It included:

—not a licensee of or otherwise substantially the same as a periodical owned or controlled outside Canada.

Senator O'Leary went on to say:

And our main recommendation on that basis was... that the deduction from income by a taxpayer of expenditures incurred for advertising directed at the Canadian market in a foreign periodical, wherever printed, be disallowed.

I ask you to note that the only interest affected by this recommendation was the businessman who dumps cheaply obtained editorial matter on the domestic market, thus diverting by cut-rate prices Canadian domestic advertising from Canadian media. But the right to own a press, and to print and distribute from it whatever is permissible under the law, was in no way trespassed. The commission's recommendations involved no regulation of the preparation, content or free-flow of the editorial material of foreign periodicals; the reader was in no way denied the periodical of his choice.

Neither is he today.

Honourable senators, I ask you to note clearly what has happened. What has happened is that the government, by this legislation that is proposed here tonight (June 28, 1965) and approved by the Commons, has accepted the principle of our commission's recommendations, and then proceeded to make a mockery of the principle—to strangle the principle in its cradle.

They say that deduction from income by a taxpayer of expenditures for advertising in a foreign periodical shall be disallowed; but then, almost in the next breath, they go on to exempt Time and Reader's Digest, the two principal perils to Canadian citizenship, for the practical purposes of this law, upon Mr. Henry Luce of New York City, and upon Mr. Dewit Wallace of Pleasantville, New York. These two gentlemen, owners of the so-called Canadian editions I have been describing, are in effect issued Canadian passports—given a green light to go ahead with their destruction of our Canadian periodicals.

[Senator McElman.]

• (1490)

A bit further on, in referring to these two, he said that "they"—meaning the government—"have locked the hen-coop door, but they have left two of the biggest foxes inside."

Then he went on to say:

Honourable senators, this law was not for the purpose of protecting Canadian magazines and periodicals from American magazines that are not here. This law was to protect Canadian magazines from American competition which is here. But instead of doing that, they protect and perpetuate the two magazines which have brought about the destruction in our magazine industry, which I have already noted, and which in a few years, if I know what I am talking about, will have a more deadly effect than now.

And how right he was, honourable senators!

Then Senator O'Leary explained what damage the power and unfair advantage exercised by Time and Reader's Digest had brought to the Canadian magazine industry at that time. He said:

I might add that since then—since our report—these two magazines, these two so-called Canadian editions, are now taking about 50 per cent of all consumer magazine advertising.

In all, 15 of our periodicals publishing over 10 million copies a year have gone under between 1960 and 1965. I repeat that 15 of our periodicals publishing over 10 million copies a year have gone under between 1960 and 1965. When our commission was set up, nine magazines were regarded as being national. One died during the inquiry, and four have died since—two English and two French—and the total circulation has fallen from 3.5 million to 2.5 million.

Even more disastrous is the revenue picture. Advertising revenue of Canadian periodicals has dropped $8 million, from $17 million to $9 million, or by 45 per cent. But, in the meantime, the Canadian editions, so-called, have had a gain of 26 per cent in circulation, and a gain in advertising of 2 per cent.

That was in the period from 1960 to 1965, and as all honourable senators are aware, and as it was explained statistically by Senator Davey recently, the situation has not improved during the period from 1965 to 1975.

Then Senator O'Leary turned his attention to the influence exercised by Mr. Henry Luce through the United States State Department. Mr. Luce had great influence at that time and Canada felt the brunt of it. Senator O'Leary said of that situation:

There is the statement of the United States Under Secretary Ball, and of the Secretary of the Treasury, Dillon, in which they practically threatened retaliation if this measure were passed. I say to you that Ottawa has been placed in this ludicrous and false position of introducing legislation of this character, by pressure from Washington. I do not think there is any shadow of doubt about it; and if you read what members of the Liberal press are saying, you will see that they go even further than I do.

Honourable senators, in conclusion, I say with all the earnestness I can command, that if this house votes for this legislation it will be voting for the proposition that Washington has a right to interfere in a matter of purely Canadian concern, and voting a probable death sentence on Canada's periodical press, with all that that can entail for our future voyage through history.

Honourable senators may recall that occasion as being not one of the proudest moments in Canadian history. We must also recall, however, that there was at the time an embattled minority government and an election only months away. Honourable senators who have claimed that Bill C-58 is an unfriendly act and an irritant will, I am sure, wish to remember this incident as an example of what really constitutes an unfriendly, unwarranted and irritating act by a neighbour.

But there is no need to live in fear of the United States. Times, not Time, have changed. They have really changed in the past ten years, and Mr. Luce and his great influence are gone. Many things have occurred to bring change to the attitude of the U.S. State Department and, indeed, the Executive, towards matters both internal and external—Viet Nam, Chile, Watergate, and publicized CIA activities and interference, both domestically and with internal affairs of foreign nations. All of these and other events have caused the American people increasingly to tell their government that might is not necessarily right; it is the American people who tell their government, not us. The result has been a shift of power back again from the Executive to Congress, which is good, and consequently to the people through their elected representatives.

I bring this viewpoint into the debate only because others have suggested that we should fear reprisals if this bill, as an irritant, were to pass into law. The United States is a great, generous and increasingly responsible nation and is not about to repeat a mistake of 1965, and I would suggest that Henry Kissinger is not about to come to Ottawa as an emissary of Time magazine.

In that debate of 1965, Senator Flynn was an active and forceful participant. He supported fully the speech of Senator O'Leary and then referred to the exemption for Time and Reader's Digest as follows:

I say that in that way the government has completely destroyed the principle it intended to lay down in paragraph 1 of section 4.

He continued:

I will certainly introduce an amendment to eliminate paragraph (2) of section 4, if others do not beat me to it. I hope that the committee will agree to recognize that Time and Reader's Digest certainly do not need charity and that we must not sacrifice beforehand the objective we endeavour to reach, in granting them this unjustified and unjustifiable special treatment.

And again I agree. Senator Flynn did, in fact, move his amendment in committee and, predictably, it was lost on straight party lines.

It should be said here that throughout that debate of 1965 the Opposition, spearheaded magnificently by Senator O'Leary and Senator Flynn, were united and adamant in their stand against the exemption for Time and Reader's Digest and, honourable senators, they were right.

Senator Flynn: In 1965.

Senator Lamontagne: Not always.

Senator McElman: The principle has not changed, senator. What they failed to accomplish then, the government now proposes in this Bill C-58. I congratulate the Opposition for their 20/20 foresight of 1965. It would appear, however, that several of their number who have spoken in this debate have now developed 40/40 hindsight, but they can take some comfort in the knowledge that they are obviously not alone; others have switched.

Having mentioned my very good friend Senator Beaubien, I would congratulate him on the tremendous vigour with which he delivered his usually pro-American remarks of the other evening. Let me say, in the very best of good humour, that as he reached the crescendo, I waited for the punch line that did not come. His last sentence surely should have been, "This bill is positively un-American."

● (1440)

Honourable senators, I will conclude my quotations from the 1965 debate with the remarks of Senator Hayden. In dealing with the propriety of the government's granting or withholding the deduction of advertising costs for income tax purposes, he said:

What has been done by saying that a taxpayer who advertises in a non-Canadian publication is not entitled in certain circumstances to a deduction from his tax of the amount of money spent in this way, is completely within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament because a deduction from income tax otherwise payable lies within the legislative right of the federal Parliament, which can say what amount shall be paid. Therefore the Government is on very strong, firm, legal ground in making that approach. Whether that sanction is too arbitrary is a matter of opinion. A sanction to have any value must be such that its violation will hurt the person violating it. In our method of operation I am not sure that persuasive sanctions work too well.

Honourable senators, I would interject here that 20 years of trying unsuccessfully to persuade Time and Reader's Digest to become truly Canadian periodicals is confirmation of the doubts expressed by Senator Hayden, who made this further remark:

It has been suggested that such a sanction may be an interference with the freedom of the press. That, in my view, is nonsensical.

He closed his remarks, in sponsoring second reading of Bill C-118, with the following remarks:

Once we accept the view, as we have in this Parliament, by the terms of the Broadcasting Act, which deals with another method of communication, and once we accept that it is important that the viewpoint or the approach to those publications should keep in mind the consideration that such means of communication should be dealt with in terms of Canadian viewpoint and Canadian education, then we must take whatever means are necessary to achieve that result. As I have said, I do not know whether this is the best sanction available to us, but I have not heard of any others that even approach its value to assure the desired results.

Honourable senators, I hope I shall be pardoned for those extensive quotations from speeches by Senator O'Leary, Senator Flynn and Senator Hayden.

Senator Flynn: I do.

Senator McElman: I guess, senator, you are the one whose pardon I need at this point. However, they expressed so well the views I have held for years respecting Time Canada and Reader's Digest, and they expressed them so much better than I could.

Permit me to pose some situations which could be analogous to what we have permitted Time and Reader's Digest to do under the exemption privileges.

Let us take the hypothetical case of an American-owned subsidiary in the textile business in Sherbrooke, Quebec. It gains access to a continuing supply of dirt-cheap surplus production of bleached, finished textiles; it brings them into Canada in vast quantities, and employs a few Canadians to dye them in four colours—not four pages, but four colours—and to wrap and label them for the marketplace, as Time magazine has done. It can sell them pretty cheaply and very profitably, and so take away the market and the customers of two other textile businesses in Sherbrooke that are Canadian-owned and which employ hundreds of Canadians in a full textile operation with a much higher cost of production.

What should Canada do in such a case of dumping? Does this not remind us of Time's four Canadian pages and its labeled wrapper designating it as Time Canada?

Let us transpose that to the shoe manufacturing industry, and assume that an American-owned subsidiary brought in completed, good quality, surplus production—cheaply obtained shoes completed, that is, except for the punching of four eye-holes in each shoe and the insertion of laces, which Canadians would be permitted to do in Sherbrooke or elsewhere. Would we permit Canadian-owned competitors to go belly-up financially with the consequent unemployment and social dislocation? I think not.

Senator Flynn: Why not charge customs duty on editorial material? You should try that. That would be logical.

Senator McElman: Very logical. In such hypothetical cases as I have given we do protect Canadian industry and Canadian employment, but we have not with Time and Reader's Digest up to this point.

Senator Flynn: Why don't you charge customs duty on the importation of intellectual material?

Senator McElman: I am giving you a hypothetical case, which cannot happen because we protect against it, but we do not protect against Time—that is, we have not until now.

Senator Flynn: I suggest you have no imagination.

Senator Desruisseaux: Before the honourable senator goes on—

Senator McElman: Let us take the big jump. Perhaps the honourable senator will have patience.

Senator Desruisseaux: I wish merely to ask a question.

[Senator McElman.]

Senator McElman: That is fine.

Senator Desruisseaux: The hypothetical cases you mention can be solved in many ways and not in only one. I would ask: Are there not a number of answers to that?

Senator McElman: Doubtless there are. We have one before us.

Let us take a big jump into Windsor, Senator Laird's home town. I know we have the auto agreement, but let us forget that for the moment.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Oh yes.

Senator McElman: These are just hypotheses. In Windsor we have one of the Big Four auto makers, a great subsidiary of the American parent, which suddenly decides it has productive capacity in the United States far in excess of its share of the U.S. market and sufficient to also supply its share of the Canadian market. So it sends over to the Windsor subsidiary cars that are complete, except for the tires and a paint job. Canadians can install the tires and paint the cars, which can then be called Canadian cars, and we can tell the American-owned subsidiary that it is a good Canadian corporate citizen.

Since American production costs are still 6 per cent below ours, that company would probably increase its share of the Canadian market. We certainly would not want to "twist the American elephant's tail" by demanding an immediate end to such a practice, particularly if some of our American friends told us we were being "unfriendly," "irritating" and "picky" about it all; or if someone said, "Gosh, we have been doing that for 20 years. We are the only one of the big four getting away with it. Surely you would not want to stop us now, because we are your buddies."

I know Senator Laird and I admire him for his resourcefulness and ability, and particularly for his lifetime dedication to the people of Windsor. In such a situation I suggest to you that he would really raise hell—and so would all other Ontario and Toronto members in both houses, and so would all of us here. But, honourable senators, all we are talking about in those hypothetical situations is jobs—employment.

Senator Flynn: Not here.

Senator McElman: When we talk about the media—

Senator Flynn: You are talking about Canadian culture.

• (1450)

Senator McElman: When we talk about the media of mass communications in this country, we are not only talking about jobs, but something far more important—an independent, truly Canadian press, which, in the words of Senator O'Leary, is "indispensable in a sovereign society."

Senator Flynn: Culture and jobs are not always the same thing.

Senator McElman: We would all say that the hypothetical cases to which I have referred could not happen and would not happen; that, of course, the Government of Canada would not let them happen, no matter what it had to do to avoid such situations. In the same vein, I suggest we should now pass this bill and stop the same sort of thing happening in the Canadian periodical industry.

Senator Smith (Colchester): You were doing a lot better when you quoted from Senator Flynn.

Senator McElman: Well, I thought he was perhaps head-on with Senator O'Leary, and I do not pretend to be in the same class as either one of them, or, indeed, yourself, Senator Smith.

Senator Flynn: For a while, you were doing all right.

Senator McElman: If Bill C-58 passes, not only will Time still be available in Canada—it is still available now—but it will still be in business in Canada at the same old stand, churning out half a million copies a week for Canadian readers. The only difference is that the Canadian-made wrapper, the four or so pages dealing with Canadian news and events, has been dropped, thereby dispensing with the myth that it ever was a truly Canadian magazine. Not only is Time still publishing in Canada, it is, we are told through the media, publishing nine regional editions and is still selling Canadian advertising. One really cannot believe that it is doing so out of the goodness of its heart. I suggest that it is doing it for the same reason—profit—which is perfectly logical and legitimate.

Paper is cheaper at its locations in Canada, and paper is the largest element of cost in a pure printing operation. Other printing costs are also cheaper in Canada, as are postal rates. Also, the American parent's editorial content is still dumped into Canada at no cost. Given those facts, why would it be foolish enough to move its printing operation to the United States?

The most revealing fact in the continuing operation of Time in Canada is that it has reduced its advertising rate to Canadian advertisers by 50 per cent. It has cut its advertising rates to Canadian advertisers in half. Despite the proposed effect of Bill C-58, Canadian advertisers will still be able to advertise in Time at the same overall cost as previously.

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator McElman: That is a rather amazing revelation.

Senator Asselin: No, no.

Senator McElman: We now really know what an extraordinary profit-making operation Time has had all these years in Canada—

Senator Asselin: You are mistaken.

Senator McElman:—through the simple act, as Senator O'Leary said, of dumping into Canada all the cost-free editorial content of its U.S. parent, which gave it an unbeatable and unfair advantage over existing and prospective Canadian competitors in the periodical publishing field.

This one act by Time is proof positive that it has constituted grossly unfair competition in Canada, and that it was taking unconscionably high profits out of its operations in Canada. No further comment is necessary on that score.

The further fact that Time is now increasing its subscription rate to Canadian subscribers by 66½ per cent, while at the same time reducing its advertising rate to Canadian advertisers by 50 per cent, says something about Time's sense of values, and also its very determined sense of purpose.

It is my opinion that Time has no intention of leaving Canada. I believe that as soon as the smoke and dust settle, Time will undertake to meet the specifications required for recognition under the Income Tax Act as a Canadian periodical, as it is quite capable of doing, in my opinion, and as it is quite welcome to do.

Senator Flynn: What will be the end result?

Senator McElman: If that should be, Time would then be on the same footing as all other Canadian periodicals and, for the first time, it would be competing without the benefit of unfair advantage under Canadian law.

With respect to Reader's Digest—

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is a little tougher.

Senator McElman:—it has been suggested that Time and Reader's Digest are identical situations, and that the one is being treated harshly while the other is receiving preferred treatment. I do not agree. Time is a news magazine and is published weekly. Its content is news. Its time-frame for publication of news makes the criteria of being "not substantially the same" as its parent publication, admittedly, difficult, but not insurmountable. Reader's Digest is not a news magazine. As its name suggests, it is, for the most part, a digest of material already published elsewhere. It publishes monthly, not weekly, and its deadlines are much less onerous than those of a weekly news magazine. By reason of its different content and different time-frame for publication, Reader's Digest finds it much easier to meet the proposed requirements under the Income Tax Act, as given effect to by Bill C-58.

Reader's Digest has chosen to meet the proposed requirements and to become a Canadian publication, and that is good. By so doing, it will, for the first time, be treated exactly the same as any existing or prospective digest in Canada, and will no longer enjoy special benefits or special privileges.

It must be remembered that under the proposed amendments contained in Bill C-58, Canadian advertisers wishing to solicit a primarily United States market for their products or services may still deduct such advertising expenditures as expenses for income tax purposes. There is no change in that respect. For example, many New Brunswick outfitters for fishing and hunting camps advertise widely in American newspapers and periodical for clients, or "sports," as they are called locally, and they will continue to do so and to deduct such expenditures when calculating income tax. I am sure there are many similar situations across Canada.

It should also be remembered that in 1965, when the original amendments in this area were made to the law, the full set of principles was made applicable to all newspapers as well as to most periodicals. At that time, there were several weekly newspapers I believe, in western Canada that had already fallen under the control of American owners, and others were similarly threatened. The latter, of course, were no longer in danger with the coming into force of the 1965 amendments. To the best of my recollection, none of those newspapers were closed down, so they must have been able to meet the full set of specifications as is now proposed to apply to Time and Reader's Digest.

Contrary to the experience of some honourable senators, let me say at this point that many Americans with whom I come in contact appear to understand clearly that Canada is an independent nation, with very real national goals and interests. They respect us for our independent spirit; they appreciate us for their greatest trading partner, and cherish our long and continuing friendship, as we do theirs. They do not expect us to be apologists for our own nation and its legitimate interests in order to keep or gain that friendship. I would only add that American elected representatives with whom I have come in contact, in private rational discussions, react in exactly the same fashion.

Let me now make a suggestion for the assistance of those honourable senators who have indicated that they are perhaps embarrassed when their American friends and associates complain to them. If their American friends persist in saying that the legislative effect of Bill C-58 on Time, for example, is an unfriendly act, please ask them about the "manufacturing clause" in the United States Copyright Act, which operates as a most effective non-tariff barrier against the importation of Canadian printed matter. That section of the United States Copyright Act withholds copyright protection from Canadian publications in quantities over 1,500 copies which are not printed in the United States. Canadian law does not, as I understand it, provide for a similar non-tariff barrier against United States publications—

● (1500)

Senator Flynn: It is a good suggestion, though.

Senator McElman: —as anyone can easily see by looking at the shelves in Canadian bookstores and magazine counters. So, to those honourable senators who face such embarrassing criticisms, I would simply suggest that they should not be embarrassed; just ask the right questions in reply.

Finally on periodicals, let me read into the record a letter addressed to me from the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association. I believe all honourable senators received such a letter. It is dated February 26, and is signed by Mr. S. Taylor-Munro, Executive Co-ordinator:

We are writing to request your support for Bill C-58, and the intention to remove exemptions granted to foreign publications under Section 19 of the Income Tax Act. We are an association representing 124 small and medium-sized Canadian magazines. Opponents of this Bill have argued that it will not assist magazines such as ours to gain more advertising revenue. Our experience contradicts that argument. Even with the Bill not yet proclaimed, the advertising community is already responding by increasing expenditures in our member publications, while reducing placements in the foreign magazines affected by Bill C-58.

Critics have charged that this Bill constitutes censorship. We do not believe an objective and reasoned judgment would offer a shred of support for such a claim. The sole purpose of the legislation is to assist Canadian magazines in gaining Canadian advertising. No one would be prevented from publishing anything in Canada, nor is any control even suggested over the public's access to foreign publications. The question is not who will be allowed to publish, but who will be assisted.

[Senator McElman.]

Section 19 has been in effect since 1965. No Canadian or foreign magazine has suffered from censorship in any form under the existing legislation. No Canadian or foreign magazine will suffer from censorship once Bill C-58 becomes law.

Passage of this Bill will ensure the achievement, for the first time, of the intent of Section 19. We therefore urge adoption of Bill C-58 as a positive and appropriate measure in support of Canada's periodical industry.

As I said, that letter is from the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Completely disinterested, I suppose.

Senator McElman: I should not expect so. If they were disinterested they would be a lot less intelligent than I consider them to be. Indeed, they should be interested, as many other Canadians are interested, in this bill, pro and con.

I turn now to broadcasting, clause 3 of Bill C-58, and the many millions of dollars spent by Canadian advertisers through United States border television stations. The annual total of such expenditures is currently some $20 million, and is increasing. By far the largest portion of this amount of $20 million is spent with the United States television station KVOS, Bellingham, Washington, and the three United States stations in Buffalo, New York, plus five United States stations in Detroit.

However, there are also similar situations in other border areas where the dollar volume is much smaller but nonetheless of relevant importance to the Canadian stations involved in those smaller markets. I can think of one, of course, immediately, which is WAGM-TV at Presque Isle in the State of Maine, which is 15 miles from the New Brunswick border. It competes for Canadian advertising dollars against the two New Brunswick stations, CHSJ in Saint John, which is a CBC affiliate, and CKCW in Moncton, which is a CTV affiliate, which also serve the mid-upper Saint John River Valley of New Brunswick.

Bill C-58 proposes to eliminate the deductibility of such advertising costs for income tax purposes where such Canadian advertising on United States broadcasting stations is directed primarily to a market in Canada.

Attempts have been made in this debate, and during the earlier debate in the House of Commons, to suggest that this is just another unfriendly, ultra-national irritant directed at the United States. Honourable senators, I say to you that such a suggestion is pure, unadulterated nonsense.

Station KVOS in Bellingham, Washington, was put together with one basic purpose in mind—to beam its signal to, and sell its lucrative advertising time to, and reap immense profits from, the Vancouver market.

At the same time, while growing wealthy off Canadian advertising dollars, it can circumvent Canadian law, by which Canadian broadcasters in the competitive Vancouver market must abide, as expressed in the Broadcasting Act. Secondly, it can circumvent the efforts of the CRTC to enforce Canadian law and regulations to which Canadian licensees are subject, and which are much more stringent than the regulations to which United States stations are subjected. Thirdly, it is able to circumvent the full effect of the Canadian Income Tax Act with respect to revenues and profits derived almost totally from Canadian advertisers. Fourthly, it is able to use those profits from Canada to develop and improve a United States broadcasting unit. And fifthly, it has effectively delayed the emergence of other Canadian television stations in southern British Columbia.

In those circumstances, honourable senators, does anyone really seriously suggest that the remedial action proposed by Bill C-58 is either unfriendly or unfair? The situations at Buffalo versus Toronto, Detroit versus Windsor, and at other points along that long Canada-United States border are similar, although not so pronounced as with KVOS. Those stations, of course, were not established to serve just the Canadian market. But in all cases profits derived from Canadian sources are being used to improve United States stations, to the continuing detriment of existing and prospective Canadian stations.

If we are to demand that existing Canadian TV stations improve their content and product, as we do; if we are to demand that every reasonable and financially viable opportunity be given, through careful licensing, to encourage the establishment of further Canadian TV stations, to improve talent and programming, and to provide varied and different voices and opinions for Canadian viewers, without unfair competition under our law, as we do; if we are to plug the substantial drain of otherwise taxable Canadian advertising dollars, in subversion of our own Income Tax Act, into the coffers of another nation, as has been occurring for years, as we should; if we are to do these things, all of which are desirable, then I suggest we should pass Bill C-58. And that is not an unfriendly act towards the United States, despite the protestations to the contrary by the affected United States broadcasting stations and their supporters.

Honourable senators, it is a fact that those United States television broadcasters have sat serenely and contentedly for years reaping the substantial windfall profits from Canadian advertising, without any approaches to Canada to correct the inequities that were involved. But with the advent of Bill C-58 there has developed a rash of activity on their part. They are anxious to bring fairness and sweet reason into cross-border broadcasting and advertising.

● (1510)

I refer now to a Canadian Press story out of Ottawa, as published in the Telegraph-Journal of Saint John, New Brunswick, on Friday last, March 19. The lead paragraph reads as follows:

American broadcasters are said to be looking at branch plant advertising operations in Canada as a possible solution to the prolonged Canada-U.S. border television war.

The story goes on to relate that representatives of television stations in Buffalo, New York and Bellingham, Washington conferred privately, on Friday last, with senior officials of the CRTC; that officials on both sides confirmed that American broadcasters are now willing to pay Canadian taxes, and possibly make contributions to domestic Canadian programming, on advertising to be sold in Canada.

The story goes on to relate that KVOS Bellingham, which receives about 90 per cent of its annual revenue from Canadian advertisers, has offered to invest at least $2 million a year in domestic Canadian programming. Apparently our negotiators are now negotiating on, at least, an equal footing. They are finding a new will to bargain on the other side.

Honourable senators, is any further proof of the efficacy of Bill C-58 needed?

One should stress that like clause 1 and clause 2 of the bill, clause 3 does not constitute new principle. It is merely an extension of the principle enacted into law in 1965—an extension to broadcasting of the same principle that now applies to newspapers and periodicals. Fair treatment of broadcasting stations, such as KVOS Bellingham, can be accommodated by delayed proclamation of this clause as provided in the bill.

Honourable senators, it is not easy for governments to provide totally acceptable answers to complex problems, particularly when foreign involvements are present and of long-standing, as in these instances. It is more productive and useful to work at finding answers than to simply beg the questions. The government has opted for action, by producing this yet imperfect bill.

Senator van Roggen has spoken constructively in favour of getting Bill C-58 into committee where more information can be obtained and further progress achieved in seeking improved solutions. I, too, will vote in favour of the bill on second reading.

Senator Hayden: Would my honourable friend permit a question or two?

Senator McElman: Certainly.

Senator Hayden: You referred to Bill C-118 of 1965, and made reference to Bill C-58, which is before us. I assume that I am right in thinking the intention was to compare the two bills?

Senator McElman: No, senator, it was not to compare the two bills. I suggested in my remarks that Bill C-118 of 1965 was the mother of the bill now before us.

Senator Asselin: What happened to the father?

Senator McElman: It could have been an abortion.

Senator Hayden: That is your word.

Senator McElman: I am sorry, Senator Hayden, I was speaking to my friend across the way.

I suggested that Bill C-118 tried to establish what, in my view, is a very sound principle and then it made an exception to it. I said that it is the mother of this bill because the bill we have before us now in its first two clauses seeks to correct, or change, or remove the exemptions of Bill C-118.

Senator Flynn: Correct the abortion.

Senator Langlois: That is the Morgentaler amendment.

Senator Hayden: In Bill C-118 the exemptions are provided for, and there is no reference to broadcasting. Yet, in Bill C-58 which is now before us, the exemptions provided in Bill C-118 are repealed, and, in effect, levelling the same basis of taxation on broadcasting, in certain circumstances, as on printed items. If you call Bill C-118 the mother of Bill C-58, the mother has an entirely different face. Is it your view that it does not make any difference whether the exemptions are in or out of Bill C-58 and Bill C-118?

I suggest you would have a very difficult time—and I would like to hear what you have to say—in establishing motherhood as between those two bills.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps they had a different father.

Senator McElman: Far be it from me to try to argue long precedent or anything else with Senator Hayden. I realize I am out of my ball-park entirely.

This is one of the reasons I want the bill referred to his committee, where he can help us and guide us, and have officials present to assist us in finding those answers.

I feel the principles established for newspapers—not just periodicals, senator—newspapers and periodicals in Bill C-118 are not different from what is now being established for broadcasting. Perhaps we have a stepdaughter here.

Senator Hayden: When we get into genealogy of that sort, it is reaching a long distance to get a supporting argument for what you have to say. If I were to say to you, "Do you agree with that statement?" you might very well say no. Would you agree with this statement then: Any argument that can be advanced, is quite proper to advance if you can get some yardage out of it?

May I go on and say there is an old saying that words should not be read out of context. I ask you whether I am right when I say that in my explanation of Bill C-118 in 1965 you will not find a wholesale endorsement of the bill.

Senator McElman: Of course not.

Senator Hayden: I am trying to figure out why I was brought into it, except in an attempt to indicate that I had two different positions, one in 1965 and one in 1976. I do not think you can find that is so.

I would like to read the last statement I made before I sat down, which was:

As I have said, I do not know whether this is the best sanction available to us, but I have not heard of any others that even approach its value to assure the desired results.

Now, what were the desired results? The desired results were the results achieved by Bill C-118, is that not right? Is that not what I was talking about? That is what I thought I was talking about.

Senator McElman: I cannot answer you while you are on your feet, senator. I do not wish to debate with you, but if you put questions to me, I shall try to answer them. I believe you referred to my taking something out of context for a purpose. Let me assure you that I did not, and I would not try to take anything that you said out of context in order to bring forth a purpose other than that intended by you. I certainly did not, and I certainly would not, try to do that. If you have that reaction, I am very sorry and I apologize.

I repeat that I have no intention of trying to debate the point with you, sir. If you have questions, I shall try to answer them.

[Senator Hayden.]

On motion of Senator Rowe, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Monday, March 22, the debate on the motion of Senator Molgat for the second reading of Bill S-33, respecting United Grain Growers Limited.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, Bill S-33 is not too complicated. As the sponsor pointed out, the purpose of the new subclause is simply to increase the authorized capital of the company, the United Grain Growers Limited, from the present limit of $12 million to $25 million.

There is nothing much I should like to add to what the sponsor has already said except to indicate in a few brief remarks my general support for the bill.

The original act of incorporation was in 1911, and that together with the various amendments made since that time tell an interesting story. I first heard of this company many years ago when producers' cooperatives were being organized in eastern Nova Scotia. This company was held up as a type of model to show what producers could do when they organized in a cooperative venture to market their own produce.

As the sponsor mentioned, the original name of the company was Grain Growers Company Limited. Under that name the company had been organized under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act. When the federal incorporation took place the federal company acquired all of the assets and liabilities of the company. It was in 1917 that the name was changed to United Grain Growers Limited.

The original act set forth two cooperative principles. One was that there would be one vote per member, not one vote per share. That principle has been retained all through the years, despite what might be called basic changes, as it were. As the company grew and developed, it became desirable to replace the ordinary meetings of shareholders by regional meetings at which delegates were elected to attend the annual meeting. That practice is now common to these large cooperatives.

The second principle was that membership would be restricted to those in the business. In this case it is practically restricted to farmers and their spouses, although provision has been made for certain other people to become members.

To assist the company in its growth and development the act was amended several times—in 1915, 1917, 1918, 1940, 1950 and 1966—and we now have the latest proposed amendment before us.

These amendments reflect the growth in the company and especially its need for more capital. As I said, the present bill would increase the authorized capital of the company from $12 million to $25 million, and in itself that shows what a tremendous growth has taken place in the company. The original share capital was $2 million, which was divided into shares at $25 each. The amendment in 1917 increased that amount to $5 million. In 1941 the company was authorized to divide the shares into two or more classes, and consequently the shares were divided into class A and class B shares. The 1966 amendment increased the share capital to $12 million, divided into 550,000 class A shares with a par value of $20, and 200,000 class B shares with a value of $5 each. The schedule to the amendment sets out the restrictions on the rights of the two classes of shareholders. Generally speaking, the class A shares provide the capital without conveying any voting rights, whereas the class B shares are actually the membership shares. The class B shareholders are the ones who have actual control of the company. It would appear that they have found the class A shares a desirable means of financing the company at a reasonable cost.

I do not profess to have any detailed knowledge of the workings of the company, honourable senators, but I am sure when their officials come before us they can give us an interesting outline of the way in which this company, since its inception in 1911, has grown and developed to hold what at present might be called the predominant position in the grain business of Canada. In view of the fact that the company has been so successful over the years, it would seem appropriate to encourage it even further by passing this amendment.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Petten moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE
ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Wednesday, March 24, 1976.

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st of March 1976 were referred, has in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, March 3rd, 1976 examined the said Estimates and reports as follows:

1. In obedience to the foregoing, the Committee made a general examination of Supplementary Estimates (B) and heard evidence from the Honourable J. Chrétien, President of Treasury Board, Mr. B. A. MacDonald, Deputy Secretary, and Mr. R. L. Richardson, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch, Treasury Board.

2. Through these Supplementary Estimates (B) $921 million in adjustments will be added to the costs of existing programs and some accounting adjustments will be made. This sum added to the Supplementary Estimates (A), $1,751 million, and to the Main Estimates, $29,585 million, bringing the total Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1976 to $32,257 million. The Committee notes that the original Main Estimates have therefore been increased through Supplementary Estimates (A) and (B) by a total of $2,672 million, that is, by 9 per cent. Although this percentage increase is considerably less than the 21 per cent increase added through Supplementaries to the Main Estimates for 1974-75, the Committee continues to be concerned by the size of the Supplementary Estimates in relation to the Main Estimates. This has been consistently high for some years as shown by the following table.

PERCENTAGE INCREASE OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES IN RELATION TO THE MAIN ESTIMATES

(millions of dollars)

Fiscal Year	Main Estimates	Supplemen- tary Estimates	Percentage Increase
1969-70	12,467	349	2.8%
1970-71	13,752	930	6.8%
1971-72	15,341	1,306	8.5%
1972-73	16,539	1,726	10.4%
1973-74	19,287	2,125	11.0%
1974-75	23,297	4,936	21.0%
1975-76	29,585	2,672	9.0%

The Committee accepted assurances from the President of the Treasury Board that he shares the Committee's concern, that he has already set an upward limit of $1,500 million as a target for the allocation of funds through Supplementary Estimates in the next fiscal year, 1976-77.

3. The President of the Treasury Board described the negotiations with departments through which the increase in total expenditures for 1975-76 over 1974-75 have been held to 16 per cent. It is his intention to at least maintain, and if possible to further reduce, the percentage level of increase in future years. The effect of this action forces government departments to take a hard look at the priorities of their existing programs. The Committee approves of this restraint action. It suggests that consideration be given to the requirement by the Treasury Board that departments catalogue all their programs and rank them in order of priority on the basis of real usefulness, that when new programs are proposed they be provided for, whenever possible, by a readjustment of priorities. The Committee considers that in spite of undoubted difficulty in persuading departments to make such assessment, continued pressure on them to do so is desirable.

4. Turning specifically to Supplementary Estimates (B) the larger items are as follows:

- (a) Payments in connection with the Two-Price Wheat Program which is intended to keep the price of bread down $186 million
- (b) Public Debt Charges $155 million
- (c) Payment to the Old Age Security Fund to cover the final deficit which is due mostly to indexing $114 million
- (d) Various fiscal transfers to the provinces $113 million
- (e) Payments to the provinces to cover the federal share under provincial welfare plans $107 million
- (f) Payment to compensate the railways for operating unprofitable services to the public $40 million
- (g) Payment to the Canadian National Railway for the deficit arising in the calendar year 1975 in respect of the Canadian National Railway System $35 million
- (h) To set up a drawing account for temporary advances in the operation of the National Defence Program $26 million
- (i) Payment of the federal share of the provinces' university education costs $24 million
- (j) An amount to provide for forgiveness of an old loan to Romania $23 million
- (k) Payments for price support to farmers $22 million

5. The Committee discussed the criteria for the forgiveness of the $23 million loan to Romania which dates from World War I and other similar loans with the Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board. It was told that there are no established criteria for dealing with long outstanding loans, that an active and continuous attempt is made to recover them. When the best possible agreement is reached the remainder is put forward to Parliament to be written off. In effect a receivable is reclassified as a bad debt and dealt with.

6. The Treasury Board supplied the Committee with a list explaining forty-five $1 items in the Supplementary Estimates (B). This list is attached as Appendix (A) to this report.

7. As in the past the Committee was disturbed by one aspect of these $1 items. A substantial number of them authorize the provision of funds for unanticipated operating expenses through the deferral of capital projects. It is always preferable that the funds required be met by transfer within the authorized vote. As already pointed out, this forces departments to look after their essential programs. The Committee objects to the deferment of capital projects in this manner because most of them will eventually be proceeded with and will then require a substantially increased total expenditure due to the continued rise in construction costs. The Committee had similar objections to the authorization through $1 items of the use of funds provided for grants and contributions. Many of these grants also relate to construction projects.

Respectfully submitted.

H. Sparrow,
Deputy Chairman.

(Appendix A to report)

EXPLANATION OF ONE DOLLAR ITEMS IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1975-76

SUMMARY

The one dollar items included in these Estimates have been grouped in the attached schedules according to purpose.

- A. One Dollar items which authorize transfers from one vote to another—27 items.
- B. One Dollar items which authorize the payment of grants—9 items.
- C. One Dollar items which authorize the deletion of debts due the Crown—4 items.
- D. One Dollar items which authorize financial guarantees—1 item.
- E. One Dollar items which amend the legislative provisions of previous appropriation acts—3 items.
- F. One Dollar items which amend acts other than appropriation acts—1 item.

March 2, 1976
Estimates Division

SCHEDULE A

ONE DOLLAR ITEMS WHICH AUTHORIZE TRANSFERS FROM ONE VOTE TO ANOTHER—27 ITEMS.

AGRICULTURE—CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION

Vote 50b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $59,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are requested to cover increased costs for rent and communications; to provide for costs being incurred to support Canadian initiatives in promoting the sale of Canadian cheese in the European Common Market and to provide for certain building modifications.

Source of Funds—Vote 1—($59,999)—Funds are available as the result of lower than estimated administration charges for the Land Transfer function of the Small Farm Development Program.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Vote 1b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $2,685,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to:

- (1) provide for a shortage of $2,039,000 resulting from foreign currency revaluations and increased inflation rates abroad;
- (2) cover tenant service costs ($461,000) for the headquarters building in Ottawa and for accommodation in Britain; and
- (3) meet operating costs ($186,000) of the long range accommodation program of the Department.

Vote 20b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $200,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to cover increased costs of Canada's participation in the 1975 Okinawa International Ocean Exposition, resulting from unforeseen expenses on pavilion improvements and from the high rate of inflation in Japan.

Source of Funds—Vote 5—($2,886,998)—Funds are available due to a delay in the acquisition of a site for the new Chancery in Washington.

JUSTICE

Vote 1b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $939,999.

Explanation—The additional funds will be used to:

- (1) provide for operating costs ($430,000) of the Committee on the Operation of the Abortion Law;
- (2) cover the cost of tenant services ($213,000) provided by the Department of Public Works;
- (3) meet the cost of the Inquiry into the crash of a Panarctic Oils Limited aircraft ($100,000); and
- (4) provide for an increase in contractual costs ($149,000) for the Judge's language training and for costs ($48,000) incurred in the preparation of gun control legislation.

Source of Funds—Vote 10—($939,999)—Funds are available due to reductions in grants and contributions.

Vote 15b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote totalling $253,999.

Explanation—The additional funds will be used mainly to:

- (1) provide for the increased costs ($172,000) incurred in printing of the Supreme Court of Canada reports; and
- (2) assist with the cost ($72,000) of a symposium to celebrate the Centenary of the Supreme Court of Canada which was held last September.

Source of Funds—

Vote 10—($57,999)—Funds are available due to reductions in grants and contributions.

Vote 20—($162,000)—Funds are available as the result of provincial charges for use of staff and facilities being less than expected.

Vote 30—($34,000)—Funds are available from the Tax Review Board because expenditures will be less than expected.

Vote 25b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote totalling $380,999.

Explanation—To provide mainly for the cost of completing and publishing the reports and other materials prepared during the initial phase of the Law Reform Commission.

Source of Funds—

Vote 5—($35,999)—Expenditures for investigation and research under the Canadian Judicial Council will be less than expected.

Vote 10—($211,000)—Funds are available due to reductions in grants and contributions.

Vote 30—($134,000)—Funds are available from the Tax Review Board because expenditures will be less than expected.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Vote 1b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $754,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are requested to cover increased program operating costs and for the cost of contract audit services provided by the Department of Supply and Services.

Vote 5b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $10,866,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are requested for the purchase of occupational training from the provinces, ($8,523,000), for the purchase of language training for Chilean and Vietnamese refugees ($1,700,000) and for the Department's portion of the Federal Labour Intensive Projects Program ($644,000)

Vote 20b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $725,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are requested to cover the production costs of the publications Careers-Canada and Careers-Provinces which provide career and occupational guidance information to students and new entrants to the labour force.

Source of Funds—Vote 10—($12,347,997)—Canada Manpower Training Program allowance payments and other contributions will be less than originally forecast.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Vote 5b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $12,999,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to:

- (1) provide $11,000,000 for 1975-76 expenditures on the Long Range Patrol Aircraft project which were not provided in Main Estimates; and
- (2) provide $2,000,000 for the procurement of capital commodities required in support of the 1976 Olympics.

Source of Funds—Vote 1—($12,999,999)—Funds are available as the result of economies effected in operations and maintenance activities within the program.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Vote 25b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $699,999.

Explanation—To meet increased operating expenditures of the program for the balance of the current fiscal year.

Source of Funds—Vote 20—($699,999)—Revisions to two capital projects originally scheduled for construction in 1975-76 have forced deferment and have made funds available for this transfer.

PUBLIC WORKS

Vote 10b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $4,699,999.

Explanation—To provide for the increased costs of managing properties and for escalation clauses in leases.

Vote 20b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $999,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to meet costs incurred in carrying out essential maintenance projects such as wharf repairs at Baie-Comeau, Ile-aux-Coudres and Tadoussac and maintenance dredging projects at Bathurst, Dalhousie and Saint John, N.B.

Vote 40b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $999,999.

Explanation—To carry out emergency repairs to the New Westminster Railway Bridge which was damaged by a runaway barge.

Vote 45b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $198,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required for operation and maintenance of properties at Moosonee, Ontario, transferred to the Department from the Department of National Defence.

Source of Funds—Vote 15—($6,898,996)—Funds are available due to unforeseen delays in construction projects.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Vote 15b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $404,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to:

- (1) provide a further $50,000 towards the cost of a study on the Canadian Film Industry.
- (2) to defray the cost of the visit of the Prince of Wales last April ($265,000) and the cost of preparations for the Queen's visit to Canada during the July 1976 Olympics ($90,000).

Source of Funds—Vote 20—($404,999)—Funds are available since all of the grants provided to construct, expand or improve facilities for the performing arts in Canada will not be used ($354,999) nor will the proposed grant to Massey Hall be paid in this fiscal year.

SECRETARY OF STATE—COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Vote 65b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $619,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required by the Company to meet closing-out costs such as four months severance pay to permanent employees in accordance with collective bargaining agreements and one month severance pay to volunteers.

Source of Funds—Vote 10—($619,999)—Funds are available since bilingualism contributions, summer language bursaries and assistance to associations of independent schools will be less than forecast.

SECRETARY OF STATE—NATIONAL MUSEUMS OF CANADA

Vote 90b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $999,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to provide for the cost of 38 additional man-years for the Corporation's own security force and to finance the extension of the present contractual arrangement so as to ensure adequate protection while new officers are being trained.

Source of Funds—Vote 95—($999,999)—Funds are available because grants are no longer paid in advance of actual need.

SOLICITOR GENERAL

Vote 1b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $499,999

Explanation—To provide for a Special Communications Unit, responsible for informing the public concerning the peace and security program of the government.

Source of Funds—Vote 10—($499,999)—Funds are available because of unforeseen delays in the Penitentiary Service construction program.

SOLICITOR GENERAL—CORRECTIONAL SERVICES

Vote 15b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $130,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required for payments to Community Residential Centres and for the maintenance of day parolees.

Source of Funds—Vote 10—($130,999)—Funds are available because of unforeseen delays in the Penitentiary Service construction program.

TRANSPORT

Vote 1b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $1,049,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required to cover the cost of the Inquiry into Air Canada's financial activities, organizational changes needed to further develop and implement the National Transportation Policy announced on June 16, 1975 and to cover the costs of increased services.

Source of Funds—Vote 45—($1,049,999)—Funds are available because of delays in construction of port and ferry terminal modification at Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland.

Vote 10b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $4,893,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required to:

- (1) provide for price increases ($2,997,000) in petroleum products, fleet supplies and other standard commodity items;

- (2) provide for the cost ($831,000) of unforeseen damage incurred by vessels engaged in icebreaking and search and rescue activities;

- (3) cover the cost ($439,000) of a ports and harbours task force formed to recommend a new ports policy for Canada;

- (4) meet the cost ($273,000) of tenant services formerly provided by the Department of Public Works;

- (5) provide for the cost ($191,000) of the annual price adjustment in connection with ice reconnaissance services contract; and

- (6) cover the costs of other projects such as the Federal Labour Intensive Program ($70,000) and the establishment of a Canadian marine communications station ($93,000).

Source of Funds—Vote 15—($4,893,999)—Funds are available because of unforeseen delays in the construction program.

Vote 30b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $849,999

Explanation—To provide additional contributions to various municipal airports in Canada to cover their operating deficits.

Source of Funds—Vote 20—($849,999)—Funds are available because of additional Air Transportation Tax revenues and from savings in other items.

TRANSPORT—NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Vote 92b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $674,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required to meet cash operating deficits incurred in the calendar year 1975 at the ports of Churchill ($600,000 mainly due to below average grain traffic) and Prince Rupert ($75,000 due mainly to higher than expected maintenance costs in the operation of small craft facilities).

Source of Funds—Vote 90—($674,999)—Funds are available due to the deferral of a bridge repainting project until 1976.

URBAN AFFAIRS

Vote 1b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $999,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required to complete the planning process and to conduct public activities at the Toronto Waterfront Park.

Source of Funds—Vote 5—($999,999)—Funds are available since grants and contributions will be less than expected.

URBAN AFFAIRS—CANADIAN HABITAT SECRETARIAT

Vote 40b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $1,299,999

Explanation—Additional funds are required to cover increased costs for media facilities, communications, audio-visual and interpretation facilities.

Source of Funds—Vote 5—($1,299,999)—Funds are available since grants and contributions will be less than expected.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Vote 45b—To authorize a transfer to this Vote of $1,349,999 and to authorize the deletion of a debt for $28,500.94

Explanation—The Standing Interdepartmental Committee on Uncollectable Debts has recommended the deletion of this debt which results from unpaid treatment costs. The debtor is deceased with no known estate.

Additional funds of $1,349,999 are required to cover increased costs of treatment services.

Source of Funds—Vote 50—($1,349,999)—Funds are available due to the deferment of certain capital projects.

SCHEDULE B

ONE DOLLAR ITEMS WHICH AUTHORIZE THE PAYMENT OF GRANTS—9 ITEMS

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Vote 25b—To authorize a grant of $20,000.

Explanation—The grant to the World Intellectual Property Organization must be paid in Swiss francs. Because of fluctuating exchange rates, the $100,000 provided for in Main Estimates is not sufficient.

Source of Funds—Vote 25—($19,999)—Operating expenditures were not as high as expected.

ENVIRONMENT

Vote 15b—To authorize grants totalling $396,467.

Explanation—Additional funds are required:

- (1) To recoup the 1974-75 deficit in the Fisheries Prices Support Account ($382,467); and
- (2) to provide for the payment of $14,000 to a successful appellant who lost employment as result of the ban on whaling.

Source of Funds—Vote 15—($396,466)—Funds are available from the Program for Rehabilitation of Canadian Fisheries.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Vote 10b—To authorize grants totalling $475,000 and a transfer to this Vote of $544,999.

Explanation—It is proposed to provide grants in lieu of taxes on diplomatic and consular properties in Canada.

Source of Funds—Vote 5—($544,999)—Funds are available due to a delay in the acquisition of a site for a new Chancery in Washington.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Vote 30b—To authorize a grant of $100,000.

Explanation—To provide additional funds to the International Institute for Tropical Agriculture to meet the higher operating costs in 1975.

Source of Funds—Vote 30—($99,999)—Funds are still available within allocations for multilateral grants.

LABOUR

Vote 1b—To authorize grants totalling $70,000.

Explanation—To provide additional Adjustment Assistance Benefits to workers in the textile and clothing industries, because the number of claimants has increased and the benefit has been increased in consonance with the cost of living adjustments.

Source of Funds—Vote 1—($69,999)—Reorganization of the Department and resultant delays in staffing certain positions have freed resources.

PUBLIC WORKS

Vote 5b—To authorize a grant of $7,500.

Explanation—To provide a grant of $7,500 to the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs. This grant matches an equal contribution from the Provinces and is to be applied to the operating costs of the Association.

Source of Funds—Vote 5—($7,499)—Restraint in the use of professional services has made these funds available.

SECRETARY OF STATE

Vote 20b—To authorize a grant of $500,000

Explanation—To provide a grant to the province of Newfoundland to commemorate the 25th anniversary of its entry into Confederation.

Source of Funds—Vote 20—($499,999)—Funds will be available since the proposed grant to Massey Hall will not be paid in this fiscal year.

Vote 40b—To authorize grants totalling $33,100.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to provide grants to three volunteer organizations under the Citizenship Participation Activity.

Source of Funds—Vote 40—($33,099)—Funds are available due to reduced expenditures under the Citizenship Promotion Activity.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Vote 10b—To authorize grants totalling $10,500,000 and to authorize transfers to this Vote totalling $10,499,999.

Explanation—Additional funds are required to cover increased payments for War Veterans Allowances and Civilian War Allowances due to increased case loads, an unexpected carryover from 1974-75 due to recent legislative changes, a delay in receipt of Spouse's Allowances and the cancellation of escalation in Family Allowance.

Source of Funds—Vote 35—($5,499,999)—Funds are available due to reduced pension case loads.

Vote 50—($5,000,000)—Funds are available because of unforeseen delays in capital projects.

SCHEDULE C

ONE DOLLAR ITEMS WHICH AUTHORIZE THE DELETION OF DEBTS DUE THE CROWN—4 ITEMS

NATIONAL REVENUE—CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

Vote 1b—To authorize the deletion of debts totalling $1,169,216.61

Explanation—To delete 72 uncollectable debts, each in excess of $5,000 and representing amounts owing in respect of domestic sales taxes, excise taxes and import duties. Deletion of these debts has been recommended by the Standing Interdepartmental Committee on Uncollectable Debts.

NATIONAL REVENUE—TAXATION

Vote 5b—To authorize the deletion of debts totalling $7,961,142.13.

Explanation—To delete 453 uncollectable debts, each in excess of $5,000 and representing amounts owing in respect of unpaid income taxes. Deletion of these debts has been recommended by the Standing Interdepartmental Committee on Uncollectable Debts.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Vote 5b—To authorize the deletion of debts totalling $49,703.84.

Explanation—The Standing Interdepartmental Committee on Uncollectable Debts has recommended the deletion of these debts. They result mainly from undeclared income or the failure to advise of changed marital status. Of the six debtors, one has died with no known estate and the remaining five are indigent.

Vote 30b—To authorize the deletion of a debt for $46,182.45.

Explanation—The Standing Interdepartmental Committee on Uncollectable Debts has recommended the deletion of this debt. The debt results from the overpayment of pension. The debtor is deceased with no known estate.

SCHEDULE D

ONE DOLLAR ITEMS WHICH AUTHORIZE FINANCIAL GUARANTEES—1 ITEM

FINANCE

Vote L31b—To authorize a loan guarantee.

Explanation—It is proposed to guarantee payment of a loan of $2 million to be made to the Ottawa Civil Service Recreational Association by a chartered bank. The loan is to be used by the Association to add an arena and multipurpose building.

SCHEDULE E

ONE DOLLAR ITEMS WHICH AMEND THE LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS OF PREVIOUS APPROPRIATION ACTS—3 ITEMS

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Vote L16b—To convert payments made or to be made to the end of 1976-77 in respect of Canada's financial participation in the development and exploration of the Athabaska Tar Sands into common shares of Petro-Canada, which will become the federal agent in the Syncrude Project.

Explanation—Authority is requested to deem any payment made pursuant to Energy, Mines and Resources Vote L12d of Supplementary Estimates (B), 1974-75 and Energy, Mines and Resources Vote L20, Main Estimates 1976-77 to have been advanced out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for subscription of preferred shares in Petro-Canada.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Vote L37b—To authorize the conversion of debt to equity and to enter into an agreement with prospective buyers.

Explanation—The Federal Government currently owns 40 per cent of Consolidated Computer Inc. (CCI) and the Ontario government owns 17 per cent. Because of the poor performance of CCI, it has been decided that immediate steps should be taken to restructure the company.

In order to attract partners for CCI, it is proposed to convert most of the debt to the Crown into capital stock and to transfer this stock to prospective buyers—Fujitsu of Japan and Consolidated Dynamics Ltd. of Canada.

TREASURY BOARD

Vote 20b—To authorize the payment of premiums and recovery of these costs in respect of employees who were on lawful strike.

Explanation—Authority is requested for the payment of full premiums for employee insurance plans in respect of employees who are on a lawful strike and who do not receive remuneration during that period from which these premiums can be deducted.

Authority is also requested to permit the recovery of these premiums during subsequent pay periods.

SCHEDULE F

ONE DOLLAR ITEMS WHICH AMEND ACTS OTHER THAN APPROPRIATION ACTS—1 ITEM

ENVIRONMENT

Vote L23b—To amend the Saltfish Act by raising the statutory borrowing limit of the Corporation from $10 million to $15 million.

Explanation—To provide for the normal expanding operations of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. The Corporation is already close to its borrowing limit and any change in the factors of production and/or export conditions would affect the need for more working capital, particularly in the October peak pressure period.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 25, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Dick had been substituted for that of Mr. Darling on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1976

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-90, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1976.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, together with a statement of accounts certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 33 of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, Chapter C-16, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of operations under the Government Annuities Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter G-6, R.S.C., 1970.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move, seconded by Senator Petten, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, March 29, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

• (1410)

Before the motion is put, may I by word of explanation attempt to describe some of the activities with which the Senate may be involved next week?

When we meet Monday evening we shall continue with the second reading debate on Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, and proceed to second reading of Bill C-90, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1976. This supply bill covers supplementary estimates (B) for the present fiscal year. It is expected that the interim supply bill for three-twelfths of the main estimates for 1976-77 will pass in the other place tonight, so that by Monday we shall have two supply bills before us and perhaps another bill from the other place.

I should now like to give you a brief rundown on the work scheduled for committees, as far as I have been able to ascertain it up to sitting time. This, of course, as honourable senators know, is subject to change.

On Tuesday the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will meet at 9.30 a.m. The Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee will meet at 10.30 a.m. and again at 2.30 p.m. to continue its advance study of the subject matter of Bill C-83, an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime. The National Finance Committee has called a meeting for 2 p.m. to further consider its draft report on the Manpower Division of Manpower and Immigration.

On Wednesday there will be a meeting of Banking, Trade and Commerce at 9.30 a.m. The committee will deal first with Bill S-33, an act respecting United Grain Growers Limited, and then commence its examination of Bill C-58, should that bill have been referred. The Special Senate Committee on Science Policy is scheduled to meet when the Senate rises.

On Thursday the National Finance Committee will meet at 9.30 a.m. to further consider the draft report on the Manpower Division of Manpower and Immigration, and there may be a meeting of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. This is not yet definite and no time has been set.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the Leader of the Government a question with respect to Bill C-90, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1976, which was just given first reading? Is that the substance of the bill or is there some borrowing authority included in the bill?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that there is no borrowing authority involved in the bill. However, I do not have a copy of the bill available at my desk at this time.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that at this time the Leader of the Government should know what is in the bill, since it passed the other place.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN COINS

REPORTED CHANGE IN DESIGN—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, yesterday a question was asked about the Royal Canadian Mint and alleged plans to change the fronts and/or backs of the present currency in 1977. Presumably that would relate to coinage and bills, honourable senator.

Senator Forsey: Coinage is all I asked about.

Senator Perrault: "Currency" is the word used in the quoted part of the record. We have been informed by the Royal Canadian Mint that "There is absolutely no thought given to changing the coins."

Senator Grosart: No heads will roll.

Senator Flynn: For the time being.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, you will be happy to hear that I do not intend to rehash all the arguments, pro and con, which we have heard in this debate. I propose to deal with two aspects of it, and I propose also to be very brief in doing so.

I will be guilty of some repetition because I think it is important that our American friends do not get the idea, which some people think they already have, that there is an anti-American feeling developing here in Canada. I do not think there is, but I do know that every time any Canadian opens his mouth in any way critical of any aspect of American life, be it cultural or having to do with economics or foreign policy, there is always the danger that he will be portrayed as anti-American. I want, then, to repeat one or two things I have said in this chamber before.

I come from a province which has close ties with the United States—closer than any ties which the other provinces in Canada have with the United States. There are more Newfoundlanders, first, second and perhaps now third generation, living in the United States than there are in the province of Newfoundland. Prior to World War II the population of Newfoundland had remained virtually static for 50 years, in spite of the fact that Newfoundland had one of the highest birth rates in the Western World. The population remained static because, as they grew up, the young people of Newfoundland left their homeland. Many of them moved to what we now call the mainland of Canada, but by far the majority went to the United States. During World War II, if I remember correctly, the Governor of the State of Massachusetts told me that just in Massachusetts alone there were more first and second generation Newfoundlanders than there were on the island of Newfoundland itself.

During the war the American nation built great air bases in Newfoundland. Those bases employed thousands of Newfoundlanders, and even today they are not completely phased out. During that period 40,000 Newfoundland girls married American servicemen, and they are now living with their families in the United States.

As you know, the greatest iron ore deposits on the face of the earth are to be found in western Labrador. For the multi-billion-dollar economic development of those deposits, and for the almost equally expensive hydro development of the Churchill River, which has already led to an investment of well over $1 billion, as well as for countless millions of dollars spent in other parts of the province, Newfoundland had to depend on the United States. The money simply was not available in Canada. I am not being critical when I say that in Newfoundland we recognize the fact that if we had had to rely on Canada to develop those iron ore deposits or the hydro potential they would still not be developed to this day, because Canada simply did not have the financial resources at its disposal. For those reasons, therefore, I say we have close ties with the United States, and I know of no one in Newfoundland who would ever wish our American friends—and indeed, I suppose, our American relatives—anything but good.

Incidentally, just in passing I think it is interesting to note that during the 30-odd years those great American bases have been in use in Newfoundland, involving the presence of tens of thousands of American servicemen in Newfoundland, there has not been one single untoward incident in respect of the American servicemen. Not to this moment. I say, therefore, that we in Newfoundland are not anti-American. We should not forget that in 1948 almost exactly 50 per cent of the people of Newfoundland voted for economic union with the United States of America. If it had not been for the fact that a great many Newfoundlanders did not want to sever completely their sentimental ties with the British Isles, the Mother Country from which 99 per cent of us came, Newfoundland would today not be a province of Canada but very probably a state of the United States of America.

● (1420)

Senator Lamontagne: And what do you suppose would have happened to you then?

Senator Rowe: What would have happened if we had become a member of the United States is very hypothetical, but I mention this to demonstrate that in Newfoundland there is no anti-American feeling at all. It is exactly the opposite. I do, however, have some critical things to say about the United States today.

First of all I am going to refer to some comments made by one of our most distinguished and respected senators, Senator Beaubien, when he was speaking in this debate on March 22. So that you will know exactly what I am referring to, I propose to take the liberty of reading the particular paragraph, which is very short, in which he spoke of relations between Canada and the United States. He said:

There are people who sit back and pretend that it doesn't matter, at a time when the United States is having trouble with Cuba, that our Prime Minister goes down there and makes a big to-do and has his picture taken with Castro. But where does that behaviour get us when, about two weeks later, the American President calls that dictator an international bandit? Certainly, if you are a little guy and you are up against somebody like Joe Louis and he has you backed into a corner, you will fight back to defend yourself. But to kick a big guy in the shins just for the hell of it simply doesn't make any sense. We should grow up and realize that we are terribly lucky to have neighbours who are so much like ourselves that it is difficult to tell us apart. Are we not lucky to have Americans as neighbours? Any time we have been nice to them and behaved sensibly they have responded. I think it is time we mended our ways.

This is the statement to be found at page 1929 of Hansard of March 22, 1976, which was two days ago.

I may say that there is no member of the Senate for whom I have higher regard than Senator Beaubien. Long before I knew him I had a great deal to do, in one way or another, with three other distinguished members of that very distinguished family, and so I want to make it clear that what I have to say is in no way personal as far as Senator Beaubien is concerned. In fact, I am not so much concerned with what he said in the passage I have just quoted as I am with the inferences that will undoubtedly be drawn from it, and indeed, the inferences, I think I can safely say, that have already been drawn from it by some people.

To start off with, only a few weeks before our Prime Minister visited Cuba there was a great deal of talk all over the United States, and indeed all over the world, of extending the détente between the United States and Russia, which was being talked about so much at that time, to include Cuba. There was talk that Premier Castro might go to the United States on a goodwill visit, and that the United States would undo some of the things it has done in recent years and is doing now with regard to Cuba. Therefore, there was no way—not that it would have mattered or should have mattered—for Prime Minister Trudeau to know that two weeks after his visit President Ford was going to brand Premier Castro as an international bandit, for the very simple reason that at the time, or a few weeks before that visit, the problem of Angola had not emerged.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Rowe: All right, let me qualify it a little. The fact that the possibility of détente between the United States and Cuba was being discussed barely a few weeks before Prime Minister Trudeau's visit made it clear that there was no talk of and no knowledge of the presence of Cuban troops in Angola.

Senator Flynn: But Prime Minister Trudeau discussed this matter with Premier Fidel Castro when he visited there.

Senator Rowe: Of course, and I heard the actual words spoken by the Prime Minister in connection with that.

Senator Flynn: At any rate it is not relevant to the bill. If you want to reply only to the points made by Senator Beaubien, that is up to you.

[Senator Rowe.]

Senator Rowe: I accept the point made by the Leader of the Opposition. It is not really too relevant. But what is relevant is the suggestion—and certainly the inference can be drawn from what Senator Beaubien said—that Canada's foreign policy should in reality be drawn up and implemented and adopted to suit the whims and wishes of the United States. I am not drawing that inference; that is the inference that a number of people would draw from the words I read a few minutes ago.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the honourable senator would accept a question. In view of his remark a moment ago about the lack of knowledge of the Angolan situation and the presence of Cuban troops there, and as this Bill C-58 is sometimes known as the Time bill, I wonder if he has been reading Time over the last six months.

Senator Rowe: It may interest the honourable senator to know that I have read every issue of Time ever printed, from the very first one. That is not strictly correct, because I have not read the one on the newsstands right now. I have not had time. But I have read all the others.

But this is important, honourable senators, and I say it is relevant for this reason, if for no other, that there are people who say that what we are doing or what we propose to do with respect to Time magazine is really a manifestation of anti-Americanism, and I suggest it is nothing of the kind.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Rowe: So, honourable senators, before leaving the point finally, let me say that insofar as Canada's foreign policy is concerned, Canada has the right—and I am sure nobody would be more ready to defend that right than Senator Beaubien—to adopt whatever foreign policy it feels is necessary in the interests of Canada. Here I might add that it is rather ironic that the actions of our Prime Minister in respect of China, just a few short years ago, were ridiculed and criticized in every part of the United States, particularly, of course, in the various news media. They felt that what he was doing was an act of defiance and a blow in the face to the United States. One of the great ironies of history is that not too long afterwards, President Nixon and Dr. Kissinger decided that the steps taken by Prime Minister Trudeau on behalf of Canada with regard to China were precisely the same steps that the United States itself should take, and did indeed take.

I want to say a few words about Time magazine itself. This is a matter which I must confess I find it hard to get emotional about. But I want to say in all fairness that the arguments made here critical of the actions proposed in this bill are, in my view, valid for the most part. They are valid arguments. I do not know of any piece of legislation—and I have had a fair amount of experience with legislation during the past 25 years—which could not be criticized in some way. What happens is that when all the pros and cons are added up, it is then decided whether the pros outweigh the cons. In my judgment the pros outweigh the cons in this particular bill, and I shall support it.

● (1430)

I do hope, however—and perhaps Senator Davey will deal with this point when he closes the debate—that some consideration will be given to a possibility that I shall now mention. I received today a copy of MD of Canada, the excellent professional magazine to which Senator Manning referred on Tuesday. As far as I know it is not sold to the public or to anyone else, and as far as I have been able to ascertain it certainly does not offer unfair competition to any similar professional magazine. I understand that the Canadian medical profession itself is not large enough to warrant the cost of producing such a periodical. I suggest that it would be a pity if, while trying to achieve one of our aims, which is the promotion and protection of Canadian periodicals, in throwing out the bath water we throw out all the babies. If at all possible, we should keep "babies" of this type. I hope that we can amend this bill in committee to achieve this end. I appreciate that in amending any legislation it is always possible to vitiate or emasculate it and, in fact, do more harm than good. Nevertheless, I suggest that we should try to find a way to protect MD of Canada and similar publications without destroying the main purpose of the bill itself.

I am not referring simply to statements made in this chamber. I have been interested in the amount of sympathy that has been elicited by Time magazine. To be honest, I have heard more sympathy expressed for Time magazine—again I am not referring to any particular senator, or even to the debate in this chamber—than I have for our own Canadian periodicals.

Senator Flynn: Name them.

Senator Rowe: Yes, I will name some in a moment. I do not believe that Time needs all that sympathy. In my opinion Time has had a very profitable enterprise here in the production of its Canadian edition. May I again inject this personal note, that I was not joking when I said to Senator Grosart that to my knowledge I have read every issue of Time magazine ever published—as, indeed, I have read every edition ever published of its sister publication, Life—and I do not regard it as one of the really great magazines in the world. I do not think it approaches, for instance, the worth of the Illustrated London News, to name only one. However, it is an interesting magazine and has performed a valuable function. The fact that most of us read it regularly, and did so before there was a Canadian edition and, I am sure, will continue reading it—just as most of us, I am sure, read Newsweek and other magazines which do not have Canadian editions—indicates that quality. I repeat, I do not believe that Time needs all that sympathy. As one senator said yesterday, I think Time will survive and I would suggest to you that there will not be any great reduction in the Canadian readership of that magazine. Those who want it will continue to buy it, in spite of the increase in price. I do not think for one moment that Maclean's magazine, for example, which is the Canadian magazine most often referred to as having been a competitor, yet approaches Time magazine in its coverage and journalistic skill.

Let me draw to the attention of honourable senators a fact which so far I have not heard expressed anywhere else. There are a number of well-known women's magazines published in the United States which enjoy a wide circulation in Canada. Specifically, I refer to Good Housekeeping, Ladies' Home Journal, and McCall's. I am familiar with one particular magazine which is available in Canada and to which my wife subscribes. My wife subscribes, in fact, to all four magazines. I refer to Chatelaine magazine, which in its coverage, its journalistic skill, and in other ways, compares favourably with the three American magazines I have mentioned. I have no doubt that my wife, and the wives of other honourable senators, if limited to subscribing to only one of those four, would settle for Chatelaine.

Chatelaine has improved in many ways over the years. Could that magazine have attained its present excellence—I believe that most fair-minded people would agree that it has attained a high degree of excellence in one way or another—had it encountered unfair competition from McCall's, Good Housekeeping and Ladies' Home Journal, in the same way that Maclean's has encountered unfair competition from Time magazine?

That, in my opinion, is a valid question, and one which we should ask ourselves. The fact that Maclean's magazine at this moment may not measure up in quality—and some say that it does not—may very well be an indication of the difficulties it has had to face in trying to compete—unfairly, many think—with Time magazine.

It is another way of saying that Maclean's, given the same chance in the next five or six years that Chatelaine has enjoyed in the past five or six years, could very well compare, in all points I have mentioned, with Time or any other magazine being published in the United States.

Some senators have suggested here and elsewhere that instead of bringing in this bill we should have tried to work out some reciprocal agreement with the United States on this matter. This leads me to ask the question: Where has the United States been all these years? I have not heard anyone in the United States come forward with any offer to give Canadian publications the same privileges which have been enjoyed here in Canada by Time and Reader's Digest over the past few years.

Senator Grosart: They have them now.

Senator Rowe: They knew how we felt up here. The publishers of Time in the United States, and the Government of the United States, must have known the feeling in Canada. They must have seen the writing on the wall. I am not aware that they offered to take any action which could effect a reciprocal arrangement or would undo the unfair competition which our periodicals have had to face over the past few years.

In conclusion, I am quite sure that the bill, as it now stands, is not entirely satisfactory to all members of this chamber, but, in my view, its merits far outweigh any possible defects. Many of the dangers which have been pointed out are hypothetical.

● (1440)

As has been pointed out by Senator Manning, Senator Laird and others, there is inherent in this bill the possibility of undue interference with the freedom of the press. That is something against which we have to be on guard. We have seen how power can corrupt, in the manifestations of American foreign policy in recent years. Power in the hands of a few people has to have competent and unending supervision, otherwise we will experience the same aberrations we have seen in American foreign policy in recent years—the overthrowing of legal governments, the spending of millions and tens of millions of dollars to create disorder and turmoil in independent nations all over the world. Such power has even been used to plot assassinations. I could not help thinking that the President of the United States, in calling a head of state an international gangster—if that is the term he used—leaves himself wide open at this particular time.

There is inherent in this bill the possibility of some abuse of power. That is a risk we have to take. At least, we are aware of the possibility and can be on our guard against it. If in the years following passage of this legislation we find it is being misused, then we, as parliamentarians, have the sovereign right to remove the offensive powers in the interests of Canada.

I should like to conclude, honourable senators, by saying that I support Bill C-58.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the honourable senator would reply to two questions that arise from his remarks. First, is he not aware that there have been official representations made by officials of the United States at a very high level respecting the substance of Bill C-58? He seemed to indicate that he was not aware that such representations had been made.

Secondly, is the honourable senator aware that there appears to be no basis for any additional reciprocity—he seemed to suggest that that is what our American friends should have asked for—in view of the fact that Canadian magazines now have in the United States all the rights that are being asked for by those who oppose the restrictive tax measure contained in this bill? I am wondering what he meant by "reciprocity."

Senator Rowe: It seems that I did not make myself clear. As the honourable senator knows, I was speaking extemporaneously, and perhaps I should have spoken formally.

The point I was trying to make is that a good many years ago—and I do not have the precise date at hand; I am sure Senator Davey would have it—action of the kind envisaged in this bill was contemplated by the Government of Canada. What happened? Henry Luce—and this is a well-known fact—wielding all the power he had in the United States, went to the appropriate departments and officials of the Government of the United States, including, some people think, the President of the United States, and said, "These Canadians are up to something and we want to stop them." It is a fact of history that at that time Canada was indeed blackmailed—

Senator Grosart: No, no. Is the honourable senator saying that the government in office at that time submitted to blackmail? Would he not agree that it is the right of any American citizen to go to the President and ask for intervention in an action by another country?

Senator Rowe: I do not know if the honourable senator heard the statement made last evening by Mr. Chester Ronning—

Senator Grosart: I did hear it, but that is not to say I agree with it. Any suggestion of blackmail is a false statement.

Senator Rowe: Of course, I cannot argue that point. I do not see the purpose of Mr. Ronning's making a false statement at this particular time. Certainly, the statement he did make was that the President of the United States brought pressure to bear on the Prime Minister of Canada—in fact, he said that there were two Prime Ministers involved—to help change what he thought was to be the direction of Canadian foreign policy.

Senator Grosart: Would the honourable senator not agree that this happens all the time? Would the honourable senator not agree that Canadians are going to our Prime Minister all the time in an effort to have him bring pressure in their interests on the American government? I do not understand what the honourable senator is objecting to.

Senator Rowe: What I am suggesting is that because Canada is the weaker of the two geographic partners, we have to maintain external vigilance. We know that the power the United States possesses has been applied against Canada over and over.

Frankly, "blackmail" is not the appropriate word. I was using it figuratively, of course. Certainly, we have to be aware at all times of the possibility that the United States will seek to exert undue influence on Canada's foreign policy and, for that matter, on Canada's domestic policy.

Senator Grosart: I should just like to say that I agree entirely with the honourable senator's last statement, which is almost the opposite of the statement to which I objected.

On motion of Senator Perrault, debate adjourned.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance with respect to the supplementary estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976.

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to make a few comments on the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance that is now before the house.

The committee made a general examination of supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976, and heard evidence from the President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, as well as from Mr. B. A. MacDonald, Deputy Secretary, and Mr. R. L. Richardson, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch, Treasury Board.

Supplementary estimates (B) total $921 million. That sum, added to supplementary estimates (A) in the amount of $1.751 billion, and the main estimates in the amount of $29.585 billion, brings the total of the 1975-76 estimates to $32.257 billion.

When Mr. Chrétien appeared before the committee during its review of supplementary estimates (A), he predicted that the total estimates would not exceed $32 billion. His prediction at that time has proven reasonably accurate, with the final estimates totalling, as I have just stated, just over $32 billion.

Supplementary estimates (A) and (B) represent an increase of 9 per cent in the total estimates, a figure which compares favourably with the 21 per cent increase in the estimates by supplementaries for the previous fiscal year. The total estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976, represent an increase in expenditures of 16 per cent over the fiscal year ending March 31, 1975. This rate of increase in total expenditures compares favourably with an increase of 30 per cent in the previous fiscal year.

I am pleased that the rate of increase has diminished, but it is disturbing that the increase in expenditures is still 16 per cent, at a time when this government—and, in fact, all governments—should be holding the spending line to a maximum of the rate of increase in the gross national product.

● (1450)

We cannot look forward with much optimism to the next fiscal year, because the President of the Treasury Board told the committee on March 10 that he predicted a further increase in expenditures of 16 per cent. The minister defended the increase as necessary because of statutory requirements relating to, for example, unemployment insurance, increases in shared costs of health and welfare programs, increases in old age security, and to a large increase in the budget for national defence.

Even though the minister says the increases are defensible, it is still disconcerting when we realize that the increase in the gross national product for 1975 was only 9.9 per cent in current dollars—and, in fact, only 0.2 per cent in constant dollars—with little hope of much improvement in 1976. However, the minister did predict at the committee meeting on March 10 that we would see an increase in real growth of 4 or 5 per cent in 1976.

The National Finance Committee has on many occasions said that the increase in government expenditures should not exceed, as a percentage, the increase in the gross national product. It appears that we shall again have to look to the future for any realization of that goal.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my intention to move the adjournment of the debate, mainly to permit honourable senators an opportunity to examine, if they wish, the report of the committee over the weekend.

Honourable senators are aware that we have been attempting, as a matter of Senate policy, to allow a much longer time between the consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance and subsequent consideration of the appropriation bill dealing with the particular estimates. In this case, the report of the committee was presented to the Senate yesterday, and it is under consideration today. We have also received today, and read the first time, an appropriation bill, Bill C-90, the substance of which is dealt with in the committee's report.

I am not being critical of the committee, because I know that the time available for consideration of the report is shorter than the committee had hoped it would be. It must be remembered that on this occasion the committee gave the supplementary estimates considerably more attention than it has on previous occasions. There was a fairly long interval between the meetings of the committee. Personally, I am very much in favour of that kind of thorough examination in committee before we have to consider the appropriation bill.

I know that the chairman of the committee and the deputy chairman, who has just spoken, both agree that it is highly desirable to present the report of the committee at least a week before the Senate is asked to consider an appropriation bill, and every effort is being made to do that.

Following the usual practice, the Order Paper for our next sitting will call for second reading of the appropriation bill before the resumption of our consideration of the committee's report. I am not asking for any longer delay, in the interests of honourable senators, than the weekend. However, I would ask the leader to give an assurance that consideration of the committee's report will be concluded before the second reading of the appropriation bill, which I believe can be on the same day. It would merely mean postponing the debate on second reading until later that day when, it is to be hoped, we will have adopted the report of the committee.

Senator Perrault: Consideration will certainly be given to that proposal.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

HABITAT

UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON HUMAN SETTLEMENTS— REPORT OF CANADIAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Canadian National Committee on Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

He said: Honourable senators, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to report to the Senate on the activities of the Canadian National Committee in preparation for Habitat. Copies of the committee's report have been distributed to members of Parliament, and I hope all of them have had an opportunity to look at it.

In June of 1976 Canada will be host to Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements. Almost 140 members of the United Nations are expected to send delegates to this two-week conference. They will address themselves to the common problem of accommodating rapidly expanding populations in a way that will benefit people, their society and their environment.

Canada has played an active role in the invitation of the nations of the world to this conference, and in its preparation. I am sure all honourable senators will recall the United Nations Conference on the Environment which took place in Stockholm in 1972. I suggest that that was one of the turning points in world history, not only because of the physical changes for nations, but also because, for the first time, the nations and peoples of the world recognized the problems of the environment. Up to that time, most of us had taken the environment for granted. Stockholm drew the attention of the world—and drew it very dramatically—to the fact that our atmosphere was being polluted, that our water resources had to be protected, and that generally the environment was a matter of serious concern to every one.

The problems of human settlement are universal, and they cry out for immediate attention. Overcrowding, pollution, depletion of resources, rural decay, explosive growth of large cities, traffic congestion, spreading under-employment, the often destructive effect of mass migration of families and of deep-rooted cultures are all increasing in intensity. They are concerns of great importance to every human being wherever he or she lives in this world, but most people are unaware of the significance of these trends and of the urgent need to find solutions to them.

Perhaps I should give some statistics. If current population and urbanization trends continue, we can expect that in Canada we shall have to build the equivalent of 50 new cities the size of Halifax, or 14 new cities the size of Vancouver, by the year 2000. In the next 30 years the world's population will nearly double, to over 6.5 billion or perhaps seven billion people, and by that date, for the first time in human history, more people will be living in cities than in rural areas. Already urban settlements are growing twice as fast as the overall population. The world's big cities of over half a million in population are growing twice as fast again.

● (1500)

In the next thirty years, honourable senators, more building will be needed to accommodate the world's population than has been done in the whole of man's history. In developing countries alone, where two-thirds of the anticipated population increase will occur in the next twenty years, more construction for settlements will be needed than was carried out in all the developed countries over the last 200 years. This is the kind of world problem we face. I think you will appreciate the necessity for some kind of international action, to discuss and plan for the development of our communities, the human settled urban communities or world.

In Canada we sometimes think we do not have human settlement problems, but we have, I think, some very significant ones. We should face the fact that we are now an urban nation; that by the year 2000, which is only 24 years in the future, it is anticipated that at least 75 to 80 per cent of our population will live in urban areas; that of those, 50 per cent will live in 12 cities and that of that 50 per cent one-third will live in the three major metropolitan areas of Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal. I believe these statistics are very impressive, as we look at them and visualize the kind of urban problems that will face this country in the years ahead.

Canada, in organizing its plans for the United Nations conference, set up a committee known as the Canadian National Committee, of which I have the honour to be chairman. I can say I was named chairman not because of any Senate connection, but perhaps because of my background in urban government. Other members of the committee are: Dr. Hugh L. Keenleyside, Honorary Chairman, British Columbia; Dr. Lloyd Axworthy, Manitoba; Dr. Meyer Brownstone, Ontario, resigned October 1975; M. Claude Castonguay, Quebec; Mrs. Adrienne Clarkson, Ontario; Professor P. J. FitzPatrick, New Brunswick; Mr. E. Gaboury, Manitoba; Mr. J. Gerald Godsoe, Jr., Nova Scotia; Mrs. Brenda Hayes, British Columbia; Mrs. Cynthia

[Senator Buckwold]

Hill, Northwest Territories; Ms. Frances Innes, Newfoundland; M. Guy Legault; Quebec; Mr. Norman MacLeod, Prince Edward Island; Archbishop J. N. MacNeil, Alberta; Mr. Johnny YesNo, Ontario.

From that list of names, you will recognize that the committee does represent a good cross section of the country.

We were given the following responsibilities: first, to foster public awareness and interest in Habitat, and to stimulate discussion of the issues, and appropriate responses, in Canada; secondly, to give advice to the minister in the preparatory process for Canada's contribution to the 1976 conference based on the points of view expressed by the Canadian public; thirdly, to bring to the attention of the minister recommendations received during this process of preparation for the conference that could improve the quality of life in Canadian communities.

With those ends in mind, this report was produced. It was produced as a result of a wide range of activities, in which an attempt was made to reach the Canadian public and to interest the non-governmental organizations—the NGOs—of this country, and to involve as many Canadians as possible in this whole participatory process, so that the views of Canadians could be received and recommendations passed on to the Government of Canada.

It was a very interesting procedure. Our committee was able to organize for the first time, I believe, an NGO participation group, which has had two conferences. This represented non-governmental organizations, numbering some hundreds, which were called to Ottawa to discuss these problems from the point of view of citizens at large. I think that was a successful undertaking. I hope that it is possible to perpetuate it, and that the government will set up some kind of permanent forum for non-governmental people to talk about the issues of the day, insofar as human settlements are concerned, and pass on those views to the government.

We endeavoured to meet with provincial government representatives to discuss programs as they involve the provincial governments. We were in contact with the mayors of Canada, interesting them in Habitat and receiving their responses. We carried on a series of public meetings across the country, 16 in number, at which time representations were received from hundreds of interested groups.

On a perhaps more scholarly level, a series of symposia were held in 14 cities across Canada, at which certain themes were discussed and, I believe, a highly intellectual approach was taken to a wide variety of human settlement problems.

There were a variety of other programs held across the nation, including the Youth Dimension Program. Finally, we are publishing a catalogue of achievements, in which we will draw to the attention of Canadians some of the things Canada has done well.

This conference which will be held in Vancouver is not just a talkfest. It is a solution oriented conference. For the first time, nations of the world will be asked to give audio-visual and other presentations of successful programs which they have carried out, in which human settlement challenges have been met or successfully overcome.

Canada will have three demonstration programs in Vancouver. These are Management for Urban Growth and Land Use, Design Innovations for Cold Climates, and Governing Human Settlements. These will be presented to the world as part of the Canadian contribution, so that other nations may learn from what we have done in these particular areas.

Most of the 140 nations to be represented in Vancouver will give audio-visual presentations, which I assume will be of interest to everyone who attends and will, I am sure, be useful right across the world.

To carry that to the local situation, then, our committee will publish a catalogue of achievements in which the good things done by governments, by individuals and by organizations will be represented. I think it will be useful to the people of Canada to have the solutions that we have been able to achieve in this country.

One of our difficulties has always been that we are not able to know what others have done. Cities very often have to start from scratch in meeting a problem that faces them, whereas it is quite possible it has been solved by other areas.

Honourable senators, these are some of the things that went on in the background of this particular committee's work. Perhaps I should now refer briefly to some of the things we learned.

First, I would say there are many areas in which we had very little presented to us. This disturbed the committee. We heard very little on the problems of housing. There was a significant amount, but not enough considering the scope of the problem. We did not hear enough about social problems, the problems of the aged and the problems of the poor. We had very few presentations on behalf of urban Indians, who we recognize face significant problems and a real challenge to Canadian human settlements. These are some of the areas which we did not hear enough about. I am sure there is a good reason, and we tried to explain that in our report.

We heard a good deal about public participation, the involvement of citizens in the decision-making process, and were astounded to learn that in many areas of this country citizens felt frustrated by the fact that they have very little impact on what happens in their community. Perhaps one of the better examples in that respect was the city of Montreal. Many groups, as I say, really felt that they were not being listened to or were not being given an opportunity to be heard. The committee will be making suggestions as to how this might be improved.

● (1510)

As I say, we heard a good deal about the maintenance of small town and rural areas. As expressed to us in a great many places, the movement of people from rural areas into the cities is a matter of real concern. Honourable senators, we have suggested some programs we think might be effective in meeting this problem, recognizing that inevitably certain towns will eventually die, but suggesting to governments that they take a good look at the problem and start encouraging, in the best way possible, the maintenance of small town life where it is viable and where it can live and grow.

Other interesting topics of discussion were transportation, and restrictions inhibiting building. Perhaps you might be interested in this latter subject. The committee was quite concerned that building costs, as we all recognize, have reached the stage where it is almost impossible for the average Canadian to own his or her own home.

Perhaps you would allow me to read a part of this report of the Canadian National Committee. This is referring to the question of high cost restrictions involving zoning and building by-laws and so on, where we say:

One very important human settlement recommendation is that governments rethink the objectives served by building codes, zoning regulations, and development requirements. In our experience, citizens consider these to be often inflexible and over-sophisticated; they may sometimes seem to bar their access to housing, and also inhibit new concepts and possible reductions in the cost of housing. Without limiting the generality of this statement, we draw attention to a number of situations.

First, there exist many older homes in Canada that would never be built today because their design and standards would not meet CMHC or municipal requirements. Ironically, these buildings have been serving Canadians adequately for decades and may outlast "modern" homes that do meet seemingly artificial and arbitrary standards. Ironically, too, the over-sophisticated development standards may be counter-productive. This may become particularly true in relation to pollution standards. The situation was presented to us in Vancouver of the man who was told that he could no longer process his sewage through two septic tanks and a tile system but rather was forced to connect with a municipal system which was pumping untreated sewage into a public waterway. To be very blunt about it, the Committee heard "horror stories" about zoning, regulation, and codes from Inuvik, at one end of the country, through to St. John's, on the other end.

Without in any way lowering the standards to the point of encouraging poor housing, we suggested that a review be made of some of the standards we are now building into our system, which have the effect of adding considerably to the cost of housing—for example, densities, row housing and the like.

Honourable senators, one of the most important concerns expressed by the Canadians had to do with land use. What can we do about the loss of agricultural land in this country? We tend to think of Canada as a country with unlimited agricultural land. If, for example, you come from Saskatchewan, as I do, it is hard to visualize that we are in fact rapidly running out of good agricultural land, and that our urban sprawl has in past decades significantly reduced our productive agricultural land. But, we were universally informed by groups from right across the country that some form of national land policy, combined with provincial land policies, was essential. The question of public ownership of land was discussed, as was the question of whether land developed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation through land banking should be leased rather than sold. Another subject of discussion was the problem of land speculation around our cities, and the consequent significant boost in the cost of land—another major material factor in the high cost of housing.

Honourable senators, these are the kinds of subjects we heard discussed. Unfortunately, time does not permit me to recount all of the discussion fully, or even to touch on all of the issues which were raised in the course of what was, for both me and my committee, a most interesting experience, and one which gave us the opportunity to listen to Canadians from across the country.

You may well wonder how this then relates to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements. The conference will, of course, involve itself basically with international issues. Nevertheless, each nation is also expected to relate its objectives with respect to a national program, and in my opinion that is the significant role of the United Nations conference so far as its benefiting this country is concerned. I have often been asked what this conference will do for Canada. I suggest that it may well be a turning point, just as the Stockholm Conference was the turning point with respect to the environment because it affected air, water and that type of resource. I like to think that as a result of this conference people will become aware of the importance of protecting their environment in relation to human settlement areas, and that they will begin, in a variety of ways, to give more studied consideration to their communities, by beginning to participate in the decision-making process and becoming more concerned as Canadians with what happens to the places in which they live.

I hope the Government of Canada will set priorities and national objectives which will be meaningful for all Canadians; which will be targets for Canada to aim at in attempting to improve human settlements, whether urban or rural. For example, the government has already set as a target one million new housing units to be built in the course of the next four years; and there are many other areas of concern to Canadians which the government should set down as part of its position paper on the challenges to the future of Canadian settlements.

If we can cause Canadians to become aware of the fact that it does matter what happens to the places in which they live, and that governments at all levels—federal, provincial and local—do have real responsibility in achieving long-term objectives, it will be an important step in the direction of enjoying the kind of future we must face, which is basically urban but which does not minimize the importance of the rural or small town areas. To achieve this, however, a good deal of education, planning, co-ordination and an immense amount of money will be required. Can Canada meet these challenges? I think it can.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I should like to quote from a speech the Honourable Barney Danson delivered a few weeks ago before the session of the Preparatory Committee of the United Nations involved in this conference. He said:

—as I have said in a number of speeches in Canada and abroad, we believe that, in human terms, Habitat can be the most important United Nations Conference ever held. Its subject matter is of direct concern to all humanity and critical to the world we build for future generations. The opportunity for substantial progress in problem-solving that Habitat presents is immense.

[Senator Buckwold]

Recognizing this potential, the Canadian government, and the Canadian people, will do everything that we can to ensure that the Conference is a success.

In his closing remarks, which I think were quite appropriate and proper, Mr. Danson said:

● (1520)

Above all I look forward to an exemplary Conference that directs itself towards, and deals with, the critical issues which were its genesis. I hope that the world, and future generations, will be able to say that we met our obligations, that we faced the real issues, that we conducted ourselves with dignity, responsibility and mutual respect, and made progress for mankind. We have a unique opportunity to contribute significantly to world progress, and to reinforce the faith of those who have looked with hope to this body of the United Nations to bring harmony and dignity to humanity.

Honourable senators, this is a very brief resumé of Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, and what it means to the world and to Canadians. I hope that all honourable senators will have an opportunity to watch and participate in, if possible, what goes on in Vancouver. I suggest that what happens at that conference will be a significant factor in the future of this great country.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have a few brief comments to make on the excellent outline we have had from Senator Buckwold of the preparations for the United Nations conference to be held in Vancouver. I am afraid, however, that I speak as one who favoured and supported the earlier Canadian government decision not to extend Canadian hospitality to the representatives of an international terrorist organization. I most earnestly hope that the kind of problems that some have suggested may arise because of the presence in Vancouver of those terrorists, or their representatives, will not come about. We can hope that with good luck, and good sense or good management, and perhaps the necessary good policing, we may avoid in Canada the kind of disruption that those terrorists have caused elsewhere in the world.

I am quite sure honourable senators will agree with me, however, when I say that we wish this conference success, if for no other reason than the fact that the chairman of the Canadian National Committee for the Habitat conference is Senator Buckwold. I know he has given a great deal of time and attention to this important matter, and I am quite sure the planning for which he and his committee have been responsible will allay the fears that some of us have had about the decision of the Canadian government to go ahead and host this conference in the circumstances I have indicated.

I congratulate Senator Buckwold on his courage, even if I have some doubts about his discretion in accepting this very important responsibility. This is a United Nations conference, and while some of us have serious concerns about what is going on in the United Nations, and particularly in its UNESCO committee with regard to human rights, which are an essential part of the considerations that will be taken up at this conference, the best those of us who have some good will can do is to hope the conference will be a success.

There is no question in my mind that urban housing is not merely a domestic problem in Canada; it is a domestic problem in every country in the world. There are obvious interlocking international aspects of it from which, no doubt, we can learn, since our own housing policy has not been entirely successful, in view of the fact that in some areas, and in terms of numbers, it has fallen far short of its own objectives, in spite of the claims that have been made for it over the years. It is heartening to know, however, that the number of housing starts in Canada last year was greater than anticipated, and we hope it will be even greater this year.

Our housing policies have certainly not been a complete failure—far from it. There have been successes achieved and contributions made by Canadian policy in both the public and the private sectors with regard to this very serious problem. Canada might even be said to be a leader in certain aspects of the finding of solutions to urban problems, because our urban problems, particularly in the housing field, have their own distinctive features of geography and culture patterns.

I hope we can learn something and that we can contribute something. In the meantime, we will all, I am sure, be quite certain in our own minds that this will be a better conference than it might otherwise have been because Senator Buckwold has taken the responsibility he has.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I know that all members of this chamber appreciate the splendid and, indeed, moving report given us this afternoon by our distinguished colleague, Senator Buckwold.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: I feel sure that I speak on behalf of all members of the chamber when I express to him our gratitude for the outstanding work he has been doing during these past few months, not only on behalf of the Canadian National Committee, of which he is the chairman, but on behalf of the Senate as well. He has distinguished himself from coast to coast, and this reflects well on the Senate and the contribution which senators, regardless of party, make on a continuing basis to this country.

I have several times had the opportunity to visit the site of Habitat, and to follow the progress of the preparations for this conference. Without question, this will be the most important international event ever held in Canada. Senator Buckwold has already given us many of these facts, but there will be well over 2,000 delegates attending this conference, which is going to be held in British Columbia.

Early in the course of preparations there were some difficulties. Inevitably, there are difficulties during the organizational phase of any major event of this kind and magnitude, whether we are talking about the Olympics, United Nations conferences, or even large domestically-sponsored meetings.

Senator Grosart: Or party conferences.

Senator Perrault: Party conferences as well, senator; you are exactly correct.

Most of the early difficulties with respect to the Habitat conference have been overcome. Plans for the conference are proceeding on an encouraging scale. The organization is proceeding very well. I have some first-hand knowledge because of my personal visits to the area. As well, the preparations which are going ahead for the official bodies and the presentations which they will be making at the Habitat conference are very exciting.

I would like to urge honourable senators to remember that the dates of the conference are from May 31 to June 11. I think that many of us should endeavour to be there to provide the support and make the kind of contribution that I think we can to ensure that this conference is a great success.

Senator Grosart: Will we get time off for that?

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I know I am not supposed to speak again, but there is an important point that I did not bring up during my speech. Perhaps you will allow me to put this on the record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Buckwold: Thank you, honourable senators.

There is to be what is known as the parallel conference, or forum, in which non-government organizations and individuals will participate. At this conference, as in recent United Nations conferences around the world, individuals or representatives of non-government organizations are invited to attend and participate in discussion of the issues, to watch the proceedings, and to influence, if possible, what goes on at the international level when the nations are in fact presenting their individual position papers. They are given the opportunity of discussing the issues and using the platform of this forum without the restraints of national or international niceties. I would suggest that this is where the action will really be.

● (1530)

It is estimated that there will be anywhere from 5,000 to 10,000 people involved in this Habitat forum from all around the world. The forum will take place—although I should point out that I am not involved in the physical end of it—at Jericho Beach. I think the eyes of the world will probably be directed more at that forum than at the U.N. session itself. The forum will discuss what nations are saying, will try to influence national delegations and, I suppose, will be able “to say it like it really is.” I look forward to that participation and that influence on the part of nations from all over the world.

In response to Senator Grosart's remarks about U.N. conferences and the problems of terrorists and of dealing with those who represent terrorist organizations, my committee is well aware of this. If you read the report you will see that it indicates our concern. As a matter of fact, I think we use the word “disillusionment” with respect to United Nations conferences, and the fact that the public in many parts of the world has become disenchanted with what is going on at United Nations conferences where, in fact, political issues have become supreme as against the actual issues of the conference itself. I am hoping that this will not happen at Habitat.

Certainly, the minister responsible, who will be the presiding officer, the Honourable Barney Danson, has done his best to influence nations around the world, because he has travelled to many of them to really try to concentrate on the major issues facing this conference—that is, the issues of human settlement—and leave the political questions to the United Nations Assembly or the Security Council in New York.

Senator Quart: Would Senator Buckwold permit a question?

When he mentioned the non-governmental organizations, it brought to mind that I had the president of one of these organizations—in fact, one of the largest women's organizations in Canada—in my office the other day and this question of Habitat came up. I think that in recent publications and in the promotional literature we have received there has been mention of tours. My question is: Are those Canadian tours organized by a Canadian agency, by Senator Buckwold's committee, or by the United Nations? Just how are they organized?

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, representatives from nations around the world who will be in Vancouver are invited, if they so wish, to participate in tours in which Canada will try to show off some of the things we are proud of. Those tours are being organized by a department of the secretariat, and my particular committee is not involved with that aspect of it. But the participation secretariat, as it is known, is in charge, and will be glad to pass on any information.

Senator Quart: May I ask further whether a special brochure to this effect will be given us?

Senator Buckwold: I believe a special brochure was distributed to all members of Parliament just this week, and probably you will find one on your desk. I think it has a black cover.

Senator Quart: Thank you.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, March 29, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 29, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1976

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-91, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1977.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be read the second time later this day.

Senator Flynn: I am not objecting to giving leave, but I would like the Leader of the Government to explain why he wants leave to proceed tonight.

Senator Perrault: There are two other measures which it is felt should be dealt with before we get to this bill.

Senator Flynn: But as far as this bill is concerned, why is it necessary to proceed tonight?

Senator Perrault: Your question is, why is it being deferred until later this day?

Senator Flynn: Why do you wish leave to proceed tonight rather than in two days, or tomorrow?

Senator Perrault: I must apologize for misunderstanding your question. There is a problem of supply involved here. Together with the honourable senator, I regret that this bill has arrived here unavoidably later than any of us would have wished; but it is a supply situation, and I think the honourable senator is aware of this.

Senator Asselin: It is always the same. It is the same every year.

Senator Flynn: When does the Leader of the Government think this bill should receive royal assent, to avoid any problem?

Senator Perrault: With the cooperation of all senators, it is hoped that we could have royal assent tomorrow night. That is the tentative schedule.

Senator Asselin: Why?

Senator Perrault: It is because of the importance of paying out necessary moneys by the government.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I could ask the Leader of the Government to explain this most extraordinary position where tonight, presumably, we will resume our consideration of the report of the committee on supplementary estimates (B) for the current year and apparently we will also have an appropriation bill for the current year ending this week. We are now being presented with an interim supply bill, and we are being asked to rush all these measures through in 24 hours. It seems incredible that this kind of management of the affairs of the Senate or Parliament should be confronting us at this time.

We have not finished dealing with the estimates for the last year. We have not voted supply for the 1975-76 year, and we are now being asked to rush through an interim supply bill for 1976-77—all in 24 hours. Surely we can have royal assent on Wednesday, before the end of this fiscal year.

Is there some reason why we have to have royal assent tomorrow night? I cannot believe it.

Senator Perrault: Senator, it is the intention, indeed the necessity, to issue cheques over a three-day period beginning on Wednesday of this week. I suggest to you that the time available to consider the proposed legislation is not as long as any of us would wish, but I am sure honourable senators understand the nature of the problem and know that we want those entitled to payment to receive their cheques on schedule. I can only appeal to the usual cooperative spirit of the Opposition, and I invite them to understand the nature of this particular problem.

Senator Grosart: I am quite sure that on this side we try rather hard to show that necessary cooperative spirit and to understand these particular problems, but what I find most difficult to understand is why this government does not seem to understand these problems so that it could place these bills before us soon enough to give us time to consider them.

Senator Perrault: The point of view and the criticism registered by the honourable senator have been noted carefully on the government side.

Senator Grosart: They always are.

Senator Asselin: Every year.

Senator Flynn: Let us say that we will give leave to the sponsor of the interim supply bill to proceed tonight, on the understanding that we will not be bound to follow through with it right away.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, no government supporter would wish to take away any of the rights and prerogatives of the Opposition with respect to this matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Perrault, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

SIR ROBIN VANDERFELT, K.B.E., SECRETARY GENERAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on behalf of the members of the Senate I should like to extend our warmest welcome to a most distinguished visitor, Sir Robin Vanderfelt, K.B.E., Secretary General of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, who is spending two days in Ottawa.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Report, dated March 1976, of the Law Reform Commission of Canada entitled "Our Criminal Law", pursuant to section 18 of the Law Reform Commission Act, chapter 23 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970, together with explanatory notes.

Report of the Custodian of Enemy Property for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 3 of the Trading with the Enemy (Transitional Powers) Act, Chapter 24, Statutes of Canada, 1947.

Report on the administration of the Public Service Superannuation Act, Parts I and II, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to sections 36 and 49 of the said Act, Chapter P-36, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the administration of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, Chapter 43 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Correctional Investigator for the period from 1 June, 1974 to 31 May, 1975, issued by the Solicitor General of Canada.

Copies of Report of the Anti-Inflation Board, dated March 19, 1976, respecting suppliers of property and casualty insurance.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to point out at this time that it is the intention to have the Senate meet at two o'clock tomorrow afternoon in order to assure that the matters relating to supply are properly discussed, and that adequate opportunity is given to the Opposition to discuss the implications of the proposed expenditures.

• (2010)

Senator Flynn: The Leader of the Government has made a statement to the effect that we are going to meet at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon instead of tomorrow evening, as was arranged. Meetings of committees have been arranged for Tuesday morning and Tuesday afternoon. There is a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Legal and Constitutional Affairs called for tomorrow afternoon. May I ask the leader what is going to happen to the meeting of this particular committee, or any other committee that contemplated sitting at that time? It seems to me we are starting off on the wrong foot with regard to the new program.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that would be the last thing the government would wish to do. Meetings had been scheduled for tomorrow afternoon of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, and, I believe, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. The chairmen of both these committees have decided that it will not be necessary to hold those meetings tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Asselin: The members of those committees have not been consulted.

Senator Perrault: As I announced last week, it will be the intention to commence the block system of committee meetings next week.

Senator Flynn: Last week you said it would be next week.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, fortunately there is sufficient flexibility in this week's schedule to permit this kind of accommodation to be made, in the national interest.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs if his decision is the one reported by the Leader of the Government, and if he has willingly agreed not to have his committee meet tomorrow afternoon?

Senator Goldenberg: Honourable senators, having come in late, I did not know about this, but my deputy chairman advises me that this is what the committee will have to do.

Senator Flynn: Name him.

Senator Goldenberg: I appreciate the interest exhibited by the Leader of the Opposition in the meetings of our committee. He is a very valuable member, and I am very glad he spoke as he did.

Senator Grosart: You were told that that is what the committee would have to do. That is very interesting.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1976

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS UNTIL LATER THIS DAY

On the Order:

Second reading of the Bill C-90, intituled:

"An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1976".—(Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C.).

Senator Perrault: Stand until later this day.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 25, the debate on the motion of Senator Sparrow for the adoption of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance with respect to the supplementary estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have already tried to indicate the very strange nature of the position we are in. To repeat, at the moment we are considering the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (B) for the year 1975-76 which ends, I think, on Wednesday. I shall not refer to the other bills that are before us, in addition to the appropriation bill, consideration of which has been stood until later today.

I hope to indicate, in discussing the report of the committee, that there are excellent reasons why honourable senators might wish to give much more consideration to the report of the committee, and therefore to supplementary estimates (B), than it will be possible to give with this kind of schedule. I hope to indicate there are matters that should concern the Senate in supplementary estimates (B), but whether they do in fact concern the Senate or not is, of course, another matter.

We had the minister, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, before us during our consideration of these estimates, and he was extremely frank in his evidence. It will have been noticed that there was some criticism in some sectors of the press about his frankness on that occasion. My own personal opinion is that it was a most welcome presentation by the President of Treasury Board, and I, for one, do not share the criticism levelled at him in some sectors of the press for his frankness.

● (2020)

Supplementary estimates (B), which are being reported on by the committee, will increase the total estimates for the year by some $2.6 billion. That is an increase of 9 per cent under supplementary estimates (A) and (B) over the already fantastically huge amount in the main estimates. Some of us hoped at the time that we considered the main estimates that they might be sufficient for the government's requirements, but apparently not.

We have a statement of government policy, which appears in the White Paper respecting the anti-inflation program. It is the policy of the government to limit increases in federal government spending to a percentage equal to the percentage increase in the gross national product. Unfortunately, honourable senators, here we are presented with another case of where the government says, "This is what we will do," and then presents us with facts pointing out that that is the very thing they won't do. The increase this year, as Mr. Chrétien told us, is 16 per cent, and there seems to be little hope that it will be anything less than 16 per cent next year, and I am sure that no honourable senator would venture to suggest it is likely that our gross national product will increase by 16 per cent next year. Once again we are in the position of having before us government statements which apparently have no basis in fact. I would hesitate to add that they have no basis in intent, although that appears to be the situation from the statement already made as to what we can expect in the way of federal government expenditures next year.

The committee took a very serious view of this situation and raised two major points. One was as to the necessity for a 16 per cent increase in spending in this current year, and the second was as to the validity of the whole system of government control and government management of our finances.

In case any honourable senator thinks I am exaggerating I should perhaps recall that a study—the first since the Glassco Commission examined the government's efficiency in relation to expenditures, which was, I think, back in 1962—called the Financial Management and Control Study was instituted by the Auditor General, who reported a few months ago. The Auditor General in releasing this study made this comment:

The study leads to one clear conclusion: the present state of the financial management and control systems of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards and quality and effectiveness.

Honourable senators, I cannot think of a clearer indictment of the kind of thing we will be asked to approve later than that statement. We are told that the quality of the management of the spending of this money is substantially below any adequate level. But what is being done about it? We are told, "Well, this year we have cut $1.5 billion from the expenditures." I recall that the Leader of the Government, when we on this side suggested something better in the way of financial management, has often replied, "Where would you cut?" How many times has he said that to us? Well, the President of the Treasury Board came along and said, "We can cut $1.5 billion," and he detailed very carefully the places in which those cuts could be made.

Senator Perrault: Let us be happy about that.

Senator Grosart: Unfortunately, I am not happy about it, senator, for the reason that when he was asked to show us where this $1.5 billion in cuts could be made he admitted that the real cuts amounted to only $450 million. The rest are what? With respect to the rest of these cuts—I could give you his exact words but I will paraphrase them—he said, "What we really cut were the spending intentions of the departments as of last November".

Senator Flynn: Expectations.

Senator Grosart: "Expectations," as the Leader of the Opposition says, is probably a better word. They were great expectations which were not fully realized, but Mr. Chrétien does say that he was able to cut $450 million. Well, I think I can indicate from the report of the committee that the figure of $450 million is far from being accurate.

The second matter with which the committee concerned itself was the fact that in these supplementary estimates is contained the largest number of transfers from vote to vote, I think, in history—certainly for as long as I have been looking at estimates, which honourable senators know is a number of years. There are the largest number of $1 items, and the largest number of $1 items which are transfers. So we ask, "What is the significance of transfers?" The committee had this to say:

As in the past the committee was disturbed by one aspect of these $1 items. A substantial number of them authorize the provision of funds for unanticipated operating expenses through the deferral of capital projects. It is always preferable that the funds required be met by transfer within the authorized vote.

That, of course, is a standing rule. The report continues:

As already pointed out, this forces departments to look after their essential programs. The committee objects to the deferment of capital projects in this manner because most of them will eventually be proceeded with and will then require a substantially increased total expenditure due to the continued rise in construction costs.

I see Senator Benidickson nodding, because he was one who pressed that point in committee.

What is happening here? We asked the President of the Treasury Board, "Is one of the reasons for this very high number of transfers the squeeze that you put on the departments?" Understandably, he said yes. So the department then said, "All right, we can find the money." Where did they find the money? In most cases they said, "We are going to postpone a capital expenditure for construction that has already been approved by Parliament." The words are "defer," "we will delay," "we will postpone," and "we will use that money to take up the slack, the deficit in operating costs." Of course, every one of those capital projects will be proceeded with next year, when the cost will be greater. So, far from being a saving, we are faced with the government pretending to save money and actually costing the taxpayer more. This is the kind of thing that we are asked to rush through by tomorrow night, without any further consideration, without any reasonable opportunity for any senator—I am quite sure that there are senators on both sides concerned about this—to study this matter and give the Senate the benefit of his or her views.

● (2030)

I can illustrate this for honourable senators by running through some of these transfers. I am looking at the report of the committee, because appended to the report of the committee is the official list of the $1 transfer items. Let us look at a few of them.

Perhaps I could start with External Affairs. External Affairs was able to find $2,900,000 "due to a delay in the acquisition of a site for a new Chancery in Washington." One would suppose that this government would say, "We are really cutting out unnecessary expense. We are going to save money." What do we find in the same sector? Funds are available. We have not spent them. What do we do with them? "We are going to transfer from vote 5 to vote 10b, which will give us some additional funds to make up an operating shortage resulting from currency revaluations during the year"—which should have been anticipated in the main estimates. "We made a mistake, so we will transfer the Washington Chancery saving to this vote to cover tenant service costs"—all of which were predictable—"and to meet some operating costs of the long-range accommodation program of the department"—whatever that may be.

Let us take another department—National Health and Welfare. We find some unspent money in vote 20—$700,000. It says:

[Senator Grosart.]

Where do we transfer these funds? We transfer them:

To meet increased operating expenditures of the program for the balance of the current fiscal year.

That is all.

Let us try one of the other "hard savings" departments. Public Works found $6,898,996.

Funds are available due to unforeseen delays in construction projects.

What can we do with that?

Senator Asselin: Transfer.

Senator Grosart: We find additional funds are required for operational and maintenance costs of some property in Moosonee, transferred from the Department of National Defence.

They then found some more money in the amount of $4,699,999:

To provide for the increased costs of managing properties and for escalation clauses in leases.

The department is saying, "We could not even figure out what the rent was going to be for the year ahead. But we found some money, and it is available."

Let us try the Secretary of State, vote 20.

Senator Flynn: Disgraceful.

Senator Grosart: The Secretary of State found over $400,000 unspent.

Funds are available since all of the grants provided to construct, expand or improve facilities for the performing arts in Canada will not be used ($354,999) nor will the proposed grant to Massey Hall be paid in this fiscal year.

"We will have to build it next year, like all the rest of these capital items. What do we use this one for?"

(1) to provide a further $50,000 towards the cost of a study on the Canadian Film Industry.

We needed that badly, I imagine. And then:

(2) to defray the cost of the visit of the Prince of Wales last April—

A year ago! A comment escapes me.

Senator Perrault: What page are you referring to?

Senator Grosart: I am at page 1950 of the Debates of the Senate of March 24, in the year of our Lord 1976.

Funds are also provided to defray the cost of the visit of the Queen to Canada next July. That is fine, but if the government is being honest with the public, that should be found not in this year's supplementary estimates, or this year's main estimates, but in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977. On the one hand, the government says it is not going ahead with the grant to Massey Hall, and instead of accounting for those funds in the main estimates for the Queen's visit, which we would all applaud, it takes that money, by way of these supplementary estimates, and uses it for purposes of the Queen's visit. Next year, of course, we will spend the Massey Hall money. That is what I am objecting to.

Senator Perrault: It is admirable flexibility.

Senator Flynn: We know about flexibility.

Senator Grosart: I will not offer the Leader of the Government an alternate description to his description of "admirable flexibility." I would hardly trust myself. I have been trying to use parliamentary language all along.

Going on to the Department of the Solicitor General, vote 10, which is in the amount of $499,999, states:

Funds are available because of unforeseen delays in the Penitentiary Service construction program.

That is fine. We will go ahead with it next year, but in the meantime do we save that money? Do we put it in the bank? No. What is done with it? It is used to provide for a Special Communications Unit, responsible for informing the public concerning the peace and security program of the government.

Senator Flynn: Shame!

Senator Grosart: We have funds originally slated for the Penitentiary Service now going into government propaganda.

Next, we have Transport. There are some dandies in Transport. We find that $1 million is available because of delays in construction of port and ferry terminal modification at Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland. What is done with that? The funds are transferred from vote 45 to vote 1b, and the explanation is:

Additional funds are required to cover the cost of the Inquiry into Air Canada's financial activities—
We save the money at Port-aux-Basques and use it to inquire into the government's own ineptitude.

Senator Lamontagne: It is still Transport.

Senator Perrault: It got you here safely this evening.

Senator Grosart: Let us try another. Again under Transport we find $800,000—

Senator Perrault: I wonder if I might ask the honourable senator a question? Was it not the loyal Opposition which asked to have an inquiry into Air Canada's financial activities? Now the honourable senator objects to that expenditure by the government. He cannot have it both ways.

Senator Grosart: I can assure the Leader of the Government that I do not want it both ways. I do not feel that the government should be transferring money from the Penitentiary Service into a Special Communications Unit, or from a construction program at Port-aux-Basques into an inquiry into Air Canada. I want the government to state in the estimates what the funds are to be used for, and not to announce in an appropriation bill what might be a major policy program of the government. An appropriation bill is not the place to do that. I am sure the leader is aware of that.

I am not suggesting that the Air Canada inquiry should not have taken place or should not proceed. Lord knows, it is long overdue. What I am objecting to is the manner in which the government is transferring funds from one program to another. I am sure the leader is aware of that. I am not suggesting that some of these expenditures are not worthwhile. As we go along, the leader will have several opportunities to say, "Well, isn't that a good expenditure?" and I will agree with him immediately, particularly when we come to Veterans Affairs.

Still dealing with Transport, we have a $4,893,999 "savings" in vote 15, and another of $849,999 in vote 20. What is done with those funds? We will use this to provide for the price increases in petroleum products, something we knew all about at the start of the year.

● (2040)

Senator Perrault: Of course we did not know.

Senator Grosart: They knew prices were going up. It was part of government policy. We had a government paper telling us exactly what was going to happen.

Senator Perrault: You must have a crystal ball.

Senator Grosart: All the same, it does not matter; we have to pay. I am merely saying that here again we are paying operating costs out of funds voted by Parliament for capital expenditures and those capital expenditures will go ahead at greater cost. Every time the Leader of the Government wants me to repeat that I will do so if he just asks or encourages me.

Under Transport we did not go ahead with a bridge.

Senator Perrault: What page are we on?

Senator Grosart: Page 1951, half-way down the second column, vote 90, under Transport. We find $674,999, or Transport did.

Senator Flynn: You are going too fast for the Leader of the Government.

Senator Grosart: I will go a little slower.

Senator Perrault: You are skipping all over the place.

Senator Grosart: It says:

Funds are available due to the deferral of a bridge repainting project.

It does not say what the bridge was or why it cost $674,999 to repaint it. However, I will not argue that. Let us see what we did with that. We transferred this to vote 92b. This is to meet the operating deficits at the ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert. Of course, we had to meet them. Again I say, if this government cannot in its main estimates come reasonably close to estimating the operating deficits at the ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert, which could have been done—

Senator McDonald: Are we going to paint the bridge?

Senator Grosart: We will paint the bridge next year, when the cost of paint has gone up and when the cost of labour has gone up. We do not know where the bridge is; it does not say; we are not told. It has not been the policy of the government to disclose too much; it does not say where the bridge is.

Let us try another. I will not weary honourable senators too much; I have picked out ten or twelve. Let us look at Veterans Affairs. This is on page 1952. Here we find:

Funds are available due to the deferment of certain capital projects.

These were in one case to pay for uncollectable debts and in another to cover the increased costs of treatment services. Of course, a worthy cause; nobody doubts that. But here again it is operating expenditure paid for out of deferment of a capital project. To anybody who knows anything about accounting it distorts all accounting; it distorts and denies the statements made by the government that they are saving money.

Let us take another, from External Affairs. Here again they have experts at finding money. They found some more from delaying the acquisition of a site for a new chancery in Washington. You see, they did not put it all into the one I mentioned earlier. They said, "Let us see if we can use some more of these funds and do something with it. Yes, we are going to use this to provide grants in lieu of taxes on diplomatic and consular properties in Canada." Nobody can tell me that at the beginning of the year in the main estimates it was not possible to estimate the taxes on diplomatic and consular properties in Canada—not somewhere else but in Canada. Let us see how far we were out. We were out about $500,000.

Senator Flynn: Peanuts.

Senator Grosart: Peanuts. What is $500,000?

Under Labour we have the classic statement. The Department of Labour found $69,999 through:

Reorganization of the department and resultant delays in staffing certain positions.

Agreed, they have saved the money; they have reorganized the department to save the money. What did they save? These things have "freed resources." That is the official statement of the government; they have freed them; the money is free. What for?

Senator Perrault: To help the working people?

Senator Grosart: Again for a good cause, yes. But they are free. As I said before, I am objecting to the principle of hiding increased operating expenditures behind a pretended saving by operating capital projects voted by Parliament. As I said, I will repeat that as often as the Leader of the Government encourages me to.

The Secretary of State also reduced expenditures under the Citizenship Promotion Activity. How much did he save? Not much. This is a small one, $33,000. But then it was found necessary—and here is one we would all agree with:

To provide a grant to the Province of Newfoundland to commemorate the 25th anniversary of its entry into Confederation.

A good cause if ever there was one. Where did we get the money? Good old Massey Hall. For the benefit of the Leader of the Government, it is in the second column on page 1952:

Funds will be available since the proposed grant to Massey Hall will not be paid in this fiscal year.

It will be paid next year; Newfoundland is the beneficiary, and we are all happy about that, but they do not get the whole $500,000. I will leave where the rest goes.

Senator Perrault: To help Newfoundland.

Senator Grosart: Oh yes, and it should be a good celebration. Much more important to celebrate this than go ahead with old Massey Hall in Toronto.

Honourable senators, I bring these matters to your attention because the committee has commented on them, perhaps less abrasively than I have. Nevertheless, I suggest it is important that this Senate be given more time than we are being given now to look at these matters. I say that because I would like some honourable senator to get up and tell me I am wrong, that this is not happening, that I am not able to read these figures. I would like some honourable senator on the other side, or on this side, to get up and tell me how they should be looked at. We should do more than consider the report of the committee at half-past eight or so tonight, and then presumably, at the request of the Leader of the Government, pass the appropriation bill based on these kinds of facts later on tonight, or at least, according to his suggestion, in time for royal assent tomorrow night.

I am one who believes that this Senate and the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have a very important role to play in scrutinizing the expenditures of the government. To those who say from time to time that it is not our business, the obvious answer is that supply is the business of Parliament, not of any one house of Parliament. I believe we have this role to play. We have in the past played the role. I have had the privilege of serving on the National Finance Committee under some outstanding chairmen and I believe important contributions have been made. I hope that we will make another contribution in this very field when we deal with the next set of estimates. I am going to ask that Treasury Board supply us with a complete list showing every capital construction project that has not been proceeded with. In committee I asked a senior official, "If I remember that in the main estimates Parliament said such-and-such construction work is to go ahead, let us say in my constituency, and it has not gone ahead, can anybody tell me about it? Is there any way I can know?" There is no way in the world. Even when this money is transferred, when the project is abandoned, as it is and as it will be, if and when we pass this appropriation bill it is abandoned and nobody knows about it. I intend to ask for a complete list. I should like to know where that bridge was on which we saved the $674,999 by not painting it. I should like to know the details of all of these others as well. I think that is important.

● (2050)

Honourable senators, I repeat that I regret we are being put in this position once again of having to rush through serious matters such as this in the time we are asked to do it.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Sparrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator Godfrey, that this report be now adopted.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: Reluctantly.

Motion agreed and report adopted.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

HONOURABLE MURIEL McQUEEN FERGUSON, P.C.—FORMER SPEAKER OF THE SENATE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to welcome another distinguished guest in the gallery, the former Speaker, the Honourable Muriel McQueen Ferguson.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1976

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill C-90, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1976.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-90, which was introduced on Thursday last in this chamber, provides full supply for the second or final supplementary estimates for 1975-76, totalling $921 million. These estimates contain voted items of $343 million, and also revisions to earlier forecasts of statutory items of $578 million. These supplementary estimates provide for adjustments to costs of existing programs, and some items which do not involve the expenditure of new funds but which are simply accounting adjustments.

Honourable senators will recall that royal assent has already been given to three supply bills covering estimates for the current fiscal year. The first provided interim supply for the months of April, May and June of 1975; the second, assented to on June 26, 1975, provided full supply for the balance of the main estimates; the third, assented to on December 15, 1975, provided full supply for supplementary estimates (A) for 1975-76.

The estimates on which the present bill is based were tabled in this house and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on March 3 last. They were discussed with the President of the Treasury Board on March 10, 1976, and were discussed again on March 23 with his officials.

These estimates bring the total for the fiscal year to $32,257,000,000, not inclusive, of course, of the old age security fund of $3,969,000,000. I should like to return to that item later.

The following is a list of the larger items included in the supplementary estimates. Honourable senators will note that almost all payments by the government are for assistance to provinces, individuals or some other segment of the economy. The amounts are as follows:

$186 million for the two-price wheat program, which keeps the price of bread down;

$155 million for public debt charges;

$114 million to cover the final deficit in the old age security account—and, again, I will return to that item later.

$113 million for various fiscal transfers to provinces;

$107 million to provinces to cover our share under provincial welfare plans;

$40 million to compensate the railways for operating unprofitable services to the public;

$35 million for the 1975 deficit of the Canadian National Railways;

$26 million to set up a drawing account for temporary advances in the operation of the defence program;

$24 million towards our share of the provinces' university education costs;

$23 million to provide for forgiveness of an old loan to Rumania, a loan dating back to the First World War; and $22 million for price support payments to farmers.

These eleven items total $845 million, or around 90 per cent of the total supplementary estimates.

As promised by the President of the Treasury Board, quite clearly in this year the total expenditures have been held to a 16 per cent increase over those of 1974-75, according to the most recent calculations. This percentage increase, which is inclusive of the final supplementary estimates, has been maintained in the face of the inflation which we have been living through, with the pressures it placed on indexed social programs, on interest rates, on capital costs, and on salaries and goods and services. In meeting this target a number of departments have absorbed all or part of the increase in costs in excess of previous estimates by exercising restraint across the ministry through complete or partial offsets in the same vote or by transfer from another vote.

These supplementary estimates contain 45 $1 items, which may be grouped as follows:

(a) 27 items which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another;

(b) 9 items which authorize the payment of grants;

(c) 4 items which authorize the deletion of debts due the Crown;

(d) One item which authorizes a financial guarantee;

(e) 3 items which amend the legislative provisions of previous appropriation acts; and,

(f) 1 item which amends an act other than an appropriation act.

Explanations of these $1 items were provided to the National Finance Committee for their review.

As I promised earlier in my remarks, I will now supplement the information which was provided to the National Finance Committee by officials of the Treasury Board regarding the $114 million covering the final deficit in the Old Age Security Account.

As honourable senators will no doubt recall, prior to June 28, 1975, the Old Age Security Act provided for a fund to which would be credited 4 per cent of personal income tax, with a maximum of $240 per person per year, 3 per cent of corporation tax, and 3 per cent of sales tax, and against which would be charged the payments made for old age security and guaranteed income. The act also provided that should a deficit occur in the fund, amounts would be advanced by the Minister of Finance and action taken at the end of a year to clear these advances. Since there were deficits in 1973-74 and 1974-75, items were included in the final supplementary estimates of both years to cover these deficits. The amount of $114,035,156 included in supplementary estimates (B) for 1975-76 represents the deficit in the fund for the period from April 1, 1975 to June 27, 1975, which is due mostly to indexing.

● (2100)

Bill C-62 amended the Old Age Security Act effective June 28, 1975, by cancelling the old age security fund and thereby making the OAS/GIS payments budgetary expenditures, similar to family allowance payments, and requiring that the receipts be credited directly to the Consolidated Revenue Fund as tax revenues. This is a complete departure from the previous method of accounting for this fund.

As a result of the change, OAS/GIS payments amounting to $4,506,182,000, broken down as to $3,354,280,000 for OAS, $1,051,902,000 for GIS, and $100 million for spouse's allowance payments, have been shown in the 1976-77 main estimates for the first time.

I wish to conclude my remarks tonight on this bill by expressing the hope that I have covered its important features. It remains only for me to say in closing that if any further information is required by honourable senators I shall do my best to provide the same.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1976

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill C-91, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, the main estimates for 1976-77, on which this bill is based, were tabled in the Senate and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on February 19, 1976. This committee will have ample opportunity to discuss them and report to the Senate thereon before we are called upon to give final approval.

Before I go on with my remarks concerning this bill, I should like to digress for a moment to refer to a suggestion made some three or four weeks ago in this chamber by Senator Croll. It was to the effect that more opportunity should be given to the Senate to discuss governmental expenditures. This suggestion was supported, both in this house and in committee, by Senator Benidickson and other honourable senators.

It will be recalled that at that time, after having reminded honourable senators of the opportunity presently given to them to consider both the main and supplementary estimates in this chamber and in the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, I undertook to give full consideration to the suggestion of our colleagues and to study the mechanics by means of which further consideration could be given to estimates in this chamber, apart from the opportunity already afforded to honourable senators to debate reports of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, interim supply bills and other appropriation bills based on supplementary estimates.

After consultation with honourable senators and senate staff, it seems to me that the most appropriate way of obtaining the desired result would be for any honourable senator wishing to bring estimates of a particular department to the special attention of this chamber to do so by way of notice of inquiry, specifying any item or group of items of a particular department in which he is interested.

Senator Flynn: There is nothing new in that.

Senator Langlois: It is only a suggestion.

[Senator Langlois.]

Senator Flynn: But there is nothing new in it. We have always been able to do that.

Senator Langlois: It just a suggestion as to one way of doing it.

In my opinion, several such notices of inquiry could be given in any one session, provided there were no repetition of an item already brought to the attention of the house in this way. Furthermore, it would also seem to me to be quite proper to introduce or initiate such inquiries irrespective of the fact that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has already reported to the Senate on any main or supplementary estimates referred to it for consideration, as long as the estimates forming the subject matter of the inquiry have already been tabled in this chamber. This is a condition which is necessary, because we could not study estimates which have not been tabled in this house.

As I said in replying to the comment by the Leader of the Opposition a few minutes ago, this is merely a suggestion. We were looking for a way of doing this, and I am passing on this suggestion to the Senate. I am, of course, in the hands of the Senate, and the Senate will be the body that will decide in the final analysis. I present the suggestion for what it is worth, and I hope it will receive favourable consideration.

Coming back to the bill before us, the 1976-77 main estimates total $39,545 million, consisting of budgetary expenditures of $38,417 million and non-budgetary expenditures of $1,128 million. This bill, in the amount of $4,970,732,370.57, is the first interim supply bill for the 1976-77 fiscal year, and will release a general proportion of three-twelfths of the items to be voted in these estimates as well as additional proportions for 35 votes.

This bill provides for all necessary requirements of the public service to June 30, 1976. It is in the usual form of previous interim supply bills and in no instance does it request the release of the total amount of any vote.

In general, the 35 votes which require additional portions may be grouped as follows:

(a) Votes for which it is necessary to pay grants early in the fiscal year. An example of this is: Secretary of State, vote 90.

(b) Votes for which additional sums are required to finance programs until forecast revenues are received later in the fiscal year. For example: Finance, vote 20; Supply and Services, votes 1 and 15; Transport, votes 65, 90 and 110.

(c) Votes which provide for payments incurred on a calendar rather than fiscal year basis. For example: Transport, votes 40 and L75; Urban Affairs, vote 15.

(d) Votes for which additional proportions are required because expenditures are greater than in the early part of the year. For example: Energy, Mines and Resources, vote 1, L45, L50, L55 and 70; Environment, vote 15; Finance, vote 5; Indian Affairs and Northern Development, votes 5, L60, L65 and L85; Industry, Trade and Commerce, votes 55 and 75; Manpower and Immigration, vote 10; Post Office, vote 5; Privy Council vote 25; Regional Economic Expansion, votes 25 and L35; Secretary of State, vote 15; Solicitor General, vote 1; Transport, vote 50; Treasury Board, votes 5 and 10; Urban Affairs, votes 10 and 20.

● (2110)

I wish to add that this bill also provides borrowing authority for $6 billion. This borrowing authority was discussed at some length in the other place, and it is very interesting to read what was said there in connection with this subject, although most of the discussion centered on the amount of the borrowing authority when compared to that sought in previous years. It also has a connection with the public debt of Canada, which was fully discussed by members of the House of Commons.

In closing my remarks, I again offer to supply honourable senators with any information they might wish in connection with this bill, and I shall endeavour to do my best in this respect.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the sponsor of the bill if he will agree to having it referred to committee in order that we might inquire into this borrowing authority and what it implies?

Senator Langlois: If honourable senators wish, I have this information available and I am ready to give it now.

Senator Flynn: I understand the deputy leader is well versed in all the affairs of all the departments of government, but it seems to me that he is not necessarily the best witness.

Senator Langlois: I grant you that I am not the best witness, but you know where I am getting the information from. As a lawyer, I know that you will call whatever I say hearsay evidence, and if given before the committee it probably could still be considered as hearsay evidence. However, if the honourable senator wishes me to elaborate on this, I am ready to do so right now.

Senator Flynn: Well, I am in fact asking a question, the answer to which I understand to be no. If the answer is no, we might as well wait until the end of the debate when perhaps you could supply us with the information in your closing remarks. If that is the way we are going, then we might as well wait.

Senator Langlois: I regret having to refuse my honourable friend anything. He knows I always try to please him.

Senator Flynn: But you don't always succeed.

Senator Langlois: Well, it may be that you are very hard to please, but your judgment in this regard is better than mine.

Due to the urgency which was explained earlier to the house, as the leader said, we regret being placed in a position where it would be very difficult to proceed with this bill in committee.

Furthermore, it has been the practice of this chamber not to refer such bills to committee. I remember, as I am sure my honourable friend also remembers, the many debates we have had in past sessions on this subject. The more we discussed it, the further we seemed to be from a solution to the problem. I do not think further discussion at this stage would serve any useful purpose, but I repeat that I shall be pleased to comply with any request for information in that respect from my honourable friend.

Senator Flynn: I just wanted to find out if the deputy leader had changed his mind. I thought that perhaps by a miracle he might have become more flexible.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, before moving adjournment of the debate, I must say I was rather surprised to hear my leader say that he thought that perhaps the government had become more flexible in the meantime. I am sure it was a slip on his part. However, to get clarification on this, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.
The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 30, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE JOSEPH A. SULLIVAN

FELICITATIONS ON RETURN TO CHAMBER

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I note the return to the chamber of Senator Sullivan. We have all missed him. I know that his friends in the loyal Opposition have missed him. We are delighted to have him back in apparent buoyant good health.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Sullivan: Honourable senators, no one is more happy to be able to walk into the Senate chamber than I am. Thank you for the welcome.

FEEDS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE BY COMMONS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS TO COMMONS AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to the Commons amendments to Bill S-10, to amend the Feeds Act, without amendment.

CONCURRENCE BY COMMONS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-71, to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE

BANK'S REFUSAL TO CASH GOVERNMENT PAY CHEQUES— QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government if he has any comment to make on the article which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail entitled, "Workers get shock at bank: Government cheques NSF." Maybe the Leader of the Government hasn't read it. Apparently a bank here in Ottawa yesterday refused to cash cheques made payable to the staff of the House of Commons.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall not comment at this time on the cheque cashing policy of our private banking institutions. However, I note with interest that the cheques are dated March 31, and an effort was made to cash them on March 29. Perhaps an effort will be made to cash more of them today. The government is not in default of its responsibilities, and I hope that no one in this chamber is in default of their responsibilities later this day.

Senator Flynn: That is a very interesting suggestion. Does the government leader think this article is somehow connected with the fact that the appropriation bill before us came to the Senate very late and that some people fear we may not process it in time?

Senator Perrault: That kind of criticism can be made only by those with a narrow partisan interest, and I certainly do not accuse the honourable Leader of the Opposition of any such motive. I realize that he and other honourable senators know that it is through circumstances beyond the effective control of the government that this supply situation has arisen and that the bills relating to supply have arrived here later than any honourable senator would have wished. Indeed, they have arrived later than the government would have wished.

I would remind the house, however, that debate in the other place has been protracted over many days, and even weeks, in regard to a number of matters of public interest, thus affecting the schedule of activities. I join with the honourable senator, of course, in urging the other place to send to us important measures of this kind as soon as possible, because circumstances like these present serious difficulties for all of us here. We understand that.

Senator Flynn: I am quite sure the Leader of the Government wishes to assure the Senate that he will not submit to the whims of the Leader of the Government in the other place and that he will see to it that the leader in the other place realizes that we need some time to pass these bills and that when they come, as they do, at the last possible minute it does not give us the opportunity really to do our duty properly.

Can the Leader of the Government tell me if it is possible that the government would issue cheques where no funds were available to honour them?

Senator Perrault: I wish to assure honourable senators that that is not the case. The government would not issue cheques on the basis of any empty bank account. The credit of the Government of Canada, in effect the credit of the people of Canada, stands among the best in the world. There is no doubt about the capacity of this nation to meet its obligations.

Senator Flynn: That is not my question.

Senator Bourget: It is part of the answer.

Senator Perrault: With respect to the urgency of supply, honourable senators are aware of the fact that leaders of opposition parties in the other place have exercised their full right to participate in the discussion in the other place on the subject of supply. Indeed, some of the opposition members have made long speeches over there, which is their right, but this again has added to the delay in the scheduling of the measures which are before the Senate today.

I want to assure honourable senators that there is no reluctance on my part to advance the interests and needs of this chamber on every possible occasion. The best evidence of that is the fact that this current session has seen more matters referred to the Senate than has been the case in recent years, and we shall continue to improve that process, if it can be done.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the Leader of the Government a question? When do we in the Senate have to pass the two appropriation bills so that cheques won't be refused by banks or won't be delayed by the government?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is felt that it would be desirable to have these matters dealt with today in the usual detailed fashion that the Opposition accords to matters of this kind, and that it might be possible to invite Her Majesty's representative here at 9.45 this evening for royal assent.

Senator Flynn: Would tomorrow be too late?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, I know that we do not want to cause undue anxiety on the part of thousands of employees of this government who are working so diligently to advance the national interest.

Senator Grosart: You should have thought of that earlier.

Senator Flynn: That was the first answer the Leader of the Government should have given us. So in a few words, the Senate is bound to pass this bill today or tomorrow at the latest. That is the point.

Senator Langlois: Probably today.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, I believe it was about two weeks ago that I asked the Leader of the Government if he was in a position to make a statement on the intentions of the government in the matter of the sale of nuclear reactors to various countries. I am not certain if an answer has been given. If it was, I may have been away. I notice, however, from news reports that apparently the government is continuing its policy of selling or endeavouring to sell nuclear reactors to a number of countries. Argentina has been mentioned recently, for example, as has South Korea. I think honourable senators will agree that these certainly are countries whose governments are far from stable, and I would not think the Government of Canada would want to place reliance on a mere undertaking as to the use that would be made of fissionable material.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government could enlarge on this matter? I do think that a great many people across this country regard this as being a serious matter.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in view of recent political events abroad, I suggest that I take this question as notice and endeavour to provide a fuller reply at some later date.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION

NEW OFFICES—INTERIOR WALL DECORATION—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I attempt to reply to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Forsey, on March 23? Senator Forsey stated that he had heard reports that the new quarters of the Public Service Commission included walls decorated with suède. He suggested that the stories were "astonishing," and many honourable senators found themselves in accord with those sentiments.

I am informed that the situation is as follows. Because of the increase in the activities of the commission over recent years, especially in the language training area, the commission's headquarters in Place de Ville had become too small to accommodate all the employees and as a result they were dispersed in many different locations in the National Capital Region. Last spring the Department of Public Works moved the commission's offices to l'Esplanade Laurier. A budget of $2.4 million for fitting up the new building was approved, based on an estimated cost of $6.75 per square foot. I am informed that the commission operated within this budget.

Senator Flynn: Including suède walls?

Senator Perrault: As for the report of suède walls, I can inform honourable senators that they do not exist. The walls in the core area, that is, the entrance area, hallways and corridors, of the executive floor are covered with a synthetic fabric which looks like suède but which is not. The additional cost of this fabric amounted to $6,500 for the entire floor, which represents 22,153 square feet.

With respect to furnishings, specific instructions were issued and no new furniture was purchased in connection with the move to l'Esplanade.

In short, we have here a case of no new furniture and only synthetic suède walls.

Senator Flynn: "Synthetic" is a very appropriate word for this government.

Senator Perrault: I will not comment on the quality of the utterance from the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Grosart: I thought I heard the Leader of the Government say that the synthetic suède walls cost $6,000 to cover 153 square feet. Did I hear him correctly?

Senator Perrault: I am pleased to correct that figure. The sum was $6,500 for the entire floor, which represents 22,153 square feet of wall covering.

Senator Forsey: I wonder if I might ask a question of the Leader of the Government? What would have been the cost of painting the walls, the way ordinary people do?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I hesitate to say that I will take the question as notice since the honourable senator would probably know what several tins of latex would cost.

TRANSPORTATION

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SERVICES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, two questions were posed by Senators Macdonald and Riley on March 22 regarding CNR service. Senator Macdonald asked if it is the intention of the CNR to abandon the rail passenger service between Sydney and Truro and to substitute a bus service. Senator Riley asked whether it is the intention of the Canadian National Railways to apply to CTC to abandon all rail services on Prince Edward Island. The reply is as follows:

The CNR has assured us that they are making no plans whatsoever to abandon the rail passenger service between Sydney and Truro and to substitute it with a bus service or to abandon all rail services on Prince Edward Island. Honourable senators can be assured that both the Railways Act and the National Transportation Act protect the public interest and the provision of essential services by requiring CTC public hearings before the railways can be authorized by the CTC to undertake any major change in services.

Even though railways do not intend to abandon all rail passenger services they must file for abandonment with the CTC, should an event of this kind occur elsewhere, in order to get the 80 per cent subsidy payments on their losses, as per the Railway Act.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1976

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for the second reading of Bill C-90, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1976.

Senator Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, after the exchange I had with the Leader of the Government, I don't know if it is of any use whatever for me to take part in this debate. He would probably prefer that I remain in my seat and let the bill pass second and third reading and receive royal assent tonight in order to forestall any criticism of the government or, which is more important, of the Senate. I say that because every time the Senate takes more than a few hours to deal with an appropriation bill at the end of a fiscal year, we are invariably accused of being responsible for the fact that public servants might not be able to cash their pay cheques. I think the record should show that this particular bill, Bill C-90, received first reading last week, on Thursday to be precise, and we started dealing with it on second reading last evening, in accordance with our rules. We have not in any way delayed, either through the actions of the Senate as a whole or through the actions of the Opposition, the proper handling of this bill. At any rate, in view of the circumstances my remarks will be brief.

I should like first of all to deal with the problem which I have raised on previous occasions in connection with appropriation bills dealing with supplementary estimates. I ask for a clear answer from the sponsor of the bill who, as usual, was very eloquent but a little briefer than usual in his explanation of the bill. That was not a bad thing under the circumstances; the less he says the less he is likely to obtain in reply. My question is why, in a supplementary estimates appropriation bill, do we have this paragraph found here in clause 3(2) which says:

3. (2) The provisions of each item in the Schedule shall be deemed to have been enacted by Parliament on the 1st day of April, 1975.

Does it mean that we are giving retroactive power to the government in respect of these estimates? Does it mean that the government contracted or entered into a commitment prior to the passing of this bill and prior to this bill's receiving royal assent, and that we are now sanctioning these commitments or agreements? I wonder whether this is in effect what is happening. I cannot understand it, but it appears to be standard practice. However, it seems strange that we should find in a bill a provision which would in effect assure the government that if it has already entered into an agreement or even paid moneys which are only now provided for by this bill it does not matter, as the provisions of each item shall be deemed to have been enacted by Parliament on the first day of April, 1975. I would like the sponsor of the bill, or anyone else, to tell me if the effect of this provision is that which I have suggested? In my opinion it cannot be anything else. If Parliament is not to be made a rubber stamp—and I have detected an unfortunate drift in that direction in the past few years—as far as expenditures of government are concerned, this clause should certainly not be included.

● (1420)

Senator Grosart last night, in dealing with the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the supplementary estimates, expressed the view that not only Parliament but the government itself is losing control over expenditures. He quoted from a report of the Auditor General of Canada, which I believe is worthy of being repeated. It refers to a study carried out by the Auditor General, and says:

The study leads to one clear conclusion: the present state of the financial management and control systems of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness.

That has come to be my conviction over the years I have spent in the other place and in this chamber. Not only is Parliament losing control because it cannot under the circumstances in which it operates apply an effective control over government expenditures, but the government itself is losing complete control. Of course, one fact that proves the last point, the loss of control by the government, is the comparison between the main estimates and the supplementary estimates. The report of the Committee on National Finance on the supplementary estimates sets forth a table at page 1948 of Senate Hansard of March 24. That table indicates that over the years the percentage increase of the supplementary estimates over the main estimates has gone from 2.8 per cent in the fiscal year 1969-70 to 21 per cent for the fiscal year 1974-75. By the way, I am not discussing the growth in the budget itself but am referring to the fact that over the last three years the total estimates have practically doubled. At any rate, as far as the supplementary estimates are concerned, last year the increase was 21 per cent in comparison with an increase of 2.8 per cent in the fiscal year 1969-70. This year it is being stated as nine per cent.

I should like to put forward a correction which, in my opinion, should be made to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. In connection with the presentation of supplementary estimates over the past few years, there has been established a practice of transfer payments. That subject was dealt with last night by Senator Grosart. The government has said, "Well, if we do not use the money in the way intended in the main estimates, we will use it for something else." But if they do that, they are admitting that the amounts now being provided by transfer were not foreseen as necessary at the time of the main estimates. Some expenditures that had been foreseen proved unnecessary, but others cropped up that had not been foreseen, and so now the government is providing for those expenditures they had not foreseen with money provided for expenditures which proved unnecessary.

When I checked the transfer payments in supplementary estimates (A), which we passed in September, I found that they amounted to $41,229,700. In supplementary estimates (B) the total amount of the transfer payments has risen to $51,244,000.

That figure is not peanuts. Together the two figures amount to $92,473,700, which adds approximately 0.5 per cent to the 9 per cent mentioned in the report. Imagine, $92 million that was not foreseen and which will now be spent because other programs or other expenditures were abandoned.

This is a way for the government to cover up a very serious situation. I suggest that increasingly we see that the government is unable to prepare the main estimates in a realistic manner and later has to bring in supplementary estimates—and hidden supplementary estimates such as this $92 million in the guise of transfer payments. It means that the commitment made by the President of the Treasury Board, that next year he has set an upward limit of $1.5 billion as a target for the allocation of funds to supplementary estimates, is entirely unbelievable and unrealistic.

These estimates and the report of the committee prove that the government is unable to control its expenditures. The government has on several occasions referred to its so-called policy of restraint. Last year we were told that the government was going to cut $1.2 billion, and, for this fiscal year, over $2 billion. Just imagine what the situation would be with regard to these unexpected expenses, which are not only in fields where the government is bound by statute but also in fields where they should have some control because they involve new programs or, as was shown by Senator Grosart, expenditures that could be foreseen.

In any event, I point out to honourable senators that, at a time when we are invited to pass Bill C-90, government control over expenditures is practically non-existent, and that because of the situation in which the Senate is put, and because of the situation in which the House of Commons finds itself because of its system of proceeding with these estimates, Parliament has really no control over the public purse and, as a result, the taxpayer suffers.

It is about time that we had something other than promises about controlling anticipated expenditures.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if Senator Langlois speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I shall endeavour to be as brief as possible in my reply to the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition. By so doing, I will be taking his very good advice that, the less you say, the less you have to account for later on.

● (1430)

Senator Flynn: I may speak on third reading.

Senator Langlois: The Leader of the Opposition commenced his remarks by quoting a statement of the Auditor General, which was read into Debates of the Senate last evening, but in so doing he neglected to relate it to the year in which it was made. For the benefit of honourable senators, I wish to read what was said by Senator Grosart in this respect last evening, and I quote from page 1967 of yesterday's Debates of the Senate:

In case any honourable senator thinks I am exaggerating I should perhaps recall that a study—the first since the Glassco Commission examined the government's efficiency in relation to expenditures, which was, I think, back in 1962—called the Financial Management and Control Study was instituted by the Auditor General, who reported a few months ago. The Auditor General in releasing this study made this comment:

The study leads to one clear conclusion: the present state of the financial management and control systems of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness.

I wish to point out to honourable senators that in his remarks Senator Grosart referred to the fact that this was the first such study by the Auditor General since 1962. There have been intervening governments, and possibly the same situation existed in the past as the one reflected in the statement by the Auditor General. I say that to place the statement in its proper perspective.

The Leader of the Opposition went on to say that the government has lost control of its expenditures, as well as making a point of the fact that supplementary estimates (B) are coming to us at this late stage of our present session and just a few days before the end of the current fiscal year.

Earlier today, reference was made to the article appearing in the Globe and Mail of today's date entitled "Workers get shock at bank: Government cheques NSF." I have been informed by Treasury Board officials that this article is absolutely accurate in its recounting of the events leading to the situation described. It is possible that this situation was partly created by the debate which took place in the other place during the course of the consideration of this measure at the end of last week, at which time mention was made of the urgency of its passage. Apparently, some employees of the House of Commons went to a local branch of a bank and endeavoured to cash cheques in advance of the date for which the cheques were made payable.

Senator Asselin: The Bank of Montreal.

Senator Langlois: I do not think I need mention the name of the bank. It could have been any branch of any bank in this country. We have to bear in mind that government represents a very large business. These cheques are sent right across Canada, and to foreign lands where there are government employees. The cheques themselves are dated over a period of three days, starting tomorrow and going into Thursday and Friday, in order to avoid a rush on our banking institutions in those cities where there is a high concentration of government employees.

I do not think we should lose sight of the fact that to us, as members of Parliament, these cheques may not be that important. However, for those public servants who are in the lower income brackets, it is important that the money be available when due. Otherwise, they may not be able to look after their financial needs through to the next pay period. For those employees, it is an important factor.

I do not lay the blame for this situation on any member of this house. As I said last evening, we regret being placed in the unfortunate position of having to deal with these appropriation bills on such short notice. This has been a regular occurrence over the ten years I have been a member of the Senate. We have always been getting these supply bills at the very last moment, and asked to act on them quickly.

Senator Asselin: I wonder if I might ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator Langlois: I would prefer to finish my remarks before answering any questions. Perhaps you would not mind waiting until I finish.

Senator Asselin: I shall try.

Senator Langlois: As my leader said last evening, we regret being placed in this position. When the government house leader in the other place called me last Friday morning in connection with these two bills, urging, as he did, that it was very important that they be passed some time today, I told him that I was in the hands of the Senate in that regard; that I would need leave to proceed with them in that time period. I told him that it was up to the Senate to decide, and reminded him that only one member of the Senate need withhold consent for such leave to be denied. I said that this is a decision for the Senate to make independently of what took place in the other house.

We know there are delays. If someone could invent a device to control the verbal flow in the other place, we would probably not be faced with this problem.

Senator Bourget: That is true on both sides.

Senator Langlois: In saying that, I am not criticizing what has taken place in the other place. We live in a democratic society with parliamentary government, and any member of Parliament is free to speak his mind as often and for as long as he wishes. I would be the last to tell anyone in this house, or in the other place, that he or she has spoken too often or too long.

[Senator Langlois.]

I feel each of us should consider his own responsibility in this respect. If any member of the Senate feels that these cheques should be delayed for another week, so be it; but he or she will have to assume that responsibility. My duty is to request leave to proceed with third reading of this bill today, but I would not challenge anyone's right to deny that leave, thereby postponing passage of this bill for as long as he wishes, knowing the consequences that will flow for those who do not receive their cheques on time.

Senator Flynn: That's it—put the blame on us.

Senator Langlois: I do not think I can be any more sincere than I am now in explaining the situation as I see it. In so doing, I am simply performing my duty as a member of the Senate.

Senator Grosart, during the course of his remarks last evening, drew the attention of the Senate to the number of $1 items contained in supplementary estimates (B). Notwithstanding the fact that his remarks in this connection were made in the course of the debate on the motion for the adoption of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance with respect to supplementary estimates (B), on which this bill is based, I think I can properly deal briefly with those remarks during the course of the present debate.

● (1440)

He mentioned that the number of $1 items connected with supplementary estimates (B), the basis of the present bill, is larger than ever before, and he was right on that score. However, when the number of $1 items in the supplementary estimates is compared to the total amount of money transferred by these $1 items, the difference is not that great.

To illustrate this, I have obtained a table covering the last three years and giving the number of $1 votes in supplementary estimates (A) and (B) in order to give the house a complete picture. The table shows vote transfers, grants, deletion of debts and other vote items, and gives the total of each for each year. I shall read this into the record, but I would ask leave of the Senate to have this table printed in the minutes of today, because I believe these figures will be easier to understand in print.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: Do you not want it printed as part of your speech? You are not speaking of the Minutes of the Proceedings, I assume, but of having it printed as part of your speech.

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Senator Lamontagne: Are you going back to 1957?

Senator Langlois: No, 1973-74, 1974-75, 1975-76.
(The table follows:)

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

	Vote Transfers	Grants	Deletion of Debts	All Other	Total

Senator Langlois: I have another table, which I would also ask leave to have printed as part of my speech. It is headed "Dollar Value of $1 Vote Transfers and $1 Grant Approvals." I draw honourable senators' attention to the title.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is that agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows:)

DOLLAR VALUE OF $1 VOTE TRANSFERS
AND $1 GRANT APPROVALS

	Vote Transfers	Grants	Total
1973-74
Supps A	19,218,629	1,063,550	20,282,179

	118,332,151	10,253,078	128,585,229

Senator Langlois: It will be noted that in the present fiscal year which ends tomorrow the total of vote transfers in supplementary estimates (A) and (B) is $118,332,151.

Senator Flynn: How generous I was. I said only $92 million.

Senator Langlois: That is why I am putting these figures on the record. I want to give the complete picture. We have nothing at all to hide in this respect.

I have another interesting table, which is the last one I would ask leave to have printed as part of my speech. It is headed "Department of Public Works, Vote 15—Capital Expenditures."

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The table follows:)

D.P.W. VOTE 15—CAPITAL EXPENDITURES

Total Voted in 1975-76—$306.0 Million

Transfer in Supplementary Estimates (B)—$6.899 Million

Funds were available for transfer from this vote in 1975-76 for the following reasons:

1) Normal delays in construction.

2) The government's announced expenditure reduction in June, 1975 of $13 million for DPW resulted in the department delaying some projects until it could recast its budget. (Note—this $13 million is being allowed to lapse.)

3) In December the government announced a $30 million cutback from the planned expenditure level for 1976-77. This caused the department to delay some projects scheduled for 1975-76 so that the carryforward work to 1976-77 would not result in over expenditures in that year.

Senator Langlois: While listening to Senator Grosart last night I got the impression that the government had been purposely delaying programs in order to finance extra expenditures which had not been forecast earlier in the year when the main estimates were tabled. However, when the amount of the transfers in supplementary estimates (B) is compared to the total capital expenditures of the Department of Public Works alone, it is found that the amount is very small indeed.

● (1450)

Funds were available for transfer from this vote in 1975-76 for the following reasons: First, normal delays in construction resulting from strikes, from scarcities of materials and from other circumstances beyond the control of the department. There were normal delays in the construction program, and anyone engaged today in the construction business ought to know that it is not easy to proceed on schedule with any contract. There are all kinds of delays, as I have said, because of shortages of materials and because of strikes and other circumstances beyond anyone's control. That is the main reason for the deferment of these capital expenditures.

Second, the government's announced reduction in expenditures in June 1975 of $13 million for the Department of Public Works resulted in the department's delaying some projects until it could recast its budget. This amount of $13 million is being allowed to lapse.

All honourable senators remember, I am sure, what was said at the time by the leaders of the other parties in the other place. I am not accusing anyone in particular, but the expression "too little, too late" was used. That is the usual refrain. The cut of $13 million was too little and too late, but today the result is that $13 million worth of capital expenditures have been allowed to lapse.

I was amazed last night when I heard Senator Grosart say, "Well if they were not able to spend that money this year, why did they not put it in the bank?" This cannot be done. Even someone who has just arrived here knows that when an item is not spent in the course of a fiscal year, it reverts to the Treasury and has to be voted again in the following year.

Is this then the solution my honourable friend would pose—that the government should let this amount lapse, and vote additional money to cover these unforeseen expenditures in order to make these necessary readjustments in other items which have come about as a result of unforeseen increases, such as inflation and other circumstances? My honourable friend knows, contrary to the position he took last night, that this money could not be put into the bank and kept in store for next year. The only other solution for the government was to let these amounts lapse, vote additional funds and have an inflated budget, which would have been criticized by everyone in this place and the other place.

Senator Grosart: Will the honourable senator agree that when I said "put it in the bank," I probably should have said, "keep it in the bank," because that is where it was? If it was not taken out, it would be in the bank.

Senator Langlois: It would have lapsed.

Senator Grosart: It would be in the bank.

Senator Langlois: The only solution, as I said, would have been to let these items lapse, vote additional funds, and have an inflated budget. That is the only solution which can be inferred from what my honourable friend said last night.

There is also a third reason for these deferments. In December the government announced a $30 million cut-back from the planned expenditure level for 1976-77. This caused the department to delay some projects it had scheduled for 1975-76 so that the work carried forward to 1976-77 would not result in over-expenditures in that year. That is the last reason, and it was not, as suggested last night, a wilful act on the part of the government looking for additional funds and thus asking a department to delay such projects, as the painting of a bridge.

As a matter of fact, I have tried to locate that bridge. In the limited time at my disposal I was not able to obtain any definite information, but there is an indication, for what it is worth, that the bridge in question is the Jacques Cartier bridge in Montreal, which I believe is a bridge the government has been trying, without success, to pass over to the province for a number of years. At any rate, the painting has been delayed. I am not sure what the reason for the delay was in this case. I am not sure if it was because of a strike or not, but labour conditions in Quebec were certainly bad last year.

I see my honourable friend, Senator Beaubien, smiling. I know that his fellow constituents from Montreal see little to smile at in respect of the Olympic site, which is behind schedule owing, for the most part, to labour conditions.

There is no doubt that we went through a difficult time last year in terms of labour disputes. Perhaps that is the proper place to put the blame, instead of trying to accuse the government of wilfully delaying projects in order to revise its financial forecasts made earlier in the year.

Senator Grosart: I hesitate to interrupt the honourable senator, but he has said at least three or four times that I suggested these delays were deliberate. He has now become a little more rhetorical and has said "wilfully delaying." Would he not agree that there was not one word in my whole speech last night that would suggest for one minute there was any wilful intention to delay any one of these projects? Would he not agree that, on the contrary, the tone of my remarks was that it was perfectly understandable that there would be delays? Would he not reconsider the statement that he has made over and over again, that a point I was making was that there were deliberate attempts on the part of departments, or even of government officials, to delay these things for purposes that were not proper?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I thought it was up to me to close the debate. I see my honourable friend apparently thinks it is his job to do so.

Senator Grosart: I have just asked questions, which is my right.

Senator Langlois: It is more than a question you have asked. You have made a comment on my speech. You are about to rebut what I have said. But with respect to his remarks last night—and I think I should address myself to the Senate now—the impression given by the honourable senator was that he was laying the blame on the government for delaying projects at the risk of paying more next year for realizing the same projects. That is a clear inference from his speech last night.

Senator Grosart: I never said "deliberate."

Senator Langlois: And I read it again this morning.

Senator Grosart: I must interrupt the honourable senator. Will he please agree that I never said "deliberate", and I never used the word "wilful"? I never made any such suggestion, because it is quite contrary to the whole tenor of my remarks. And I shall have further questions on that in a moment.

The honourable senator just now objected to my asking some questions, and Hansard will show that I did ask questions. But I will say this to him now, that in closing the debate it is quite possible he is introducing completely new material. It becomes quite difficult for anyone on this side to deal with new material that is introduced now and which, I have to tell him, is not entirely relevant to the present debate. I realize his difficulties. He is entitled to reply to me and to use figures in so doing, but I would ask him this question: Does he not feel that it puts us in a difficult position when he introduces this much new material? However, we will have third reading, and perhaps there will be an opportunity to reply then.

Senator Langlois: Very good. I am not going to press this point any further. But if the honourable senator is right in saying that he did not say what I have said he said, or what I understood him to say, how could he then make the accusation he made? And he did make a definite charge against the government, saying that it delayed projects, thereby creating a risk of paying more next year for the same projects.

Senator Grosart: Of course.

Senator Langlois: If there was no wilful action, if there was no deliberate action, taken on the part of the government in this respect, how can the honourable senator then say that the government must bear the blame if next year the same projects are realized at a greater cost? I ask him to put some logic in what he said last night.

Senator Grosart: The honourable senator has asked me a question. Perhaps he will allow me to reply. He asks how I could say that the delay would cost the taxpayers more, and yet not be imputing a wilful motive. If he wishes me to indicate the motive I would have had if I had intended to make any criticism of the delay as such, I would refer him to the Auditor General's statement that it is total inefficiency and lack of control by government that is the cause of, let me say, some of the delays, but not all of them.

● (1500)

Senator Langlois: I do not think I should spend any more time on this. Honourable senators can read the speech, as I did this morning, and I am sure that they will come to no other conclusion than the one I did in this respect.

If I may offer some advice to the honourable senator, which, of course, he does not have to accept, it is that the next time he wishes to criticize the government he should make this proviso, that he is not imputing motives in whatever he says in such criticism. I will not ask him to do that, but if he is going to take the attitude he has taken this afternoon I would advise him to do so before he utters similar remarks.

Senator Grosart: My speeches are long enough without that.

Senator Langlois: I do not want to delay proceedings by pressing any further this matter and the other matters that have been raised by the honourable senator and his leader. I grant them the right to criticize the government as much as they like. This is proper. This is their function.

Senator Bourget: It is part of the game.

Senator Langlois: It is part of the game, yes.

I close my remarks by urging honourable senators to give their earnest consideration to these estimates, and, if at all possible, though without relinquishing in any way their right to criticize or even delay the measure before them, to bear in mind the difficult circumstances in which we in this chamber quite blamelessly find ourselves. We have this bill before us as we received it from the other place last weekend. We are now under pressure of time with regard to it, and have our backs to the wall, so to speak. I do not think any honourable senator would like to see anyone suffer from delay in our parliamentary proceedings, and I am sure all will do everything in their power to expedite the passage of this measure.

[Translation]

Senator Asselin: Would Senator Langlois allow me a question? I had not forgotten him. As you will see, it is a very simple question. Would not the senator recognize the fact that this same thing happens every year: the appropriation bills are brought in at the very last minute? Last year, the government deputy leader had promised to make representations to the government in order to improve this situation. Yet today, the same government representatives are again asking us to expedite consideration of this bill so that cheques may be issued in time and that the Senate not be held responsible for withholding passage of this bill. Shall we, from now on, have the opportunity of considering these bills in detail? Will government representatives in the Senate make the necessary representations? That is what we want to know.

Senator Langlois: I would draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that, as government representatives, my leader and I made representations last year. No later than Friday I again approached the leader in the other place, Mr. Sharp, and told him that we always face the same situation from one session to another. He explained that the days reserved to the consideration of the estimates in the House of Commons are chosen by the various party leaders and decided upon by consensus. If they underestimate the delays that may occur in the other place, well, someone has to suffer the consequences of this situation. Unhappily, as I say, we are always the ones who must bear the burden. We are always in the same awkward position in which we are supposed to pass these bills under some pressure. As I said earlier, my duty and that of my leader on this side of the house is not so much to support the government as to put forward the legislation. Yet, it is our only duty. Should I have other obligations, I would not act very long as deputy leader. I believe that my duty here, as long as I agree to assume this responsibility, is to see to it that legislation is passed by this house, that it receives due consideration and that all circumstances, all consequences of any delay, are presented to my colleagues, who will assume their responsibilities just as I must assume mine. If through my insistence I cause a provision to be passed too quickly for the house to give it the necessary consideration, I am committing a fault and I take full responsibility for it.

On the other hand, if the Opposition—I am not saying that this has been caused by an overly insistent Opposition—delays a bill so that people who are not part of the parliamentary system suffer, it does so on its own responsibility. Each of us in this house must accept his own responsibilities.

But, as I said earlier, I have taken the responsibility of suggesting to the leader of the other house and the President of the Treasury Board, whose officials were in my office this morning, that they should try to put pressure upon their ministers and insist that they try in the other house to ensure that the days allotted for the estimates be brought forward and not to wait until the very end of a session to give them to this house, because even though we have very limited powers concerning money bills, we must still—

Senator Flynn: No, no.

Senator Langlois: We must, however, admit that our powers are limited. We have to admit it. We must still pass these bills, we must give them all the attention required, and even in view of this position that I take concerning our limitations—and I think that I am not the only one to do so—we still have the duty—

Senator Flynn: Who else besides yourself?

Senator Langlois: We still have the duty to consider the bills in their smallest details. This is our duty, and if someone in this house is opposed to the idea that we must do this in a short time, he must assume his responsibilities and do what he considers his duty. I for one will not be suffering tomorrow morning either. I can do without the cheques I have in my pocket, if the bill does not pass. Others, however, will have a real need for it tomorrow morning.

Senator Denis: Hear, hear!

Senator Asselin: I suggest the government deputy leader, the government or the government representatives always confront us with a difficult choice. "My responsibility", says the deputy leader, Senator Langlois, "is to introduce bills, they must go through". That is his responsibility. He fulfills it perfectly, and I commend him for it.

It is up to us in the Opposition to assume our responsibilities. But if we do assume our responsibilities, if we scrutinize the bill in greater detail, or try to send it to committee, we are accused of slowing down the process. Such is the awkward situation we are placed in.

Senator Langlois: We all agree we are in an awkward situation.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois: With leave and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move third reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I regret that I feel obliged to make a few comments at this point. What I have to say is not in any way critical; it is intended, rather, to clear the record. Since Senator Langlois made his comments on his suggestion that I had criticized these delays or deferments on the grounds of wilfulness or deliberateness, I have quickly looked through Hansard, and am quite unable to find any such criticism.

● (1510)

The whole tenor of my remarks was to support the position taken by the committee itself. My criticism was of the transfer of expenditures in an annual budget intended for capital works to cover up operating budget deficiencies. This is what the committee said:

The Committee objects to the deferment of capital projects in this manner because most of them will eventually be proceeded with and will then require a substantially increased total expenditure due to the continued rise in construction costs.

Senator Langlois objected to my pointing out that these delays do eventually mean greater costs to the taxpayer, but I am merely saying to him now that that was the finding of the committee, and I was not chairman of that committee. I want to emphasize that the whole basis of this criticism is an echo of the statement made in the report of the Auditor General that:

—the present state of the financial management and control systems of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada is significantly below acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness.

And I am glad to say that in this debate this is the fourth time this has been read into the record. Honourable senators will recall that it was read by myself last night, and by Senator Flynn earlier today. I compliment Senator Langlois on having read it into the record again, as I now do for the fourth time. I point out that this is the basis of the criticism that the Opposition is mounting here—the declared statement of the special committee set up by the Auditor General, and his comment that that study revealed that the present state of the financial management and control—and this statement was released in December—is significantly below—not just "below" but "significantly below"—acceptable standards of quality and effectiveness. I am quite sure that if any honourable senator here has responsibility in respect of a business, large or small, and if the auditor of that business made that statement and attached it as a note to the financial report, some heads would roll, as they have rolled recently in some of our corporations for much the same reasons.

I say that to make it as clear as I can that the criticisms we have voiced on this occasion are, in our view at least, responsible criticisms, and they are backed up by the committee itself and by the Auditor General of Canada.

The Leader of the Government introduced some new figures, and I shall not comment on them because I do not have them before me, but I shall say that as far as I am concerned they had little or no relevance to any figures or comments I made, for the reason that not once in all the comments and figures he gave us was there the slightest reference to the essential problem, which is not the number of $1 items, or the number of items covering grants and contributions, and it is not the number of items that deal with debts; the essential thing is the transfer from capital funds to operating expenses, and that is the whole emphasis of the committee's report and, I believe, of my comments last night.

For example, he referred to a specific instance, Public Works vote 15, and he pointed out, quite correctly, that the sum of $6.8 million which was not spent was not a very significant percentage of the total spending of Public Works. Of course it wasn't, but what I point out to him is that it was almost certainly a very substantial part of that particular vote, and the objection that we have been making here is not to a transfer within votes, which is quite proper, but to transfers from vote to vote of capital funds for operating expenses. If you look at this particular item, it says:

—due to unforeseen delays in construction projects.

I read that last night—"unforeseen". There is no suggestion there that they were deliberate. They were unforeseen, and the money is used for operating expenses.

It is interesting to look at another one. I mentioned it last night, but I did not make the comment I am going to make now. This, I believe, completely supports the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition in his objection to our being asked to approve retroactively expenditures already made. This certainly is the situation, and let me use vote 20 of National Health and Welfare as an example. It says:

Revisions to two capital projects originally scheduled for construction in 1975-76 have forced deferment and have made funds available for this transfer.

But it has not made them available, honourable senators; the words should have been "will make them available when this bill passes." And what are they to be used for? They are used "to meet increased operating expenses of the program for the balance of the current fiscal year."

Now, if this $700,000 is not paid retroactively, and if this bill is not given royal assent until tomorrow night—and I hope that will be the situation although I am not saying it will be—it means that as between 6 o'clock tomorrow night and midnight, if these funds are not already spent, they have been voted to be spent sometime after this item is approved—that is, $700,000 to be spent for the balance of the current year. That is exactly what the estimate says. Yet there seems to be some question as to whether the Leader of the Opposition was correct or not when he said that these funds have been spent. Of course, they have been spent. There is no question whatever that practically all of the moneys we are now being asked to authorize have already been spent, and I agree fully with the suggestion that this is an indication of complete disrespect for Parliament on the part of the Executive. I am not suggesting for one moment that this has just happened this year or last year, or even in the last decade. This has been going on for years and years, and may in fact have gone on under a government which I supported, but that does not mean it is right. I am not suggesting that for one minute.

I suggest to you, honourable senators, that the real difficulty here is in the assumption on the part of departments—of ministers perhaps, but certainly of officials—that once money is granted to a department in toto,—and let us say that they have $100 million—that they are entitled to spend that entire $100 million even if some of the items for which it was voted have to be deferred. I say that because in every one of these items the statement is that funds are available—funds are free. The fact of the matter is that those funds are not available. They were voted by Parliament for a specific purpose, and until Parliament says they can be spent on something else, then they are not available—unless I am unable to read English. Surely that is the situation, and that is what we are objecting to.

I am not criticizing any government or department for delaying capital expenditures. We know it has to happen. Senator Langlois was quite correct in saying that in the construction business strikes and delays are inevitable. I have not criticized that, I am quite sure. If I did, and if it appears in the Senate Hansard of last evening that I even whispered that, then I say immediately that it was not my intention to do so, and I do not believe I did.

● (1520)

I understand perfectly well the point made by Senator Langlois when he was speaking in the French language. I caught sufficient of it to realize the import of his remarks. He made the point that it is his duty in this chamber to have these appropriation bills passed which, of course, is true. From this side Senator Asselin said it is our duty to criticize and do what we can to improve them. I would hope that as a result of this debate—in fact, I am reasonably sure—these particular items will come to us in another form next year. That is my guess, based on the experience we have had in the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance with the officials, who have indicated that they appreciate the pointing out of these matters. I shall be very surprised if we find in the next estimates to arrive here the phrase "funds are available."

Senator Langlois: In all human endeavour there is always room for improvement.

Senator Grosart: Yes, and, as Senator Langlois expressed it, there is also probably room for improvement in my speaking ability, because I appear to have given him last night an impression which it was not my intention to give.

Senator Langlois: You have improved a great deal since last night.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps it is your understanding that has improved.

Senator Grosart: If I continue to improve, by the time I retire from here someone might even say, "He was fairly good by the time he got through, after taking his lessons from Senator Perrault, Senator Langlois and others."

I have only one further comment to offer, because I do not wish to delay the debate. I am fully sympathetic with the point made by Senator Langlois that it would be a hardship for persons in the Public Service not to be able to cash their cheques. In this particular case, as I understand it, the cheques are dated March 31 and sent out earlier. Some public servants decided to cash them yesterday or today, notwithstanding the fact that they are dated March 31. They were doing exactly what the officials, departments and ministers are doing in this respect. The ministers go a little further and say, "We have not had the money approved, but we will spend it." The public servants are not going that far, but decide that as they are entitled to the money in a couple of days they will spend it now. However, in that circumstance they are behaving in a much better manner than is the government itself, which spends the money before the expenditure has been approved.

There was reference to my statement that they should put it in the bank. I agree that I was using a fairly general term. Of course, what I meant was that if it were not spent, it would go into the bank in effect, and remain there. As I said earlier, if it is not withdrawn and spent, it remains in the bank. If at the end of the year there is a bookkeeping item declaring that the item has lapsed, the money is still in the bank and has not been spent. It is my suggestion—one which came up during the meeting of the committee, and was very strongly urged by some of the members—that we ask that there be an end to this transfer of moneys intended for capital expenditure but being used actually to pretend that there are savings, because it is a pretence. It may be a convenient method of doing it, but I submit it is a dubious device to do this and suggest that we have saved the money, that being the suggestion that is made.

In the two supplementaries we have exceeded the main estimates by $2.6 billion. The fact of the matter is that the spending has exceeded the main estimates by more than $2.6 billion, because money has been spent which was not intended for these items, and it will still be spent. It is more than a bookkeeping objection; it is an objection to what I have no hesitation in referring to as a very dubious device in the presentation of estimates or appropriation bills to Parliament.

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I have only one or two brief comments to make in reply to the remarks of Senator Grosart. Before dealing with these, however, I would like to attempt to correct an impression I might have given in my opening remarks when I referred to the exchange between the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition with regard to the delay in the payroll for the coming month. This might have given honourable senators the impression that I was relating this payroll problem to supplementary estimates (B), but it must be related to the Interim Supply Bill, Bill C-91, which will be considered later this afternoon. I wish to make this correction in case I have created the wrong impression in dealing with the exchange between the two leaders before opening my remarks on Bill C-90.

Returning to Bill C-90 and the remarks Senator Grosart made earlier this afternoon, when he with great vigour denied my statement that he had charged the government with wilfully delaying projects in order to find funds to correct any misestimation of government expenditures early in the year, I refer him to page 1968 of Hansard. I will leave honourable senators to interpret these remarks.

Of course, every one of those capital projects will be proceeded with next year, when the cost will be greater. So, far from being a saving, we are faced with the government pretending to save money and actually costing the taxpayer more.

Senator Grosart: Yes, that is exactly what I just said.

Senator Langlois: If this is not an inference that this was wilfully done, I do not know what "pretending" means.

Senator Grosart: Pretending to save money.

Senator Langlois: You do not pretend by accident.

Senator Grosart: Oh dear; oh dear!

Senator Langlois: Those are my only comments. The speech is there and I leave it at that.

Senator Grosart: Yes, you should leave it at that; you are wise.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1976

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Langlois for second reading of Bill C-91, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1977.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, approximately eight weeks ago we received the so-called blue book, the copy of the estimates for 1976-77. During those past eight weeks, things have been fairly quiet, in fact almost dormant, regarding the estimates; that is, until last evening, when the Leader of the Government in the Senate—and, from his speech today, I had better include also the deputy leader—came into the chamber and in a rather agitated manner requested us to pass not only supplementary estimates but interim supply by this evening.

Since that time I have let my mind wander to more pleasant things, thinking about the spring thaw. I thought about the snow lifting in the bush, and about the partridge that will be sitting on a log sunning itself. I began to think of the unusual pattern of activity which the partridge develops in the springtime, when it sits on a log and begins a rhythmic drum beat. It reminded me of the two honourable gentlemen opposite, who have created a lot of noise but with very little effect. We have all heard those excuses and explanations before, and they were no more effective today than they were in the past.

During the debate on the anti-inflation legislation, many speakers in both houses urged the government to restrict spending as a means of combating inflation. We received assurances that the government would use restraint in preparing the estimates for 1976-77. When the estimates arrived, naturally the first thing we did was to make a comparison with last year's estimates to determine how effective was the restraint.

I really do not think it was any surprise to find that the main estimates for the next fiscal year, when compared with the main estimates for 1975-76, show a 20 per cent increase. The question we might ask ourselves is: What would the increase have been had it not been for the restraints?

In the same debate, the same speakers requested the provinces to follow the example of the federal government and practise restraint in preparing their budgets for the upcoming year. Let us see how a few of the provinces have fared. Alberta, which we normally consider to be wealthy by Canadian standards, is making a determined effort to restrain its expenditures within a 9 per cent increase. Quebec, where we have not seen a great deal of restraint lately, last week kept its budget to a 9.7 per cent increase, and indeed five of their departments showed a decrease.

Honourable senators, if restraint in government expenditure will affect the anti-inflation program, we must give credit to the provinces rather than to the federal government, and we should urge the federal government to consider the budgets of the provinces and to try to follow them more closely.

Upon receipt of the estimates, a favourite pastime in Parliament is to try to "guesstimate" the amount that is not included in the estimates. If we ask ourselves what expenditures in government planning have not been included in the estimates, two items appear very prominently. The first is the huge expenditure by the Department of National Defence for the purchase of the Lockheed long-range patrol aircraft. That aircraft was originally offered to the Canadian government at $25 million per aircraft for a total of 18 aircraft. The aircraft came equipped with American radar, which is used throughout NATO. For some reason the Canadian government decided to install Canadian radar in the aircraft. When that decision was taken, the cost of the aircraft escalated from $25 million each to approximately $50 million each. Admittedly, the proposal included certain so-called cost-sharing arrangements on defence spending.

Honourable senators, can we afford to make those cost-sharing arrangements? Can we afford a subsidy of $500 million to enable Canadair and de Havilland to continue operating as they have in the past? It is a very large sum of money, and it is something to which the Senate should give special consideration.

In addition to the costs I have mentioned, certain other items have now become necessary. One is an amount needed for interim financing, estimated to be $300 million.

As a radio commentator said this morning, not only do we have to pay for the aircraft but we have to purchase the parts in advance. When we hear of an arrangement like this, one wonders how Lockheed Aircraft Company came so close to bankruptcy, if all its clients were as cooperative as the Canadian government has been. Lockheed dismisses as mere misunderstanding the interpretation of a telephone conversation by the Department of National Defence in one way, and the company's interpretation of it in another. Honourable senators, $300 million is a lot of misunderstanding. It is also a lot of confusion and an awful lot of interim financing on a $1 billion deal.

The Lockheed Aircraft Company has every confidence that the Canadian government will proceed. Canadians have already invested $15 million to $18 million in engineering and restructuring studies for the new aircraft.

The Orion is not a new aircraft. It has been on the drawing boards for at least 15 years. I was rather curious to learn how we managed to spend $1 million in the redesigning and engineering costs of an aircraft which has been in existence for that long. Perhaps the terminology used is not exactly accurate, and the $15 million to $18 million may have gone to consultant fees.

The British, in the NATO operation, use an excellent anti-submarine aircraft called the Nimrod. I know that the airmen who serve in the Maritime Command think highly of this aircraft. They have placed a number of that aircraft in storage as a result of their restraint program. I would like to suggest to the government that we consider renting or leasing the Nimrod aircraft and eliminate the $1 billion expenditure during our restraint program.

The second item that appears prominently in the "guess-timation" of the estimates is the Olympic Games deficit. I know it is everyone's favourite hobby to guess what the deficit will actually be. In fact, it has even intrigued the Prime Minister and Mr. Bourassa to the extent that they had a very friendly meeting in Quebec City, one in which the Prime Minister gave a rather indefinite "no" to Mr. Bourassa. Since that time, a number of emissaries have gone between Ottawa and Quebec City to discuss the Olympic Games deficit. The tenor of those discussions seems to be to find a way for the federal government to contribute to the deficit without including it in the estimates. I do not think the Canadian people expect the Province of Quebec to pick up all of the deficit. They do expect the federal government to be frank and open in specifying the amount being paid and by whom.

● (1540)

The President of the Treasury Board referred to the rather large amount being paid for oil subsidies east of the Ottawa Valley line to offset the cost of imported oil. I think it is quite natural that he should have mentioned this. The rather surprising thing is that no one in the other house reminded him that the amount of the subsidy has been decreased by $275 million, a decrease which is occurring just before an anticipated increase in the price of oil in Canada on or about July 1 of this year. I find it rather odd that with the anticipated increase in the price of oil, we are able to decrease the subsidy payments by $275 million annually.

As a result of the increased cost of imported oil, the cost of electricity in the Maritime provinces has risen greatly. Until recently, it was possible to heat a home in Nova Scotia by electricity for approximately $275 to $300 per year. During the course of the current heating season, residents of Nova Scotia have been receiving bills in the amount of $400 for a period of two months.

A federal-provincial meeting of finance ministers is scheduled for Ottawa later this week, and Premier Regan of Nova Scotia has requested that consideration be given at that meeting to the situation in Nova Scotia. He tells us he is very optimistic that the federal government will give consideration to this problem. The honourable gentleman should dampen his optimism. I think the matter has already been decided, due to the fact that the amount of oil subsidy has been decreased by $275 million.

Last evening, Senator Langlois, in a rather lucid explanation of one item in supplementary estimates (B), stated that vote 55, Industry, Trade and Commerce, $186 million for the Two-Price Wheat System, has been reduced from $186 million to $111 million, a reduction of $75 million. The question then arises: Does the government expect that Canadians will be eating less bread, or has the price of wheat in the export market increased, or will the price of bread continue to rise?

The government in the past has complained of the fact that the Opposition has requested various cutbacks and restraints in expenditures, and that as soon as the government eliminates a program the Opposition criticizes it. Perhaps it is understandable that the government should get the feeling that it is damned if it does and damned if it doesn't. I point out that the Province of Ontario meets the same criticism.

I should like to refer briefly to one or two of the reductions. Before doing so, I point out that reductions as well as increases in expenditures attract the attention of the Opposition, because as members of the Opposition we feel we have an obligation to ensure that reductions do not create hardships in one area of Canada as opposed to others.

In the announcement made by the President of the Treasury Board last fall, certain reductions were announced for the Department of Transport. These occurred as a result of abandonment of rail lines in Western Canada and a reduction in payments made under the Maritime Freight Rates Act and ferry subsidies on the Atlantic Coast.

Honourable senators, there are two major factors keeping this country united, one being transportation and the other being an understanding of the language and culture of the other founding race, or bilingualism. Those who are affected by the abandonment of rail lines and reductions in payments made under the Maritime Freight Rates Act look at the expenditures for bilingualism programs and point out that such expenditures are not reduced, leaving them wondering why transportation should be singled out for reductions.

I do not wish to appear to be deadily opposed to the bilingualism program. I am not. I note, however, that Mr. Spicer does not think the program is as effective as it should be, and one can find very little to quarrel with in that statement. I would point out that transportation is far more important in the Maritimes and Western Canada than is bilingualism. I would hate to see further reductions in transportation subsidies.

Vote 275L under Transport states that no loans are required by the CNR for the purchase of capital equipment during the coming fiscal year. Recently, there was speculation that the CNR, during the coming year, might improve its rail service, particularly its passenger service, by purchasing the Light, Rapid and Comfortable train, which is being designed in Montreal. Does the fact that no loans are required by the CNR, as stated in the estimates, eliminate the possibility of the CNR's improving its passenger service during the coming year?

Vote 20, Urban Affairs, is probably the largest item in the estimates, being $500 million for housing grants. This item shows a reduction of approximately $20 million, which would indicate that the government is not taking the housing program as seriously as it did this time last year. Housing is urgently required by many Canadians. It would be a shame to see the government completely eliminate the grant program for first-time home buyers.

● (1550)

Bill C-91 contains authority for the government to borrow $6 billion. This indicates that the government has not been listening to the debates in the Senate, especially the arguments advanced by Senator Flynn in last year's debate. In introducing Bill C-91 last evening, Senator Langlois referred us to the debates of the other place and stated that they are rather interesting on this point of borrowing authority. I re-read those debates and I failed to find what the honourable senator found interesting. As usual, there was evasion; the government was refusing to give answers to questions and avoiding giving the opposition information. I found very little excuse or purpose for the borrowing authority outlined in the debates of the other place.

In closing, honourable senators, I should like to urge that the Senate refer these items to a committee, where we can get further information and explanation of a number of additional points raised in my remarks. I think we could have a committee meeting this evening or tomorrow morning and dispose of the supplementary estimates by tomorrow evening. The computers are already in the process of having the cheques printed; this can continue while we are in committee. As Senator Perrault has already pointed out, the cheques cannot be cashed until Thursday; they can be mailed tomorrow, and I do not think anyone will suffer unduly from a few hours' delay.

[Senator Phillips.]

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, I rise to question some of Senator Phillips' conclusions with respect to the possible purchase by Canada of Lockheed long-range patrol aircraft. I understood from Senator Phillips' remarks this afternoon that he is advocating the purchase of the standard P-3C patrol aircraft at a cost of about $25 million apiece. If you add to that a further $10 million for the electronic equipment that would be necessary, it would bring the purchase price to about $35 million apiece. However, it would take 26 of this type of aircraft to do the same work as 18 of the type the Canadian government and the Canadian Armed Forces are desirous of purchasing. That would mean, not a saving but an increase in the expenditure, in that we could purchase 18 aircraft at $50 million apiece for a total of some $900 million, whereas 26 aircraft at $35 million apiece would total $910 million.

The decision has been made to buy aircraft with more advanced equipment, and to purchase fewer of them. If we were to follow the proposal of Senator Phillips, I suggest that we would have to have 26 aircraft rather than 18 in order to do the same job, and it would cost a few more dollars. I therefore do not see the wisdom in purchasing more aircraft, which would need more crew and more fuel, and would in the long-run be more expensive than purchasing the aircraft the government and armed forces are desirous of purchasing.

Senator Bourget: Would the Honourable Senator Phillips permit a question? During the course of his remarks he said that some people from Ottawa have been going down to Quebec City to discuss the deficit of the Olympic Games. I wonder where my honourable friend got this information. I suppose when he mentioned some people from Ottawa he meant people connected with the government. I would like him to tell us who those people are and where he got this information.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I do not believe I said they were elected to the government. As the honourable senator well knows, those in the Prime Minister's Office have exercised far more influence than the elected people; all we have to do is make an inquiry at that office and find out who went down.

Senator Bourget: That is not an answer. You are just guessing again.

Senator Phillips: I have been studying the Honourable Senator Langlois.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, on Bill C-91, which is a request for interim supply to cover approximately the first three months of the fiscal year beginning on Thursday, I would point out to the Senate, and would especially draw to the attention of Senator Langlois, the fact that only one day was accorded in the other place for the examination of this bill. It is, therefore, not because of a prolonged debate in the other place that the bill reaches us at the last minute. I want, thereby, to point out to the Leader of the Government and to his deputy that the fault for the late arrival of this interim supply bill is due to the way the Leader of the Government in the other place manages the affairs of that house. If they could find one day last week, Thursday I think it was, they could have found a day a week before. This is what the Leader of the Government should try to impress on his counterpart in the other place, that this could have been done a week before.

The way the other place proceeds, by touching upon a bill one day, forgetting it the next day and touching upon something else, is certainly no obstacle to dealing with supply, interim supply especially, in time for us to be able to consider these bills adequately. The Leader of the Government may already have done this, but I suggest that if he has done so he should try again.

The way in which we are asked to deal with these bills is, to my mind, a futile exercise, especially as in the present instance no advance study has been made of the main estimates. They have been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, but the committee has not started its study of them and has not reported on them, so we are completely in the dark. Even if we have the assurance that the committee will thoroughly examine the estimates, we will in the meantime have voted over one-quarter of the main estimates without having had the benefit of any study by the committee, or a worthwhile study in the Senate.

The deputy leader has suggested that we can always bring any matter before the Senate by way of a notice of inquiry. We have always had that privilege, but when it is exercised it is done after we have already given supply to the government and after the government has begun expenditures on the programs involved.

There was an intimation in what Senator Langlois said previously that the Senate has nothing to do with, or has less power than the other place with regard to, money bills. This is his pet theory, which he has recourse to especially when he does not want the Senate to amend or to kill a money bill. But I challenge him to name anyone who, knowing anything about the Constitution, shares his opinion. I can name one, for example, who does not, and I hope I will be forgiven for using Senator Hayden's name, but Senator Hayden has expressed his views on this on previous occasions and I believe he would agree with me when I say that the only constitutional limitation on the Senate with respect to money bills is that money bills must be introduced in the other place first. That is the only difference between the Senate and the other place. Of course, like the other place, the Senate cannot, without a recommendation of His Excellency, add to an expenditure. The Senate cannot add to a money bill. But the Senate can certainly amend a money bill.

● (1600)

Senator Langlois: Well, we cannot add to it. That is another limitation.

Senator Flynn: But the same limitation is imposed on the other place—exactly the same limitation. So we are on equal footing with the House of Commons except with respect to the introduction of money bills. We could very well amend a money bill by deleting an item in the estimates or by killing the bill itself. We could certainly do that, and again I challenge Senator Langlois to name anyone who, knowing anything about our Constitution and the powers of the Senate, would support him in the opposite view. It is quite clear that the Senate has the power to amend such bills. For instance, let us look at Bill C-91, although it may not be the best example. We could decrease any of these items; we could reduce the "three-twelfths" to "two-twelfths." We could amend the bill in many ways. We could, for example, delete clause 5, which relates to the power to raise a loan of $6 billion.

I mention that item particularly because I have previously objected to inserting a clause of this kind in a supply bill owing to the fact that it is not related to supply at all.

Senator Langlois: It is not an appropriation.

Senator Flynn: That is right. It is not an appropriation. I should point out that on the last occasion, when objection was taken to this in the other house, the government was forced to change the bill and bring in a separate piece of legislation to cover the borrowing authority. It is obvious, then, that simply because something has been done as a practice over the years does not make it the best practice. The borrowing authority is something entirely separate from supply, and I suggest to the deputy leader, and to the Senate as a whole, that we certainly have the power to simply delete that clause and that no one could challenge our authority under the Constitution to do so.

Senator Phillips suggested that the bill be referred to committee. I will be quite interested to see whether the Leader of the Government or his deputy accepts that suggestion. Perhaps they will reveal their views on the matter in due course. It would certainly be useful to have some clarification with respect to the objections raised by Senator Phillips as well as on other points dealing with the wording of the bill. For example, does the deputy leader feel that if the bill receives royal assent only tomorrow there will be a real problem involved with respect to government cheques? I believe he said a moment ago that the problem of the cheques, which was raised at the beginning of the sitting, was not related to Bill C-90, which provides for supplementary estimates, but was related to this interim supply bill. For my part, I cannot see any cheque of the government's being printed beforehand on money that cannot be spent before April 1. I believe it is entirely incorrect to suggest that it can. The government does not need that money before April 1. If the banks are stupid enough not to cash government cheques, that is their problem, but it should be made clear that it is certainly not the responsibility of Parliament, and especially not the responsibility of the Senate, if the banks act in such a manner, when the money we are called upon to vote cannot by law be spent before April 1.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I have just one brief comment. When we were considering the supplementary estimates we dealt with this problem involving the spending of money on items which were not authorized—the spending of money by means of the dubious device of transfers. In the bill before us, however, we have in clause 3 the clear prohibition of the use of any such dubious device. It reads:

3. The amount authorized by this Act to be paid or applied in respect of an item may be paid or applied only for the purposes and subject to any terms and conditions specified in the item, and the payment or application of any amount pursuant to the item has such operation and effect as may be stated or described therein.

And the word "item" there means "vote."

There is, it is true, a modification of that in the next clause, which applies only to commitments. It does not apply to the spending of the money but to the commitments made, where there is an authority for the deputy minister to make commitments within certain limits, as indicated in clause 2. However, I would suggest to the leader and to the deputy leader that they might like to pass this on to those who are responsible so that we will not be faced on March 30 next year with an appropriation bill on a supplementary estimate which, in effect, states that "we, the departments, the ministers, the government, and the officials have paid no attention to the instructions of Parliament as set out in clause 3"—or section 3 as it will be when the bill is passed. "We come back now to ask you to approve what we did in spite of the clear statement in clause 3."

I do not want to suggest that any lavish expenditures be made, but one suggestion from the Senate that would save money would be to take this clause 3, have it blown up and framed, and put into every office in the Government of Canada in which anyone has the right to authorize or make expenditures. If a copy of this clause were on the wall in large letters, perhaps it would have some effect. It might save us quite a bit of money next year.

Senator Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Langlois speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, again I shall endeavour to be brief in my comments in reply to the timely remarks made by my colleagues in this debate. First I will deal with the remarks of the Honourable Senator Phillips, whose main concern was with the main estimates, with only brief references to the bill presently before us, which is the supply bill for the next three months. He mentioned the two-price wheat payments, the energy item covering the carryover of oil import compensation payments, and the borrowing authority. The two first items are readily understandable and I do not think I need to comment on them extensively, because they are part of a program, insofar as the energy item is concerned, which has been in force for some time, the purpose of which is to offset the world price of imported oil to this country as opposed to the oil produced in Canada. As I said, this is a carryover from the previous fiscal year.

● (1610)

In connection with the borrowing authority, while I do not think I should elaborate on it, I referred last night to the extensive debate which took place in the other house in that respect. I do not wish to repeat what was said there; I will merely say that the debate centred mostly on the comparison between the authority sought this year and the authority sought in previous years. In this respect I would like to put some figures before the house from a table showing that authorizations sought, for example, in the years 1968-69 and 1969-70, amounted to $2 billion; in the year 1970-71 and 1971-72, and right down to the year 1973-74, the amount was $3 billion. In 1974-75 it was $6 billion, of which $5½ billion was used, the $500 million left unused being automatically cancelled by the bill presently before us. This year we are seeking authority for the same amount as last year, namely, $6 billion.

These authorities are sought in accordance with the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, and in particular with section 36 of that act, which reads:

36. No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition also dealt with this item in his remarks. He referred to the debate which took place in this respect the year before last and again last year in the House of Commons, when objection was taken to an appropriation bill which included a borrowing authority, or an increase in a previous borrowing authority. The objection was based on the fact that the appropriation bill which was being studied had been recommended by His Excellency the Governor General without any mention of the borrowing authority, and it was for this reason that the objection was made by, I think, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the other place, the Honourable Mr. Lambert; at least, he was acting as deputy leader or as house leader. Unfortunately, the objection was raised after the bill had been passed, and the Honourable the Speaker of the other place could only decide that it was too late, that the bill having been passed and sent to the Senate nothing could be done by that house, and that is where the matter was left.

The leader of the house, the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, who seems to have been taken somewhat by surprise, admitted at the time that a mistake had apparently been made and promised that it would not be repeated in future years. Last year a bill came before the other place with the same or a similar borrowing authority which had not been included in the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General. It merely recommended to the house a bill based on the supplementary estimates. Since the borrowing authority was not mentioned in the supplementary estimates, the attitude was taken that the recommendation was incomplete in that it did not make any mention of this borrowing authority. The objection was then raised in good time, and although I am speaking from memory and stand to be corrected, I believe that the decision of Mr. Speaker was that in view of the situation which had developed the year before, and in view of the admission by the leader of the house that there had been a mistake, to which was added a promise not to repeat such a mistake, the point was well taken.

In the light of these circumstances the leader of the house agreed to strike out clause 5, which included this borrowing authority in the appropriation bill, and the bill was passed without the borrowing authority. Later on a bill dealing only with the borrowing authority was introduced in the house, and the required result was obtained.

The reason the leader of the house agreed to delete clause 5 was that he did not want this appropriation bill to be delayed, because of the consequences that would have ensued.

Senator Flynn: May I interrupt for a moment, honourable senator? The point I was trying to make is that it would be much better to have a separate bill for borrowing authority, in view of the attitude of my good friend, which is one of opposition to any supply bill being referred to a committee. If the borrowing authority were to come under a separate bill, perhaps the objection would not be the same.

Senator Langlois: I will deal with this point later on, but for the present I would like to carry on with what I was saying before I was interrupted.

I took the position two years ago in this house, and again last year, that the borrowing authority was not an appropriation per se, and not being an appropriation per se, it did not need to be recommended in a message from His Excellency the Governor General. I was convinced at the time that I was right, although sometimes I have doubts about being right, as do we all, being human beings.

Senator Flynn: It never shows!

Senator Langlois: Well, I do not trust those who always claim that they are right, because we are all human and we all can make mistakes.

I recounted the circumstances I have referred to last year. I had to take a decision in the matter over the lunch hour, while eating a sandwich at the corner of my desk in my office. Before coming into the house I got the then Law Clerk of the Senate to phone the Department of Justice and get an opinion on my position. He returned with the reply that the head of the legislation branch of the department was in accord with my position. I asked the Law Clerk to have this reduced to writing, which was done, and the opinion of the Department of Justice was tabled in this house.

I do not wish to boast about all this. I took my position with some reluctance, and only after due reflection and consideration. However, as a consequence, I feel I can reiterate with some degree of certainty and conviction that a borrowing authority is not an appropriation per se and need not be recommended by His Excellency the Governor General to the other place before being introduced as part of an appropriation act or supply bill.

This is the reason why I cannot accept the suggestion of the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition to send this bill to a committee, because the estimates, on which this bill is based—

Senator Grosart: The main estimates.

Senator Langlois:—have been and still are before the committee, and we will have ample opportunity to discuss any item, because, as I said last night, and I think the Leader of the Opposition will have to agree with me, the passing of the present bill does not release any of the votes of the main estimates. This means that we can discuss them over and over again if we want to.

Senator Flynn: Discuss, yes.

Senator Langlois: Yes. We can do it tomorrow morning or next week. The Leader of the Opposition can get up in his place at any time he wishes to give notice of an inquiry, thus initiating consideration and discussion of any of the votes covered by the supply bill. If he wishes to do so, he can even ask the house to constitute itself a Committee of the Whole and ask the minister responsible, whoever he may be, the Minister of Finance or the President of the Treasury Board, to come and answer our questions.

Senator Flynn: And if the money has been spent?

Senator Langlois: I am coming back to this. The money has been spent, yes. That is why we cannot delay this bill. My honourable friend a while ago referred to cheques which have been issued. I have in my pocket two cheques which I received yesterday. There is a cheque for my indemnity, the same type of cheque that was issued to everybody else, and a cheque covering my stipend for being deputy leader. The Leader of the Opposition got one as well. One is dated March 21 and the other is dated March 29. As I explained last night, these cheques were issued and were spread over a three-day period, starting tomorrow and covering Thursday and Friday. As I explained, this is done to prevent any rush on the banks in those cities where there is a heavy concentration of public employees. Anyone can imagine the situation with thousands and thousands of public employees rushing to the bank on the same day to cash their cheques. That is why this process is spread over three days. Some cheques had to be sent to distribution centres from one end of the country to the other, and indeed some cheques had to be sent to points outside Canada.

● (1620)

Senator Phillips mentioned a while ago that the computers were printing the cheques, but they are in fact printed already and have gone out, and if this bill is not passed in time, then any cheque dated March 31 could not be cashed. We have evidence that at least one bank in Ottawa has issued instructions to its branches not to cash government cheques before the date written on them, and if this instruction were adhered to it could create serious inconveniences for public employees. As I have said before, I am not so much worried about those in the higher pay brackets, but I am worried about those in the lower brackets, because many of them will need this money badly before the weekend.

Senator Grosart: I am not clear on this point. Would the deputy leader not agree that any cheque dated March 31 could only be met out of moneys provided in the supplementary and main estimates for the current year, which would have nothing whatever to do with this bill because surely not one cent of the supply that we might grant today or tomorrow could possibly be applied to the cashing of a cheque dated March 31? How could it be so when the estimates cover the period starting April 1 which is the next fiscal year?

Senator Langlois: But that is the day after tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: Your cheque is not based on this bill.

Senator Langlois: Possibly my own cheque is a bad example, because the House of Commons and the Senate work on a different basis from departments of government, but I mentioned these cheques because Senator Phillips mentioned—at least I think it was he—that the government would not issue cheques when there was no money in the bank.

Senator Grosart: Would the Leader of the Government tell me if the money we are asked to vote in this interim supply bill has anything whatever to do with, or if it could possibly be used to cash, a cheque on March 31? That is the question I am asking.

Senator Langlois: I am sorry, I think I missed part of your question.

Senator Grosart: I am asking quite simply if any of the money we are asked to grant, or any of the supply in the interim supply bill, could be legally applied to cashing a cheque dated March 31?

Senator Langlois: Yes, indeed.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no.

Senator Grosart: It could? Then that means that the money can be used before we pass it. Surely this is the supply for the new fiscal year.

Senator Langlois: But these cheques are spread over the period from tomorrow until Friday, and any cheque dated March 31, if the supply bill is not passed, cannot be cashed because there will be no money to meet it.

Senator Grosart: But that again is not the question I asked. You are speaking now of the money that we are being asked to supply being used before April 1. Surely it cannot be spent before then.

Senator Langlois: It cannot be spent if it is based on estimates of the past year, but the cheques are for the month of April, and the new fiscal period starts on April 1.

Senator Grosart: But surely it does not matter what period the cheques are for. It is the date of the spending of the money that is important.

Senator Langlois: At any rate, that is the information I have from Treasury Board officials.

Senator Forsey: Well then they had better go back and get further legal opinion from the Department of Justice.

Senator Langlois: You can be smart when you stay put in your seat. This is supply for the coming fiscal year, starting April 1, and these cheques now in the mail will be paid out of these estimates.

Senator Grosart: It does not matter what funds they are paid out of, it is quite illegal if the money is spent on the day before the day it is authorized to be spent.

Senator Langlois: Well, if my friends wish to take the responsibility for delaying passage of this bill, and if they want to accept the fact that if this bill is not passed today, there will be serious consequences for people who will be receiving their pay cheques in the next few days, then that is their affair.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps I could suggest at this stage that this might be the best reason of all for sending this bill to committee, so we can have the officials explain to us what the serious consequences would be if we do not pass this bill today. In view of the suggestions made by the deputy leader, it would seem to me to be the best reason in the world for having it go before committee and certainly the best that I have heard yet.

Senator Langlois: I am just in receipt of a note which informs me that the payroll question is related to Bill C-91, interim supply, and not to supplementary estimates (B). That note has come to me from the departmental officials in the gallery. I have a further note which has just come to my attention which is to the effect that the pay cycle for most public servants is two weeks, ending Friday, April 2, to be given to public servants on three pay days, Wednesday, March 31, Thursday, April 1, and Friday, April 2, and the cheques are dated April 2, 1976. The cheques have been printed and distributed to payroll personnel across Canada to be given out only when approved by Parliament.

Senator Flynn: But they have already been given out, apparently.

Senator Langlois: Only when approved by Parliament. At least that is what the note says.

Senator Perrault: To be given out when approved by Parliament.

Senator Langlois: But apparently some cheques got into the hands of some public servants.

Senator Grosart: How did that happen? Did they steal them?

Senator Langlois: And there would be serious consequences if we did not honour these cheques.

Senator Grosart: Did they steal them?

Senator Langlois: Oh, come now, be serious!

Senator Grosart: But surely the deputy leader has just said to us that the note he has says that they are to be given out only when approved by Parliament. Then I understood him to say that they had already been given out.

Senator Langlois: There is yet a further note on my desk from the same source to the effect that personnel have worked eight out of ten days in 1975-76. The note reads as follows "Your cheques and those for the other place were on a different cycle, March 29, March 30 and March 31," which is what I said a little while ago. Is the honourable senator suggesting that this information which I have received from an official of the Treasury Board is incorrect?

● (1630)

Senator Grosart: No, but I am suggesting that the notes which the deputy leader has do not answer my question. All they say is that there is a certain cycling of the time at which these cheques are sent out. I am asking: Is it legal to spend the money we are asked to approve today before it is approved? That is all I am asking, a simple question. I do not care how much cycling there is, or how many cheques are sent out in advance. Is it legal for the government to spend $1 before it is authorized by Parliament? Perhaps it is.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, we could argue all day.

Senator Grosart: No; I am just asking that question.

Senator Langlois: I have answered that question, I believe, three times, and if you do not agree with me, say so.

Senator Grosart: Is the deputy leader saying that it is legal?

Senator Langlois: Yes, it is.

Senator Perrault: The Province of Ontario does the same thing. Your government does the same thing.

Senator Grosart: That does not make it legal.

Senator Perrault: It certainly does not.

Senator Langlois: I would like to comment briefly on one further matter, and that is the suggestion made today and also last night by the Leader of the Opposition that this bill should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Senator Flynn: You have dealt with that.

Senator Langlois: As I mentioned, we have debated this matter during many previous sessions and I do not think that any further discussion today will bring us closer one to another, because the more we discuss it the farther apart we appear to be. I know the honourable senator does not like to hear about the practice of this house, but in my opinion the practice is a very important matter in parliamentary institutions. It has never been the practice to refer such a bill to committee, because the estimates upon which the bill is based are already before the committee and there would be repetition of the debate and discussion. There is also another opportunity, when appropriation bills based on the same estimates come before the house, for debate by honourable senators. All that can be said is that they will come after the money for the most part has been spent. However, this is a situation that we are used to in parliamentary institutions. Because of the delay involved in the parliamentary process, final approval is very often given to estimates after the moneys have been spent. This is not the only parliament in which such a situation exists. Similar complaints are raised in other parliaments, and it is one of the consequences of the process in this institution. There is opportunity, however, to become acquainted with, and to discuss and examine closely, the expenditures of the government. This can be done on many occasions during the course of a session.

As I remarked earlier, and I repeat, the passing of this bill does not release any item in the main estimates on which it is based. This guarantees the freedom of any member of this house to rise at any time during the session to draw the attention of the Senate to any particular item or group of items, as he wishes.

Senator Grosart: May I ask the deputy leader what he means when he says that the passing of this bill does not "release" any of this money? If it does not do that, what is its purpose? Surely its whole purpose is to release the money so that it can be spent.

Senator Langlois: Partial authorization of an expenditure does not release the vote item.

Senator Grosart: Unbelievable!

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, other questions I had planned to raise have now been answered. Under the new suggested procedure, between now and some time in June we may have a bill that grants full supply. Prior to that time, if the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance reports on an interim basis on the main estimates which have been referred to it, we would be able to proceed as suggested by the deputy leader in speaking to Bill C-91 yesterday. However, while he has explained that basically we are passing three months' supply, he did indicate where we are passing more than three months' supply. My attention is drawn to the fact that in schedule F to the bill supply is being requested to the end of April, and in schedule E supply for two-twelfths of the total is requested, which would go to the end of May.

With respect to those items, is there any reason to believe that we will not require in May or June a continuation of the second item on page 12, the payment to the refiners of the subsidy to keep oil prices lower east of the Ottawa Valley line? I see that in item 1, for the administration of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, only one-twelfth is requested, but in the same item it is stated that the department can spend revenue received during the year. Why do we not now need appropriations for these various items contained in schedule E and schedule F for the full three months?

Senator Langlois: In reply to this question I would like to repeat part of what I said last night in connection with the items covered by Bill C-91. I said:

This bill, in the amount of $4,970,732,370.57, is the first interim supply bill for the 1976-77 fiscal year, and will release a general proportion of three-twelfths of the items to be voted in these estimates as well as additional proportions for 35 votes.

I provided a listing of those votes which require additional proportions, and will dispense with the remainder of this. As I explained, of some of these votes the larger proportions are released because greater expenditures are called for early in the calendar year and they are thus spread over—

Senator Flynn: That is not the point. Senator Benidickson asked about the items for which you are requesting less than three months' supply.

Senator Langlois: Yes, this is a general proportion. It could be less for some items.

Senator Flynn: If you do not have the answer, why do you not say so?

Senator Langlois: But this is a general proportion. That is why I am repeating the wording of the statement I made last night. It is a general proportion of the items.

Senator Flynn: Then you do not know.

Senator Langlois: The amounts are there.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois: With leave, and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move third reading of the bill now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: I suppose it would be useless to refuse leave, since the deputy leader does not wish to move that the bill be referred to committee. Of course, even if we on this side refused leave, we would be roundly defeated. However, in my opinion, the debate this afternoon has shown that the referral of this bill to committee would have been useful, particularly since we could have been given answers to such questions as that asked by Senator Benidickson. In many instances the deputy leader did not have the answers, but then he should not be expected to know all the answers.

● (1640)

I do not object to papers flying from the gallery, or an opinion from the Justice Department being tabled, such as the one tabled a while ago. It reminds me of a recent occasion when the Leader of the Government refused to table such an opinion. Apparently if it is useful to the government to table them, they table them; but if it is not, they do not.

In view of the circumstances, we will give leave, on condition that if we decide to raise a few more questions on third reading, to which questions the Deputy Leader of the Government does not have the answers, he will not subject us to too lengthy a reply.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

30th March, 1976

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th of March, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière,
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

Senator Flynn: On a question of privilege, had we known that royal assent was not to take place until tonight, we could have moved that the bills be referred to Committee of the Whole in order that we might question the officials here.

Senator Perrault: I move the adjournment of the Senate until 8 o'clock this evening.

Senator Flynn: Will the only item tonight be the speech of the Leader of the Government on Bill C-58?

Senator Langlois: And probably that of the Leader of the Opposition too.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Perrault: That is a strong possibility.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, March 25, the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, we have under discussion in this debate the principle of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act. If passed, this measure would disallow the deduction, as a business expense, of funds expended for advertising in all non-Canadian periodicals and on all non-Canadian radio and television stations. Should this bill receive second reading in the Senate, it may well be that honourable senators will agree to have it referred to the appropriate standing committee of the Senate, before which many witnesses will appear to set out their views with respect to what is, unquestionably, an important piece of proposed legislation. I understand that a number of organizations and individuals have already requested an opportunity to appear before the Senate committee for purposes of putting forward their views on this measure. This is their right and I am sure that their submissions will be reviewed carefully and constructively. But for the present we are concerned only with the principle of Bill C-58—a bill which, admittedly, has been somewhat controversial. Certainly, it has proven to be a much discussed measure in the other place.

What about the principle? On January 23, 1975, without dissent, spokesmen for all political parties in the other place expressed their warm endorsement of the principle of Bill C-58. It was the unanimous view that action was required by the Government of Canada with respect to Canadian tax deductions for advertising directed to Canadians placed in non-Canadian publications and broadcast outlets. So we know the principle is endorsed by the leadership of all parties in the other place.

Senator Flynn: There is a difference between purpose and principle.

Senator Perrault: The principle was endorsed by the party leadership in the other place. There is some disagreement concerning the most appropriate method to implement that principle. For several years now, a consensus has been developing that the benefits from the tax deduction provisions of the Income Tax Act in respect of advertising in periodicals, as well as radio and television advertising, directed to the Canadian consumer, ought to accrue to the benefit of Canadian periodicals and broadcasting outlets, and to none other.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Oh, dear me!

Senator Perrault: In other words, the belief has been held generally by Canadians that if we are going to speak to the Canadian consumer via radio and television, then we should provide positive encouragement to have those messages presented via Canadian taxpayers' information media. I believe there has been at least some misunderstanding as to what Bill C-58 would mean to the free flow of information in Canada.

Senator Grosart: It would mean censorship.

Senator Perrault: It is not censorship, and I am rather surprised that one who has been associated with the media field should make an allegation of this kind. Perhaps at some point the honourable senator will stand up and proclaim the reasons for his opposition to the assistance of the communication media in Canada.

Some have suggested, quite inaccurately, that passage of Bill C-58 will see the press in fetters, that freedom will be in fetters, that if Bill C-58 becomes law, somehow there will be a diminution in the total range of human freedoms in Canada. I reject the notion.

Well, what are we talking about with respect to Time?

Senator Flynn: That is a good question.

Senator Perrault: It is a good question, senator, and I would invite you to speak on it. We should know your party's position on it, because it is a question on which many in your party have been squarely on the fence for quite some time. I suggest to the honourable senator that he go back to the O'Leary report, which sets out some of the reasons which have inspired legislation of this type for Canada. Senator O'Leary is a distinguished colleague—unfortunately, he is ill at the present time—who has made as great a contribution to the dialogue on this issue as any other person, and he should be commended by all of us.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps not to the solution you are proposing.

Senator Perrault: What about diminution of freedom? What freedom does Bill C-58 diminish? The Canadian advertiser who wishes to direct his message to an American audience or to an international audience—for instance, a travel organization in Canada attempting to sell tours or vacations in the United States—will continue to have advertising in Time magazine fully deductible as an expense of business. That is not a restriction on freedom. Indeed, Time magazine has stated that it is even going to continue to accept Canadian advertising directed to Canadians, but is going to reduce the advertising rates. They will still make money. Canadian advertisers who wish to advertise to Canadians without realizing the tax deduction benefits available under the present legislation may continue to do so. Indeed, I have a copy of Time magazine for this week. In it there is a full-page advertisement for Gilbey's Gin, a well-known Canadian product. Then we see another full-page advertisement which reads:

Benson and Hedges 100's Longer.

Smoother. Milder.

Health and Welfare Canada advises that danger to health increases with amount smoked.

I am sure that is true. But somehow these great Canadian corporations still believe that Time is a useful advertising "buy", despite the fact that they are not getting a tax deduction.

Senator Beaubien: They are not Canadian corporations.

Senator Perrault: These are. Let us go through the magazine. There is an advertisement of the Travel Industry Association of Canada. There are several Canadian advertisements. We read another advertisement headed: "The proud smoke: Product of a proud land".

Senator Flynn: What are you trying to prove?

Senator Perrault:

—Over 100 years of tobacco heritage. Health and Welfare Canada advises danger to health increases with amount smoked.

Senator Flynn: May I ask—

Senator Perrault: Just jot down your questions, honourable senator, and I will attempt to answer them later. A great many inaccuracies have been uttered during this debate and I shall endeavour to correct the record.

Senator Flynn: You want to substitute other inaccuracies.

Senator Perrault: The cost of Time advertising directed to Americans, to Australians, to people overseas, will still be fully deductible as a business expense for Canadian companies.

Senator Flynn: How do you know these advertisers did not pay in advance?

Senator Perrault: Similarly, those companies which choose to employ border broadcast outlets to attract Americans to purchase Canadian products and services may still continue to deduct the cost as a legitimate business expense.

What will the bill not permit? The bill will not permit companies to deduct the cost of advertising in United States-owned magazines and television outlets when the advertising is directed to Canadians. This was a provision that was established several years ago, but Time magazine was given a special exemption. This bill says, "Special privilege to none," "Favouritism to none," "Equality for all." Yes, equality for the first time in Canada to Time, to Newsweek, to Argosy, to McCall's and Better Homes and Gardens and all the rest—equality; the end of special privileges.

Senator Flynn: Do you realize you are speaking to adults?

Senator Perrault: It is interesting that for so long we have heard from the Opposition about the need for fairness, for more equality.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Just the Opposition?

Senator Perrault: Now we have the big foreign-based magazines competing in the same Canadian league under similar conditions—no special privileges.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Why won't you get in it?

Senator Grosart: Would the Leader of the Government permit a question?

Senator Perrault: Senator, would you jot your question down? I shall endeavour to reply to it as effectively as possible should you ask it later on.

● (2010)

Senator Grosart: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Perrault: I do not want my train of thought to be derailed at this particular junction.

Senator Grosart: We are hoping on this side that it might be derailed a bit.

Senator Perrault: This bill will not permit companies to deduct the cost of advertising in any American-owned magazine and television outlet, when that advertising is directed to Canadians.

Senator Flynn: Terrible!

Senator Perrault: Is this proposal unreasonable?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes.

Senator Perrault: Does it strike at the heart of freedom, as has been suggested?

Senator Smith (Colchester): It strikes at freedom of advertising.

Senator Perrault: Will it be the end of freedom in Canada, as some have suggested? Some of our friends, lobbying energetically here in Canada—as is their right—on this issue, say that Bill C-58 is the end of freedom. And what about United States-Canada relations? Does Bill C-58 endanger our relations with the United States, as Senator Beaubien stated the other day in his usual eloquent fashion? Honourable senators will have their own views about these and other questions—and almost certainly these and many other important questions will and should be raised during the committee consideration of Bill C-58. But, honourable senators, I have yet to be apprised of one country in the world occupying a geographical position similar to Canada's position vis-à-vis the United States, a small country—

Senator Flynn: Small!

Senator Perrault: —adjacent to a huge country, relatively speaking, which permits the deduction of advertising costs in foreign magazines when that advertising is directed exclusively to its domestic market at such a large proportionate cost in lost revenues to its domestic media. Not one of the opponents of the bill has yet to suggest any instance in the world where this is true.

Senator Flynn: Tell me where it is not true.

Senator Perrault: I can tell you this, honourable senators, and especially my good friend the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, a member of the great historic Conservative Party, that one of the last acts of the last Conservative government in Britain was to make it an actionable offence for any British company to purchase advertising on a foreign station that broadcast those advertising messages back to consumers in Great Britain.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Oh, yes, but that was with respect to the pirate stations in the North Sea.

Senator Perrault: I suggest to honourable senators that the Mother Country has a great affection for freedom and for the rights and privileges of the ordinary people.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, Oh!

Senator Perrault: So the great historic Conservative Party in Great Britain made it an actionable offence for British advertisers to buy time on foreign stations if the messages from those stations were directed to British consumers. The law still stands. I would be interested to know the honourable senator's comments on that intriguing situation.

Senator Grosart: Would you like them now or later?

Senator Perrault: Later. The fact is that most—

Senator Grosart: Would the honourable senator like the comments now?

Senator Perrault: Plus tard, s'il vous plait. Later, please. The fact is that most countries in the world today—

Senator Flynn: That is not true—

Senator Perrault: —are acutely conscious of the need to be concerned about the welfare of their domestic communications industry—without exception.

Senator Flynn: That is a generality.

Senator Perrault: No contrary evidence has been produced anywhere in the debate in either chamber.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is there, if you can see it.

Senator Perrault: There is no evidence of other countries which accord special status of the kind we have accorded to Time magazine in this country for so many years. There is not one example. There is not one example from any stage of debate in the other place of any special status elsewhere of the kind we have accorded to Time magazine in this country—

Senator Smith (Colchester): We will put it into Braille for you.

Senator Perrault: —let alone the special status which, uniquely, among all the 135 or so countries comprising the United Nations, we have accorded to the border broadcasters in this country.

Senator Grosart: Would the Leader of the Government like a question on that now or later?

Senator Perrault: Later, please.

Now, what does Bill C-58 endeavour to do? It seeks to normalize a situation which has been highly and uniquely abnormal for many years. It is a situation which has seen the continuance of an arrangement whereby two very large, foreign-owned periodicals—

Senator Smith (Colchester): Only one.

Senator Perrault: —one with a weekly circulation of 1.4 million, together drew off $20 million of the $39 million of advertising revenue earned in 1974 by all of the 13 largest consumer magazines in Canada. While the situation in respect of Reader's Digest has been resolved, and that publication will now meet the guidelines—

Senator Smith (Colchester): By bending the rules.

Senator Perrault: —it has now been able to meet the standards which Bill C-58 hopes to establish.

Senator Smith (Colchester): To meet the different standards.

Senator Perrault: But what has Time done? Some of our friends in opposition are terrified by the facts. What has Time done?

Senator Flynn: You are terrified by your own members—those who oppose the bill.

Senator Perrault: Time has withdrawn its Canadian edition.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Perrault: Many Canadians regret the fact that Time no longer has four pages of Canadian news.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Six.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator must be an avid reader.

Senator Buckwold: He reads slowly.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have read Time magazine for years, and I miss those four pages.

Senator Flynn: Six pages.

Senator Perrault: But I was at the newsstand at the airport at the beginning of the week and there were stacks of copies of Time magazine all over the place, the only difference being that it now sells for a dollar a copy.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Sure, thanks to this legislation.

Senator Perrault: It is freely available.

Senator Flynn: Freely?

Senator Perrault: It is available without restriction. But now, without question, it is the U.S.-owned and basically U.S.-edited, and unadornedly the U.S.-directed, publication it has always been. It now enjoys, for the first time in years, equal status with Newsweek, McCall's, Harper's, Better Homes and Gardens and the Atlantic Monthly, along with the flood,—the virtual inundation—of American and other foreign-owned publications which occupy any hotel newsstand or news kiosk in Ottawa or any other city in this country.

Senator Flynn: That proves you are achieving nothing.

Senator Perrault: The existence of so many American and foreign publications on our newsstands gives the lie to the idea that Bill C-58 constitutes censorship. Indeed, honourable senators, our national policy towards the importation of foreign magazines and publications is without question the freest in the world. No wonder, honourable senators, that a few weeks ago, Freedom House in the United States once again proclaimed and rated Canada as the freest country in the world. Undoubtedly, one of the reasons inspiring the award is our open attitude toward the free circulation of magazines and other information. Yet the Deputy Leader of the Opposition says that Bill C-58 means censorship. He cannot be serious.

Senator Smith (Colchester): He is a serious man.

Senator Perrault: There is no valid case for anger against this nation, which permits the free and unfettered entry of millions of periodicals a year, and thereby permits enormous revenues to accrue to our neighbours in the U.S. and other countries. What other country does this in such a generous way? Again, if there are other countries with a freer attitude towards the circulation of magazines from all over the world, let that country be named. It has not been named so far in this dialogue and debate on Parliament Hill.

Senator Grosart: Name one that has not.

Senator Perrault: A number of impassioned speeches have been made in defence of Time, now that this bill seeks to give it equal status with its counterparts. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that Time really needs no sympathy. Its publishing empire will continue to make handsome profits, as it has in the past and, if I may say so, I believe that some of the sympathy that has been generated may be misdirected. May I suggest, when speaking of Time—

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is fleeting.

Senator Perrault: —that I marvel, and all of us in the Senate should marvel, that it has learned so abysmally little about the Canadian system of government, after its long years of landed immigrant status.

I would like to quote from an essay in Time of March 8 last, written by Stephen LaRue, President of Time. In writing about the demise of Time's Canadian edition he said, in part:

Its editorial staff... regularly prepared and published Canadian cover stories. The last: a report on the election of the Conservative Party's new leader, Joe Clark. Time Canada was warmly received by readers.

I am sure it was by some of them. He goes on:

Time Canada was left with no choice but to cease publication when the House of Commons in Ottawa approved a government bill last week.

I know that I echo the view of most senators when I say that Mr. LaRue, this citizen of the United States, head of Time Canada, obviously has not learned much about the parliamentary process in Canada since he came here to take over the Time operation in Canada.

● (2020)

Senator Grosart: He must have been here this afternoon.

Senator Perrault: And then, in what can only be described as an act of corporate petulance, shortly thereafter Time's subscription rate for Canadians went from $18 to $30 a year. I have here the subscription form where it says, "Please send 26 weeks of Time and bill me later for $15." Then it has another box where it says, "I prefer 52 weeks for $30. Rate good just in Canada."

What is good about the rate? The rate in the United States is $18 a year, although they are talking about putting it up to $22. Newsweek magazine, which has circulated these many, many years in our country without any special status, gives its subscription rates to Canadians on page 4. Again, I have a copy of this magazine and it says, "Newsweek is published weekly, $19.50 a year..." Compare this with Time's rate "good just in Canada" of $30—over 36 per cent higher than the highest proposed U.S. rate, and 54 per cent higher than Newsweek's. So, in other words, Mr. LaRue has told Canadians, "It is through Parliament now; we are finished; we are going to pull out because the House of Commons has approved it." He was not at all concerned about the Senate or the royal proclamation or any other aspect of the parliamentary process. He boosted the Canadian subscription rate up to $30 a year, $1 a copy, while Newsweek meanwhile circulates at $19.50 a year. These actions were taken before the bill had even arrived in this chamber and before the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee of the Senate, one of the most effective committees in this country, had been accorded an opportunity to consider the situation of that publication. They fired all their employees, sent them packing, saying "Go find another job; Bill C-58 is through Parliament." No, Mr. LaRue has not learned very much about the political process in Canada.

Many senators have had long, distinguished careers in business, and they know some of the problems associated with making enterprises productive in our country. This is one of the aspects of the communications industry problem which confronts us all, regardless of our political beliefs or whether we choose to laugh at the bill or whether we take it seriously, Mr. Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: I am not laughing at the bill. You should know that I am laughing at you.

Senator Perrault: Would you squirm sitting down, senator? That would be helpful.

They know the competitive cost problems of Canada's shorter production lines; they know the allied problems associated with productivity, and they know the economic challenges of a successful Canadian commercial operation.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Who are you talking about?

Senator Perrault: I am talking about senators who have been associated with business enterprises. They know that in Canada we lack the production and per unit economies that are brought about through large-scale production. Let us take soap companies, for example. One executive told me a few months ago of some of the problems that we have in soap manufacturing. He said, "In the United States we can keep per unit costs low. We can build a soap factory and manufacture only Oxydol in one of the plants, and we have other plants which manufacture exclusively some other brands of detergent. But not so in Canada."

Senator Flynn: We have a soap opera here tonight.

Senator Perrault: He said, "We have short runs here and it increases the per unit cost of that product." This is very much the nature of the problem facing the publishing industry in this country. Where access to markets is limited, the economics of a commercial operation are equally limited. Similarly, Canadian publishing is experiencing to some degree the same kind of "production run" problems which make it difficult for some of our Canadian companies to compete internationally. We lack the economy of scale. The economy of scale for publishers is, of course, circulation. We do not have as many people who are potential subscribers to a news magazine in our country as they have in the United States. This is pretty basic to the nature of the problem. Small production runs pose major problems for Canadian manufacturers. Tariffs often help to overcome them, but in the realm of ideas and communications, ultimately, small circulation constitutes a genuine disaster if there is massive competition from abroad. In the critical area of communicating ideas, our communications media, our publishers, our television industry, our recording industry, cannot be allowed to gurgledown the drain to annihilation because of what can only be described in the present situation as cultural dumping in this country. This view does not mean one is anti-American, or unfriendly to any country; it is an economic fact of life. Time magazine—it has been said many times before, but it bears repeating—has had all its production costs covered by its millions of United States circulation. It has enjoyed a preferential advertising position. Time's printing plates are flown up from Chicago or New York, put on Canadian offset machines and rolled off in Canada. Almost all of the typesetting of Time magazine is done in the United States. We do not even have an adequate number of jobs for Canadian typesetters. What does this do to the competitive position of those who wish to establish a native, viable news magazine in this country? Faced with the fact that the per unit cost of every Time magazine is infinitely less than anything he can produce, the Canadian publisher must produce a news magazine of exceptional excellence which will attract Canadians to the magazine stands, and perhaps—as Bill C-58 suggests—he should be given a fair economic opportunity to compete.

Senator Grosart: Which applies to thousands of products.

Senator Perrault: You know, honourable senators, no concerned and self-respecting country, as I have said, would permit its communications industry to expire because of unfair competition and gurgledown the drain—gurgledown the drain.

Senator Grosart: They wrote that twice for you.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, I want you to know that I wrote this myself. I do not rely on writers, as do some of my friends opposite may do.

Senator Flynn: Well, you should; you should.

Senator Asselin: Will you swear to that?

Senator Perrault: Let us talk about Mexico, for example—

Senator Grosart: Do you mean that you wrote that "gurgledown the drain" yourself?

Senator Perrault: Senator, don't be so terrified of the facts. You will have your opportunity to reply. You know, a short while ago the President of Mexico spoke about his relations with the United States, the neighbour which abuts the Mexican border on the north. This is what he said—

Senator Smith (Colchester): So did the President of Cuba.

Senator Perrault: He said their relations with the United States are very good, and continued:

But in daily economic relations—the problems of prices, imports and exports, possible investment, the conditions of acquiring technology—we in Latin America, and particularly Mexico, are confronted with a dilemma. We either open up to the economic investments, life-style and psychological attitudes, all for the economic development of the U.S.—in which case we are favoring a process of colonization—or we try to exploit our natural resources and seek alliances in our own self-interest.

Then he announced that they intended to cancel 20 American television programs from the Mexican national television network, because they felt their themes were inimical to the best cultural interests of Mexico. Some they cancelled because of alleged violent themes, because they portrayed certain aspects of society that Mexicans did not want to see emulated in their country. Just as in Mexico, I suggest, honourable senators, that every nation has to be concerned about its culture, its arts, the advancement of its writers and its communications industry.

Senator Flynn: About the United States, you mean.

Senator Perrault: This does not mean to say that because of its attitudes and actions Mexico is any less a good neighbour of the United States. Indeed, relations are extremely good between Mexico and the United States.

With respect to television, we in Canada have acted quite differently. We do not impose specific bans on American television programs, although the Conservative Government of Ontario has a commission under way, headed by a former minister of the Crown, to decide whether some allegedly violent United States programs and others should be removed from television stations in Ontario. We in this government have not taken such action.

Senator Grosart: It is too bad that you haven't.

Senator Perrault: The government suggests that it is not narrow chauvinism to insist that our communications media reflect Canada and Canadian values and that we act to assist Canadians to achieve their potential as writers, producers, performers and artists, despite the overwhelmingly large cultural neighbour to the south of us. This policy of denying, at the very least, special status to U.S. publishers and broadcasters in no way diminishes our feeling of brotherhood and friendship with the United States.

As I have said, Time, because of its vast market, its millions of copies per week in all editions, is in an absolutely unassailable position to achieve the economy of scale denied to any Canadian publisher. In other industrial sectors we establish tariffs or quotas to protect certain Canadian industries against what we construe to be dumping or unfair competition. Honourable senators are aware of that. Indeed, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition's party has been one of the great historical proponents of developing a protectionist policy for Canadian industry.

● (2030)

Senator Flynn: Smoke screen!

Senator Perrault: The per unit cost of producing Time is negligible in relation to similar efforts in Canada, no matter how earnest or efficient the effort. That is why Time has made so much money in Canada. I understand that it has been the most profitable section of the Time operation based on investment of capital. Almost all of its production cost is covered by the U.S. editions, as I have said. Canada has been the high profit overrun, the icing on the production cake, the "Northern bonus" for Time magazine. That is not to say it is not a good magazine, an interesting magazine, but it happens to make a lot of money out of Canadians because of our magazine policy.

Bill C-58 suggests that at least Time should enjoy no privileged position, no special status.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Time has responded by cutting its advertising rates. It has said it has now decided that it can stay in business even by cutting the rates. Presumably the new rates will attract some Canadian advertisers, who will wish to continue to speak to Canadian consumers through the pages of Time. But be assured that Time will continue to make money—that is what they are in business for, and that is why everyone goes into business—which is more than most Canadian periodicals will be able to say at the end of this year. Despite this legislation, Time will still be in a substantially better profit position, I suspect, than most of our domestic magazines.

Some have suggested that the end of Time's so-called Canadian edition will not help publishing in Canada. I think it will. Another Canadian news magazine is in the formation stage. Maclean's is in existence now. Those two publications may or may not be successful, but those are the risks of private enterprise. I hope they are successful. Whether they say nice things about the government or not, I hope they are successful. I think it is good for this country. And all of us should welcome a viable news magazine in Canada's other official language. It is just as important to Canadians who speak French.

Senator Flynn: I wouldn't say that.

Senator Perrault: The readers will ultimately decide. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition, who has been in the communications industry, knows that the reader, the consumer, always decides whether or not he likes an advertisement, is going to buy a magazine, or watch a television program. If those magazines are successful—and I think most of us want them to be successful—they will give us for the first time an indigenous news magazine industry, a privilege enjoyed by every other mature country. Look at Germany, France and Britain. They all have their indigenous news magazines. How long would Britishers tolerate, for example, special tax status for a British edition of Time magazine with four pages devoted to coverage of the British scene? Do you think special tax status would be permitted, my honourable friend, in Paris for a French edition of Time, plated in New York, typeset there, with four pages covering French news? Of course not.

Senator Flynn: They would have to translate it.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator should shuck off his inferiority complex and decide that Canada may now be able to move out into its own news magazine industry. If these magazines are not successful—they may not be successful, and some Canadian investors may lose a great deal of money in the process—then our free market economy will inevitably see the redirection of millions of dollars of advertising money going to the support of other media.

As the honourable senator is aware, with his extensive background, those dollars may go to TV, radio, billboards, direct mail, even painted barrage balloons and skywriting.

Someone may even want to sponsor the televised debates of the Senate—one never knows.

Senator Flynn: Tonight's sitting would be worth it.

Senator Perrault: If he or she is not satisfied with Canadian news magazines, the consumer will say so and advertisers will simply turn to other advertising media. Whether those magazines succeed or fail, there will be a net benefit conferred on this nation by Bill C-58. Millions of advertising, promotional and production dollars will remain in this country. They will be spent in some fashion because Canadian industries in their enterprising way will still want to sell products to Canadians. After Bill C-58, freedom will be as unfettered as ever.

Bill C-58 refers to broadcasting and televising. I should like to conclude my remarks with references to this field, which is very important. Some honourable senators have spoken eloquently on this subject. I have agreed with some, and disagreed with others. When the bill goes to committee, we will be able to share our thoughts on the matter more fully.

Senator Flynn: Did you agree with those who oppose this bill?

Senator Perrault: These references to broadcasting have commercial and viewer implications across Canada. It may be that our negotiations with our friends to the south should be resumed for the purpose of discussing the ultimate aspects of television and radio broadcasting, cablevision, and the question relating to the ownership and rebroadcasting of program material. I do not resist that idea at all. I think it is very important that we continue discussions and negotiations in those areas.

Senator Flynn: Resist passage of this bill, then.

Senator Perrault: Let us attempt to keep the broadcasting section of this bill in perspective. Basically, the bill states that Canadian advertisers who wish to speak to the Canadian consumer through U.S. broadcast outlets may do so on any U.S. station they wish, but they may not deduct the cost of that advertising as a business expense. That is all the bill says.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: If a Canadian business wants to advertise to Canadians on a U.S. channel whose signal is being beamed back to Canada, that expenditure will not be considered a tax-deductible expense. Honourable senators are going to be called upon to determine whether Bill C-58 restricts the freedom of these U.S. stations, or the rights of Canadian businesses. We do know certain facts. Let me cite the case of channel 12 in Bellingham, Washington, a situation with which I have been very familiar over the past 25 years.

Senator Flynn: So has Senator van Roggen.

Senator Perrault: In 1953, an enterprising, resourceful American citizen, and a former friend of mine, no longer living, Mr. Rogan Jones, in the free enterprise tradition, saw in the greater Vancouver market a tremendous potential for television. He also noted that the Canadian development of the industry lagged considerably behind that of the United States. Mr. Jones had a successful radio station in Bellingham, Washington, a small community, "as the crow flies," about 25 miles from Vancouver. He made a great deal of money with that radio station because he was an efficient operator. He applied to the Federal Communications Commission in Washington for a television licence to serve the hardworking citizens of northwest Washington, saying that he wanted to bring news, entertainment and community service programming into their lives. The FCC, of course, said that any man who wanted to go into an area with only 25,000 people, such a sparse population, deserved to get a licence to serve northwest Washington. Mr. Jones was given his licence to serve that community, which was, essentially, at that time a semi-rural community. But Mr. Jones had bigger fish to fry. Remember, Mr. Jones was only a few miles from Vancouver.

Senator Grosart: And the FCC knew nothing about it! Who are you kidding?

Senator Perrault: He saw that the economic potential for television time sales was enormous. He got his licence and immediately, apart from a few, sparse community programs, almost all the programming was directed across the border to that rich motherlode in Vancouver.

In 1953, business was so good that Mr. Jones decided to get himself the highest powered transmitter that money could buy, which he erected on an island on the 49th parallel between Vancouver and Victoria. He then began to sell almost all his commercial time to Canadian companies faced with the lack of an adequate number of Canadian television outlets.

I do not fault Mr. Jones. He was an enterprising businessman who saw an opportunity. He was an ethical operator. He simply decided that the real key to his economic success was to broadcast to Canadians, and not to those 25,000 or 30,000 Americans who lived in his FCC-authorized area of Bellingham, Washington.

In 1955, within two years, the brand new, high-powered transmitter was in operation. He had partial CBS network affiliation and was beginning to make big money. Although the situation has changed to only a small degree in recent years, in those early days of KVOs, Mr. Jones would go to the broadcasting film people in New York and say, "You are not going to charge me very much for this film to broadcast to those few folk in northwest Washington, are you?" And they would say, "Of course not. That is your service area. You are licensed by the Federal Communications Commission to serve that area, so in view of your limited audience you are entitled to lower rates on the film that we rent to you."

Well, you know, it was very profitable for Mr. Jones—very profitable.

Senator Flynn: Shame!

Senator Perrault: Today, on the basis of the present operation of KVOs, 35 to 40 hours of network programming each week comes in from the Columbia Broadcasting System in New York at very low cost, because it is directed, technically, by CBS to the residents of northwest Washington. A far smaller number of programs are purchased from Canadian-based program suppliers, some of these program tapes being rented on the basis of audience "circulation" in the Vancouver market. The goal of making money has been realized. The real goal of this U.S.-licensed station has been the market of southern British Columbia.

Senator Flynn: That is awful.

Senator Perrault: Shortly after the establishment of its powerful new transmitter, KVOS opened a Vancouver sales office. In 1955 it established KVOS-TV (BC) Ltd., which has been in existence ever since, mining the rich commercial ore body of British Columbia advertising revenues. It has been producing some good programming. There is no question about that. They are good business people, having made a contribution to the British Columbia community. Some of their profits along the way have been invested in film production in Canada, with resultant jobs. But to all intents and purposes, KVOS-TV—and one can find its counterparts in other areas along the border—is a U.S. station licensed by the FCC to serve northwest Washington. It buys much of its programming on that basis. It is, in fact, an unlicensed Canadian station serving British Columbia, just as there are other FCC-licensed stations, licensed to serve certain U.S. regions, buying their programming on that basis and beaming their signals to Canada.

KVOS is a Canadian station without having to meet any of the Canadian content regulations, without serving in any meaningful way the Canadian interest in Canadian news and public affairs programming. With certain exceptions, such as political advertising, KVOS does not adhere to the Canadian Broadcasting Act. It does not broadcast Canadian content programming of any kind. Instead, it telecasts wall-to-wall U.S. programming, and the ratings indicate that the people of British Columbia like many of these U.S. programs.

Senator Flynn: Oh, shame!

Senator Perrault: KVOS has been in the happy position of being able to purchase the most popular commercially successful programs, the highest rated programs, without having to telecast obnoxious recitals from some Canadian city, whether it be Vancouver or any other city, or without producing a Canadian farm broadcast, or without having to serve the Canadian need for public discussion of economic and political events in Canada. It is wall-to-wall U.S. programming, some of it acquired at highly preferential rates.

In reality, British Columbia provides the vast majority of the income of KVOS, accounting for something in the order of 90 per cent. One report put the gross income of KVOS for its last fiscal year at $9 million from the Vancouver market, and this without any significant Canadian content. Certainly, that figure is a minimum of $7 million.

To get back to Mr. Jones, he retired a wealthy, happy man, after realizing a handsome capital gain before going on to his reward. He sold out to Wametco Enterprises Inc. of Miami, Florida. I understand that there was one Canadian company interested in buying part of the operation, but that Mr. Jones opted to sell to Wametco of Miami, which runs many of the entertainment enterprises in the south.

In terms of profit on investment, KVOS-TV became, and is today, the star in the Wametco conglomerate "crown". It is reputed to be the most profitable single entity in the Wametco empire, with by far the highest return on any investment in that empire, and the highest return on invested capital of any television station purporting to serve the Canadian television market.

These are things that must be discussed in committee.

Free of regulations governing Canadian broadcasters, Wametco of Miami, Florida, through KVOS-TV, this 100 per cent American corporation realized last year $7 million from the Canadian market, and all of this with minimum staff, no Canadian news coverage, apart from a teletype machine—not a word about anything that happens here in Parliament, although the nightly CBS American news goes into thousands of homes in British Columbia. It is estimated that the KVOS-TV net profit on investment was far ahead of anything in the Canadian industry anywhere in Canada last year. Will KVOS-TV be affected adversely should Bill C-58 pass in its present form? KVOS-TV came down to the other place the other day, and its spokesman said that they will slash their advertising rates 50 per cent. They will stay in business. They will make money. They will still realize a hefty profit. This testimony is available in the parliamentary record.

● (2040)

Senator Flynn: What do you want to do?

Senator Perrault: Significantly, while it claims to be a good corporate citizen of 20 years standing, even its Canadian sales entity, KVOS-TV BC Limited is wholly owned by KVOS Television Corporation, a Washington corporation, which in turn is wholly owned by Wametco Enterprises Inc. of Miami, a Florida corporation. In 23 years of operation, no degree of Canadian ownership has been permitted even in the British Columbia entity. It is true that Canadians sell advertising and work in film production, but a United States citizen runs the Canadian sales operation and the profits go to the American corporation. The Canadian sales office is under American direction and control. While KVOS pays Canadian income tax on its Canadian advertising sales and its revenue from film production, only 50 per cent of its Canadian advertising revenue is taxable; the other 50 per cent goes directly out of the country tax-free to KVOS Television Corporation in the State of Washington—tax-free to Canadians.

Senator Smith (Colchester): What do you mean by "tax-free"?

Senator Perrault: That no tax accrues to Canada from the portion sent back to the parent corporation.

Senator Smith (Colchester): After it pays 50 per cent?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators must ask themselves whether freedom is really being restricted when Bill C-58 asks that the special and privileged position of border broadcasters be ended; whether this Washington State entity, for example, which has grossed an estimated $80 million in Canadian revenue from advertising sales in this country, deserves to continue in its privileged position.

Senator Grosart: Let us throw out General Motors. We had better throw out General Motors.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator who said, "Let us throw out General Motors," is one who has done much in the realm of ideas, and he knows that there is a profound difference between a commercial enterprise like General Motors and the realm of communications which has a great deal to do with Canada being a nation. There is an essential difference.

Senator Flynn: It does not show in your speech, anyway.

Senator Grosart: I will reply later.

Senator Perrault: Now a new UHF TV licence has been issued in the Vancouver market to a group of Canadian investors. It is at this stage a risky undertaking—

Senator Flynn: Rubbish.

Senator Perrault: —as there are many other stations competing in Vancouver for the viewers' attention. Let me tell those who may not know that Canadian viewers have a choice of music on channel 2, television on channels 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, cable programming on channel 10, and further TV on channels 11 and 13. So there is competition. I wonder how many honourable senators would invest money in a television station under those circumstances.

Senator Grosart: KVOS did.

Senator Perrault: This company has done this. This organization is undertaking a risky enterprise. They are seeking the opportunity to place broadcasting messages before that fractionalized audience in southern British Columbia. How would any of us feel to have as major competition what is, in effect, a Canadian station not bound by Canadian content regulations, not bound by any pledge or commitment to provide extensive news and special events coverage, but committed solely to the extraction of as many dollars as possible from the southern British Columbia market? This is a station faced with this task, not only competing with CBC and CTV and the American channels which come in from Seattle, but from an unlicensed Canadian broadcaster—because that is what KVOS is—directing its signal from across the border.

How would our friends in any American city, whether it is Seattle or any other city, feel about a Canadian-owned transmitter on the outskirts of the city, an outlet not burdened by United States regulations but committed almost exclusively to the pursuit of the commercial dollar? Honourable senators, the situation would not be tolerated, as you well know. Even CKLW in Windsor, Ontario, where the converse is true, the owner of the station which sells time in the United States and broadcasts those commercial messages back to the Americans is in support of this legislation.

Senator Flynn: Maybe Senator Laird can tell us about that.

Senator Smith (Colchester): What does that mean?

Senator Perrault: It simply means that one Canadian broadcaster who makes a great deal of money selling advertising to Americans favours Bill C-58, and obviously is not concerned about the retaliation that some honourable senators say they fear.

Senator Flynn: Retaliation from the United States?

Senator Perrault: May I speak to the argument that somehow the passing of Bill C-58 will jeopardize our relations with the United States? I want to tell you about a situation that exists in the West again, an area I know something about. Outside of Seattle there is a community known as Tacoma. Tacoma, Washington, has a cable television network, and in their eminent good sense they have allocated one of their channels to programming from a Canadian television network—CTV is carried by the American cablevision company. A current dispute exists in the Seattle area. All of the American television stations in Seattle are protesting the fact that a Canadian station is available in the Seattle network area, despite the fact that only 15 per cent of Seattle area homes are served by the cable system, as against 80 per cent in the Greater Vancouver area. The Seattle stations demand the deletion of Canadian television from their local cablevision network because they say it represents unfair competition.

Do honourable senators agree that it is unfair competition? Very possibly! But do you know what the affected Canadian CTV station has said? The Canadian CTV station has written in response to an FCC inquiry, saying, "By all means, we don't believe in unfair competition. Would you please delete our station from your television cable system if you believe it is unfair, or delete any program that the cable system brings to you from Canada if you believe it constitutes unfair competition." Yet here we have honourable senators telling us how dreadful it is that the Americans are going to believe that we are unfriendly if we pass Bill C-58.

Senator Flynn: You are getting a little bit upset.

Senator Perrault: Let me give you the facts again. An American cable system carries the CTV network. The television stations in the Seattle area have demanded deletion of CTV from their cable system, or the deletion of all Canadian programs which are broadcast by a Canadian station if they are released prior to U.S. release in the Seattle-Tacoma market. They cite unfair competition as their reason for the protest to the Federal Communications Commission of the United States, and they have written Canadian authorities to protest. And I think that they are right.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Is it surprising?

Senator Perrault: They are right. That is why CTV, channel 8 in Vancouver, has stated that the station can be deleted, commercials deleted; indeed, anything necessary can be done to assure fair competition for Seattle broadcasters, who have paid for the right to televise certain programs in the Seattle market and are having their audience fractionalized because the same program is coming in by cable from Canada.

Senator Flynn: Who has paid for it?

Senator Perrault: These Seattle broadcasters have paid for their regional rights for identical programs which may be released in the Vancouver market. Again, we should be concerned about relations with our friendly neighbour to the south. The U.S. channels have made a good point in this Tacoma case.

Again, near the Mexican border another problem exists, but here it is a little different. There are a number of Mexican transmitters along the California border broadcasting powerful signals, some of them having 100,000 watts of power.

Senator Flynn: In Mexican?

Senator Perrault: The Mexican stations sell commercial time in the Los Angeles market, and broadcast in English to the Los Angeles market. At the present time the television and radio stations of southern California have launched an appeal to the FCC to have those stations closed down because of unfair competition with U.S.

broadcasters. They ask that some action be taken to restrict the actions of Mexican stations in soliciting advertising in the California market, and in the United States generally, and broadcasting the advertising back to the U.S. Canadians can certainly appreciate the dilemma of the affected American broadcasters of southern California.

● (2050)

Senator Smith (Colchester): Sure.

Senator Perrault: You know, when we discuss the pros and cons of Canada's broadcasting policies, and the desire of many Canadians to assure a strong competitive position for their broadcasting and television industry, do we really know of some of these actions taken by our neighbours to the south with respect to what they conceive to be unfair competition from their neighbours?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Who are you to speak for all Canadians, anyway?

Senator Flynn: You say the FCC has been approached, but what has it decided?

Senator Perrault: The case is under review now.

Senator Flynn: But what have they decided?

Senator Perrault: The case is under review at the present time, honourable senators. I am sure there will probably be a satisfactory solution achieved as a result of the negotiations with the Mexican broadcasters.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is what we are saying—negotiate.

Senator Flynn: Why not do the same with United States?

Senator Perrault: When Canadian stations suggest that similar actions be taken when our interests are at stake or that certain actions be taken, such as commercial deletion from certain U.S. cable programming when Canadians have purchased Canadian television rights for telecast in Canadian markets penetrated by U.S. cable programming, there are those who suggest we may offend the United States. I want to tell my honourable friends in this chamber that a meeting was held not too many weeks ago here in Ottawa with officials of the U.S. State Department and the FCC. That meeting was held on January 13, 1976. No one on the delegation from the United States offered any serious criticism of Bill C-58. There were some questions asked about it. Canadian explanations appeared to be satisfactory to our visitors. There was and is concern, and perhaps misunderstanding, in the United States about the deletion of certain American television commercials from cable networks in Canada, but our friends in the United States have expressed no real concern about Bill C-58. Their broadcasters, as I have stated, seem to have similar problems. At the January 13 meeting, Department of Communication officials met with External Affairs officials, CRTC officials and officials of the Department of State and the FCC.

The people who should really be concerned about the practice of some U.S. border broadcasters in purchasing programming material to serve their FCC-licensed areas and then beaming their signals to populated and profitable Canadian cities are the copyright holders of this program material—those people who own the rights to it—not the stations.

The fact is that no one in this country is trying to take away American television programs. As one Canadian broadcaster has stated, "The six guns drawn at high noon at the 49th parallel can be put back in their holsters by the FCC's instructing all U.S. border stations to stop weakening the Canadian broadcasting system by booking or accepting Canadian audience-directed advertising contracts." When an American station has not bought and paid for the Canadian rights to a program it deliberately broadcasts to Canada while Canadian stations have bought the rights in Canada, in his opinion it is time we looked at which transmitter is flying the skull and crossbones. And yes, that philosophy and those ethics should apply conversely. Canadian-purchased programs should not constitute unfair competition for U.S. broadcasters or their telecasts on U.S. cable systems, just as Canadian broadcasters, when they have purchased area rights in the Maritimes, Ontario, Quebec or British Columbia, should be entitled to exclusive coverage on cable.

In 1953, when KVO5-TV was the lone television station offering its signal in the Vancouver market, today's problems did not exist. Then came channel 2, CBC Vancouver, channel 6 Victoria, and channel 8 Vancouver and their many other counterparts in the Maritimes, the Prairie Provinces and Ontario. But the West is the area I know best. The fact is that, after 23 years of its highly profitable existence, almost all of the KVO5-TV programs are available or potentially available on the dial from other stations or on the cable system.

Senator Flynn: Then what about the question of culture, if the same programs are available?

Senator Perrault: Now that Canadian owners—

Senator Flynn: You have lost your main purpose.

Senator Perrault: Don't be so uneasy about what I am saying tonight.

Senator Flynn: I am uneasy.

Senator Perrault: It may strike home, but try to accept it in good grace. Now that Canadian owners of the newly licensed television station in Vancouver must develop programming with enough public appeal to make their station strong enough to fulfil their commitment to the CRTC and to achieve economic viability, I want to remind honourable senators of what the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party supported when the CRTC was brought into existence without a dissenting voice. They supported legislation which says that the Canadian broadcasting system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada. They said the programming provided by the Canadian Broadcasting System should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonably balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern. Do the border broadcasters do that? They said that the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources. That is the legislation for which all parties voted. Do the border broadcasters comply?

Senator Flynn: You just said that the Canadian stations are broadcasting the same programs as the U.S. stations. That is contrary to the bill.

Senator Perrault: Senator, don't reduce this argument to dragging in red herrings.

Senator Flynn: That is no red herring. You were the one dragging in the red herring.

Senator Perrault: If the honourable senator understands so little of Canadian broadcasting, then let me tell him that we have Canadian content regulations with respect to television and radio and that there are some highly rated programs—

Senator Flynn:—coming from the United States.

Senator Perrault:—which can be purchased from program syndication organizations in the United States and Canada and which are produced in the United States and elsewhere. These can be purchased by any station. Additionally, in the case of KVOS-TV, all of the CBS network programs which are currently on the station can be received from cablevision channels, including channel 7 in Seattle which has the full basic CBS network service. That is for your information.

Senator Flynn: Then don't use this argument.

Senator Perrault: Most of the programs which Canadians now watch on KVOS-TV would come to Vancouver viewers on the new station, if the new station is given an opportunity to purchase them for the Vancouver market—most of them. The opportunity is there. But that does not mean to say they do not have to meet the Canadian content regulations.

Honourable senators, I have just one brief additional comment. With respect to the questions I have raised tonight, I know that some of you will disagree with what I have said. I have detected, perhaps mistakenly, a note of dissent at times during my presentation.

Senator Grosart: Unbelief!

Senator Perrault: But, honourable senators, may I suggest that we all interest ourselves in this important bill, that we support it on second reading and get it into committee. I shall be pleased to join you in the committee deliberations to discuss the bill's implications for all of us. But, above all, let us do the best thing we can to assure the best interests of this country in a responsible way, bearing in mind our relationship with our good neighbours.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the leader if in committee he will take the same strong attitude as he has in his speech tonight?

Senator Sullivan: Honourable senators, may I humbly move the adjournment of the debate. There is one particular aspect of this legislation that I wish to discuss briefly tomorrow.

Senator Grosart: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Sullivan, debate adjourned.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9:45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting immigration security.

An Act to amend the Veterans Insurance Act and the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code and to make related amendments to the Crown Liability Act, the Immigration Act and the Parole Act.

An Act to amend the Feeds Act.

The Honourable James Jerome, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1976.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1977.

To which bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bills.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 31, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, covering the calendar year 1975, pursuant to section 34(2) of the Official Languages Act, Chapter O-2, R.S.C., 1970.

CANADIAN FILM INDUSTRY

ACADEMY AWARD TO CRAWLEY FILMS LTD. OF OTTAWA

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the Senate to the recognition given to the Canadian film industry earlier this week. I refer, of course, to the Academy Award won by Crawley Films of Ottawa for their production of the feature length documentary film, The Man Who Skied Down Everest. Those who shared in the production of this film have every reason to be proud of their achievement.

I know honourable senators appreciate the honour brought to Canada by this company; I know they will also appreciate what a source of encouragement this will be to the Canadian film industry.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

RECEPTION FOR ARTISTS IN SPEAKER'S CHAMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, those interested in meeting a large group of English- and French-speaking artists who are performing this week at the National Arts Centre are invited to my quarters, where a reception in honour of these artists will take place this afternoon from 5 to 6 p.m.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on operations under the Bretton Woods Agreement Act and the International Development Association Act for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 7 of the first-mentioned Act, Chapter B-9, and section 5 of the latter Act, Chapter I-21, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of a Statement and Recommendations of the National Advisory Committee on Immunizing Agents resulting from a meeting in Ottawa, March 23, 1976, issued by the Department of National Health and Welfare, together with a News release thereon.

Honourable senators, the statement of recommendations of the National Advisory Committee relates to the swine flu virus, which poses at least some dangers for this fall.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Macnaughton, for Senator Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-33, respecting United Grain Growers Limited, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

INFORMATION CANADA

INQUIRY WITHDRAWN

On the Inquiry of Senator Forsey:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to two pamphlets. "The Governors General of Canada", and "The Prime Ministers of Canada", issued recently by Information Canada.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask leave to withdraw the Notice of Inquiry standing in my name because I was informed yesterday afternoon that the pamphlets in question had been withdrawn. It would therefore be a mere waste of the Senate's time for me to catalogue their sins of omission and commission.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE

BANK'S REFUSAL TO CASH GOVERNMENT PAY CHEQUES— SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, in view of the discussion we had yesterday about the refusal of a bank or banks to cash certain government cheques, and in view of the statement made in the other place by the President of the Treasury Board in the following terms:

If the cheques are dated prior to April 1, the cheques will be honoured; if they are dated after April 1, they would have to wait for the Senate to pass interim supply.

may I ask the leader of the Government if he would, first, confirm the statement of the President of the Treasury Board and, secondly, if he would agree that if the Senate had passed Bill C-91 today there would have been no adverse effects.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, certainly every effort will be made to ascertain the facts, and the matter will be duly reported back to the Senate.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, a prime reason that I am on my feet this afternoon to comment on this piece of legislation is that there is a publication which is vital to the interests of the medical profession in Canada, namely, MD of Canada. I speak as one who has been intimately associated with that publication from the time I started as a consultant, and as a personal friend of the founder and publisher, Felix Marti-Ibanez, that most distinguished of medical historians, recognized throughout the world. This publication comes to the medical profession of this country free of charge, and I add that there is not a month goes by that one of his great writings does not appear.

It is rather strange to me that this periodical was so totally overlooked in the other place, as was its importance to Canada and to the medical profession, since it is accepted so widely throughout the world.

Having said that and before I go into further detail, let me say that I am going to be brief. We certainly will not have the situation that we had last night.

Honourable senators, when studying any piece of legislation, one of the most important matters to consider is who is affected by the legislation? When this bill first saw the light of day it was referred to generally, and aptly so, as the Time-Reader's Digest bill. It was obvious even then from the nature of the legislation and from the statements being made even by various ministers of the crown with regard to Canadian ownership and content that the government was out to get Time and Reader's Digest. Force Time and Reader's Digest out, the government seemed to think, and the universe of the Canadian periodical industry will be permitted to unfold as it should.

Personally, I have never been able to convince myself that that sort of protectionism is healthy for any kind of industry. I still believe in the therapeutic value of competition. But I do not want to go into that just yet.

● (1410)

The aim of the government, when it first introduced this bill, was to oust Time and Reader's Digest. They attempted to cover up their intent by allowing the legislation to affect a few other smaller magazines, but the main aim, without question, was to do away with the special status being accorded Time and Reader's Digest. Well, where are we now? Time has left the country and, regardless of what we do with this bill, Time will certainly not risk returning to Canada to set up shop anew. On the other hand, an accommodation was reached with Reader's Digest. The government came to realize that it would be politically unwise to force out Reader's Digest. That periodical provides a lot of jobs in Canada, especially in Quebec. Also, it has a very loyal readership, particularly in Quebec, where its French-language edition is without peer. Therefore, so-called concern for the preservation of our cultural identity gave way to political expediency. A way was found to allow Reader's Digest to remain in Canada because the government was made to feel the heat.

But now, what about the smaller magazines? What about those which were included in this mess in order that the government not look as though it were witch-hunting? Does the government really intend to go on and persecute these small magazines whose only real offence is that they don't have as large a following as Time and Reader's Digest? With Time and Reader's Digest taken care of, only vanity and a foolish desire to maintain a semblance of objectivity would drive this government to insist upon the bill presently before us.

Take, for example, the case of MD of Canada. What possible justification is there for bringing to bear upon it the full force of this proposed legislation? Perhaps, if I were to give you a bit of background on MD of Canada, honourable senators, you might come to realize that we are about to do something here which is unnecessary, unfair and unenlightened.

In 1960 I made the personal acquaintance of the founder and editor of that magazine. From that time on we have kept close correspondence. There is no question but that in the history of medicine he will go down as one of the great medical historians of all time, from the days of Hippocrates down to Banting and Best. His essays are a masterpiece in English prose. He was fluent in Islamic, Arabic, a certain dialect of Chinese, English, French and German. Of Spanish descent, he first arrived in New York in 1960. Senator Connolly will recall that a number of years ago, when he was Leader of the Government in the Senate, he very kindly entertained for me and Senator Bourget at dinner one of the most distinguished medical men of England, the late Sir Terence Cawthorne. He was chairman of the History of Medicine Branch of the Royal Society. A short time later he invited me over to speak before that particular branch of the Royal Society. I spoke on the subject of Bell's Palsy, which is paralysis of the face, and a disease on which I had done a great deal of experimental research and surgical work. After I had presented my paper before that society I received a most lovely and congratulatory letter from the former editor and founder-in-chief of this magazine. I have it today. In addition, he sent me a beautifully bound copy in colour of one of his most famous treatises and essays, The Epic of Medicine. I will show that, I trust, at the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, if the bill is referred to that committee.

However, I wish to say that I cannot understand for the life of me why this great scientific publication, which has on its editorial board in Canada today some of the most outstanding scientists, was allowed to go by the wayside.

Let me name a few of them: Paul P. David, Director of the Montreal Heart Institute; Jacques Genest, Professor and Director, Clinical Research, Institute of Montreal; Jean-Baptiste Jobin, Director of Clinical Teaching, Faculty of Medicine, Laval University; J. Jacques Lussier, Dean, Faculty of Medicine, University of Ottawa; and last, but not least, Hans Selye. Not to have any strange ideas, there were a few English-speaking members of the profession also on that board.

So I will make a plea. As a medical man who has been vitally interested in medicine, I find these essays that come out every month much more profitable in the learning process than sitting before the television or reading Time or Reader's Digest. These are classics in themselves, they are an education in themselves, and I hope the Senate, in its wisdom, will amend the bill so that this Canadian publication can remain in Canada.

Senator Buckwold: Will the honourable senator allow a question? He concluded his remarks by saying that he hopes this Canadian publication can remain in Canada. Would he explain that a little further? If it is a Canadian publication, why is there a problem created?

Senator Flynn: Read the bill.

Senator Sullivan: It is a Canadian publication. Articles that have appeared in it have been written by exceptional men of science in Canada. The fact that it is published in this country does not prevent it from receiving articles from men of science throughout the world. I just do not understand why it has been included in the legislation. That is all. I cannot understand it.

Senator Buckwold: I am not objecting. I am looking for information. I do not know anything about that magazine. For example, is it owned by Canadians?

Senator Flynn: It is a Canadian corporation, but U.S. controlled.

Senator Buckwold: Controlled by Americans?

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Buckwold: Does its content meet the standard of the number of articles produced in Canada?

Senator Sullivan: Of what importance is that?

Senator Flynn: No.

Senator Buckwold: I have one last question: How did it get the exemption during the time of Reader's Digest's exemption? How did that happen?

Senator Flynn: Because it was in the same class for tax purposes.

Senator Sullivan: It is in a different class as a magazine.

Senator Flynn: You could probably ask that of the sponsor. He is supposed to know all the answers.

Senator Sullivan: I might say, Senator Buckwold, that the last editorial, in the March edition of this publication, by the late Felix Marti-Ibañez, was entitled "Writers Under the Light of Psychiatry." I only wish I had one of his articles that I read some years ago—"Lawyers Under the Light of Psychiatry."

Senator Flynn: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Perrault: Oh!

Senator Flynn: Would you rather listen to me again today?

Senator Perrault: You spoke yesterday.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, I should like to speak to this bill, if I am not too late.

Senator Flynn: I will yield with pleasure, Senator Paterson.

Senator Paterson: Owing to my disability I have difficulty in reading, and I am greatly indebted to Reader's Digest. For several years they have furnished me with phonograph records of their magazine, and they do that for every person who has faulty eyesight. This service is not exactly free, but it is provided absolutely at cost. It first cost about $28 a year, and it is now down to $11 a year. I have the pleasure of subscribing for other people who cannot afford it. It is a great help to anyone with bad eyesight. That is one thing that I wanted to say on behalf of Reader's Digest.

There is also something else on my mind—something that I have spoken about before in the chamber. It goes back quite a long time. We are indebted for our high standard of living to outside investment. According to Bell Canada, the number of telephones used in Canada indicates that this country has the highest standard of living in the world. Bell Canada, at one time, was largely owned by AT&T—American Telephone & Telegraph Company. Canadian ownership was achieved as a result of share-by-share purchase by Canadians.

Canadian Pacific, until not so long ago, was financed by foreign capital, the result being that it was foreign owned. It is now largely owned by Canadians. However, the amount of trade in Canadian Pacific shares indicates that it might easily, once again, be foreign controlled. It might well be that a great amount of Arabian money is going into Canadian Pacific. No one will know who the big shareholders are until the shares are registered.

While I am on my feet, I want to repeat something I said in this chamber on a previous occasion. Canada became a nation in 1867. For the next 75 years, nothing was done to develop the great ranges of iron ore which are to be found along the lower St. Lawrence. Then Jules Timmins, of Hollinger Mines, got hold of the M.A. Hanna Company of Cleveland, which put, initially, $100,000 into surveys of the area. It now has over $1 billion invested in the iron ore business in Canada.

Next, U.S. Steel came along and developed Port Cartier, deepening it and building railroads. It has now spent very close to $750 million on its development, and is taking great loads of iron ore out of Canada. It employs a great many people in Quebec. We are very glad to have that investment. Those same ranges are also supplying a great deal of ore for Canadian furnaces.

Let me now speak of Colonel McCormick. Along with the late Senator Joe Bench, I was sent over to see Colonel McCormick's development at Welland some years ago. During the latter part of World War II, he converted his Welland plant to rubber production from wood waste.

Alcohol was produced in the process. Joe decided it was time we had a drink. There were some reporters present, and before trying it I wanted to see if they would go blind. As it turned out, they did not. Joe then said it was time to have another one. No one went blind. The alcohol was pure, as clear as water. Colonel McCormick went on with his developments—a great power plant at Baie Comeau, and a great papermill.

By the way, Colonel McCormick was at that time owner of the Chicago Tribune, which is where the money came from. Then Cargill Grain Company of Minneapolis built a 12 million bushel elevator at Baie Comeau, all of the capital again being American.

Moving west, I used to own an elevator at a place called Esterhazy in Saskatchewan. Near Esterhazy an American mining company started to dig for potash. They went down until they got to the Blairmore sands, at which point there was no way of shoring the walls. Representatives of the company went to Germany and spent $40 million extra on learning how to shore those sands. It was done, as I understand, by means of cast iron plates bolted in place as they went down. That was the beginning of the potash industry. I do not know how much money they had to put in the venture before they got anything out of it. They must have had an enormous number of agencies to sell the potash. If Saskatchewan goes into that industry they will have to use the American market in which to sell potash, but that is their business. Potash is a very difficult material to get because it is so deep in the ground. The Blairmore sands are at least 4,000 feet down, and you have to go considerably below that to get to it.

I will not go on for any longer, because I have told you enough in a very short time about what we owe the United States. Our standard of living was raised by their investments, including their successful investments in our provinces. They have never had cause to regret their investment in Canada, and I hope they never will. But we should never forget what we owe that great neighbour to the south.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, if no one else wishes to speak at this time, I move the adjournment of the debate. I do not think we can conclude it today, because I am quite sure that the rebuttal of the sponsor of the bill (Senator Davey) would have to be very long.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 1, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair. Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE A. K. HUGESSEN TRIBUTE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we proceed with routine matters this afternoon, I should like to inform the Senate that the Honourable A. K. Hugessen died in Bermuda on the evening of March 30 in his 85th year.

Senator Hugessen resigned from the Senate towards the end of 1966, after having served here some 30 years. An account of his parliamentary career is, of course, in the Senate records. It was summarized, shortly after his retirement, in Senate Hansard of February 1, 1967. At that time not only was an account given of the highlights of his great career, but tributes were paid to him and his work by Senator Grattan O'Leary, Senator Salter A. Hayden, Senator George White and Senator Ross Macdonald.

I think it can be said that the Honourable Adrian K. Hugessen was a great gentleman, and the most modest of men. It can also be said of him that he was a great lawyer, in which capacity he was associated with the eminent Montreal legal firm, as I knew it first, of Lafleur and MacDougall. I think, however, that it is as a parliamentarian that honourable senators would remember him best. He was one of the greatest parliamentarians of our time, and his whole career in Parliament was enacted in this house. He had a felicity and economy of language that was remarkable. He also had a capacity, amounting almost to genius, of going to the heart of every bill, and he had the ability to simplify the complex and make it understandable.

He made many great speeches here, but this is not the time to refer to all of them, because this has already been done. But there is one to which I should like to refer for a moment. It was made in 1949 when a bill before Parliament proposed the abolition of appeals from Canada to the Privy Council. He sponsored it. I suppose it could be said that Senator Hugessen took second place to no one in his appreciation of the great court which was the Privy Council at that time. And he came by this appreciation honestly. He had been born in England. His father, who was later Lord Brabourne, had been a member of the British House of Commons, and so too had his grandfather. It has even been suggested to me by a friend who knew him well that perhaps his grandfather and father sat in the British House at the same time. They were Gladstonian Liberals.

There is a story to the effect that his father, though perhaps it was his grandfather, entertained the Canadian delegation, including Sir John A. Macdonald and others, when they went to the United Kingdom to arrange for the enactment of the British North America Act. But Senator Hugessen, with this background, believed that the time had come to abolish appeals to the Privy Council, and he put it on very understandable grounds. He felt that Canada's legal establishment, after a century of work, had become stabilized. He also felt that the Canadian judicial establishment had achieved a high degree of sophistication, expertise and maturity. He felt it was able to stand upon its own feet. Honourable senators, there was pre-science not only in this speech but in the policy that prompted it. It was another stepping-stone on the long path of Canadian constitutional development.

Senator Hugessen, I think it can be said without any qualification, was an ornament to the halls of this Parliament. He was one of its most industrious and illustrious members. He was also one of the strongest bulwarks upon which our Canadian parliamentary institutions are built.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Public Service Staff Relations Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 115 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, Chapter P-35, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of Statistics Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 4(3) of the Statistics Act, Chapter 15, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move, seconded by Senator Perrault, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday, April 5, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

In giving you the customary forecast of what we can expect for the coming week, I shall deal first with the committees.

On Tuesday at 9.30 a.m. the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will meet to consider its draft report on the Manpower Division of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. This meeting will be in camera. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has scheduled two meetings on Tuesday, at 10.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m., on the subject matter of Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crimes. The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet at 3.30 p.m. to continue its study of Canada-United States relations, and the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has been called for 8.30 p.m.

On Wednesday the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has called a meeting for 9.30 a.m. on the Canadian textile industry. Should Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, have been referred, the committee will also commence its examination of that bill. The Special Senate Committee on Science Policy will meet when the Senate rises on Wednesday afternoon.

On Thursday the Foreign Affairs Committee will hold another meeting on Canada-United States relations at 9.30 a.m., the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region will meet at 11.00 a.m., and also on Thursday at the same hour there will be a meeting of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

In the Senate we will continue with the second reading debate on Bill C-58, and other items on the Order Paper. It is possible that we will have another bill from the other place by Monday evening.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the deputy leader what bill he expects from the other place? I understood he said only one.

Senator Langlois: Only one, yes. It is Bill C-92, to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

Senator Flynn: Is that the only bill that we can expect before the Easter recess? Would the deputy leader also inform the Senate if any date has been set for that recess?

Senator Langlois: The date for the Easter recess, I believe, was announced by the Leader of the Government a week or so ago. It is intended, tentatively, to recess from April 14 to April 26 or 27. As far as the legislation which may be passed in the other place before the Easter recess is concerned, the only other bill that I expect could come to this place, which I doubt, is Bill C-83. We have been informed—I heard about it through the radio and the press—that an allocation of time motion will be put today. The bill will likely be referred to committee some time next week. I have serious doubts whether it can reach us before Easter, but it will be soon after Easter if it does not come to us before that date.

Senator Flynn: I wanted to ensure that it is not apparent that we will have several bills to deal with in the coming weeks. It seems to me that the work of the Senate will be concentrated in committees and that there will not be too much to do in the Senate itself.

Senator Langlois: There is also the possibility that the Maritime Code, which has reached the third reading stage in the other place, could come to us at any time.

Motion agreed to.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE

BANK'S REFUSAL TO CASH GOVERNMENT PAY CHEQUES— SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the distinguished Leader of the Opposition asked a question on March 31.

Senator Flynn: You're making me blush.

[Senator Langlois.]

Senator Perrault: He said:

May I ask the Leader of the Government if he would, first, confirm the statement of the President of the Treasury Board and, secondly, if he would agree that if the Senate had passed Bill C-91 today there would have been no adverse effects.

This question has been diligently researched and I have the following reply:

In answer to the first part of the question, I should like to confirm the statement that the President of the Treasury Board made in the other place that:

If the cheques are dated prior to April 1, the cheques will be honoured; if they are dated after April 1, they would have to wait for the Senate to pass interim supply.

The pay cycle for House of Commons personnel is different from the pay cycle of most public servants. The House of Commons staff are paid twice a month and they received their second pay cheque for March over the three-day period ending Wednesday, March 31. Since these cheques were dated in March, they were a proper charge to the fiscal year 1975-76 for which funds were already voted.

The pay cycle for most public servants is every two weeks and the pay which caused concern was for the two-week period ending Friday, April 2, 1976. It has been a long-standing practice for employees to receive their pay cheques over a three-day period in order to ease the burden on the banking facilities. Therefore, in the normal course of events, public servants would receive their pay cheques Wednesday, March 31, Thursday, April 1, and Friday, April 2, and the banks would accept the cheques on these days even though they were dated April 2. Because these cheques are dated April 2, they are a charge to 1976-77.

If the Senate had not passed Bill C-91 until Wednesday, several thousand employees, normally paid on that day, would have had to wait until Thursday. Therefore, in answer to the second part of the question by the Leader of the Opposition, it cannot be agreed on the part of the government that the one-day delay would not have had adverse effects.

Senator Flynn: Then, of course, in order to avoid an adverse effect, it would be a much better practice to have interim supply come to this place at least one week before the fatal day.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to say that I am in complete agreement with the sentiment expressed by the Leader of the Opposition. That point has been made vigorously this week, in the appropriate places.

Senator Grosart: Did I understand the Leader of the Government to say that a cheque dated April 2 would normally be cashed by the banks on March 31?

Senator Perrault: It would be accepted.

Senator Grosart: The obvious question is: Has anyone told the banks? The situation we are talking about is one where the banks, we are told, refused to cash the cheques. Is there some breakdown in communication between the government and the banks in this matter?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, if I may be allowed to comment on Senator Grosart's question: If there was any confusion in this respect, it was because we were faced with two sets of circumstances. First, there were these instructions issued by the banks to their branches—or, rather, one bank, and I think there was some over-reaction there—to the effect that none of the cheques could be cashed without any specification as to the date of the cheque before the interim supply bill was passed.

This was the first set of circumstances. Dealing with the second set of circumstances, as I explained yesterday, the pay dates for most public servants span a period of three days, two of which were in the fiscal year just ended and one in the new fiscal year. For that reason, these pay cheques dated after April 1 could not be cashed before the interim supply bill received royal assent. Those were the circumstances which created—perhaps quite understandably—some of the confusion which arose.

I think that answers the first part of my honourable friend's question. As to who issued those instructions, I think it was made clear yesterday that when these cheques were sent to the various departmental distribution centres by Treasury Board, they were accompanied with instructions that they not be issued until the interim supply bill was passed. Somehow, some of those cheques were issued, contrary to the instructions given the distribution centres, and at least one bank refused to cash those cheques when they were presented for payment. In refusing to cash the pay cheques, the bank in question over-reacted to the instructions that no government cheques dated after April 1 should be cashed until the interim supply bill was passed and the bank applied this to all government pay cheques irrespective of their dates. That is the situation with which we were faced. I do not think I can add anything further.

Senator Flynn: I am glad to have the remarks of the deputy leader on the record. In fact, the banks usually cash these pay cheques two days before they are due. Normally, a cheque cannot be cashed before its due date.

I am glad to have those facts on the record, because there was some pressure exercised on the Senate in this situation. I again stress that this is something that should be avoided in the future.

Senator Langlois: These instructions applied to cheques dated April 2 only.

Senator Flynn: No, but some of those cheques had been distributed. In any event, it is not relevant.

Senator Langlois: That clears up the situation, I hope.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED—THIRD READING

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat moved third reading of Bill S-33, respecting United Grain Growers Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, we had a complete discussion of Bill S-33 in committee. For that reason I do not propose at this time to add anything further, except to say that if there are any further questions on the bill I will attempt to answer them.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Davey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, for the second reading of the Bill C-58, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act".—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, unless some other senator wishes to speak at this time, I propose to have this order stand.

Order stands.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, March 2, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Michaud calling the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Daniel Riley: Honourable senators, I did not expect to speak today. I had expected to speak on March 17, but Senator Flynn made a remark which made me a little shy about speaking on that occasion. When we met that night in solemn conclave in the West Block, the reason was apparent.

Today I expected Senator Flynn to speak on Bill C-58. Again I did not expect to speak, because how could a rowboat wallow in the wake of a leviathan of the deep, following an orator like Senator Flynn? When I thought it over a little, I realized that he did not speak today because—he did not want to be an "April's fool".

[Translation]

[English]

Senator Flynn: Do you want me to tell you the reason? It was because I wanted you to be the first speaker today. I knew you would be entertaining.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I want to speak to this inquiry, particularly because its subject matter is of great interest to me. When, as a young boy, I was first projected by my guardian into the northeastern section of New Brunswick, I had not heard much about the Acadian people, but in my early years I was educated by them and learned to love them deeply. I learned their culture, I learned something of their language, and I made many friends.

When Senator Michaud originated this inquiry some time ago, it caused me to reflect upon the many years I spent among these people in northeastern New Brunswick. When he spoke of the letter that was addressed to the Premier of New Brunswick, copies of which were sent to the Prime Minister and other important people, I was reminded of the plight of these people in our province.

Senator Michaud spoke well. He spoke mainly of agriculture, because he comes from the part that we call the eastern section of New Brunswick, where there is great stress on agriculture and where the people gain their livelihood mainly by cultivating small farms.

As a boy and as a young man, I began to study something of the people of northeastern New Brunswick, and I found that for generations they were exploited to the point where they were denied access to the type of education to which they were entitled. They were exploited by the merchants and by the people who processed fish. There was some investigative reporting done by a now defunct newspaper in New Brunswick, which established that the people of northeastern New Brunswick, particularly in the fisheries, were beset and assailed by poverty and frustration.

Boys did not have an opportunity for schooling because, when they were still very young, they were encouraged by the fish packing establishments to go out with their fathers and fish in the Northumberland Strait and the Bay of Chaleur. They were encouraged to leave school at an early age, and were sold nets which they could use in their fathers' boats. As they became older they were encouraged to buy boats themselves. As a consequence, during most of their lives they were indebted to the merchants, and the fish processors who, it should be noted, usually were the owners of the general stores in the area. Thus these people were enmeshed in debt, with usually a raft of chattel mortgages to discharge—on the first boat, on the second boat and then on the third boat.

So when I say that the people of the North Shore of New Brunswick and the northeastern section of New Brunswick were exploited, and beset and assailed by poverty and frustration, I in no way exaggerate. Payment for their catches of fish was usually made in wooden tokens which had to be cashed at the general store. You can imagine, therefore, in what kind of environment these people grew up. You can imagine the frustrations they experienced one generation after another.

Honourable senators, I was quite moved when Senator Fournier spoke so eloquently about the fisheries and the rich resources of this area. Coincidentally, on the day Senator Fournier spoke, an association called the New Brunswick Psychological Association addressed a letter to the Premier of the Province of New Brunswick, with a copy to the Prime Minister of Canada. That association is comprised of about 88 practising psychologists from every part of New Brunswick. I mention that merely to indicate that the serious problem being experienced in New Brunswick at the present time is not simply insular in nature. It is not merely a cry from the people of the northeastern part of the province; it is a general cry from all of the people of New Brunswick.

In their letter of March 2, 1976, The New Brunswick Psychological Association makes reference to a brief presented by the Diocese of Bathurst, which was referred to first by Senator Michaud, and then by Senator Fournier (Restigouche-GloUCEster) on March 2 last, and appended to Hansard of March 4, and one paragraph in their letter states:

The Reverend Wade in his brief stated that the "migration of labourers towards the southern sectors of the province is not only detrimental to family life, but it also has ill effects on their culture and language". Recent estimates from the Department of Social Services indicates that in one office of the department alone for the month of December 7,800 man working days were lost because no place of employment was available for these people who consequently had to rely on subsidy by the Government of New Brunswick.

That is, welfare.

• (1430)

When Senator Fournier (Restigouche-GloUCEster) spoke he mentioned that in the northeastern part of the province, in the counties of Gloucester, Northumberland and Restigouche, and in Campbellton and Bathurst, which are within the area, there was an unemployment rate of 24.2 per cent. That is about the highest in the country. However, the unemployment figures that are published by the responsible department do not include the people on welfare or seasonal workers, and if we add these to the unemployment I have referred to that exists in the northeastern part of New Brunswick, the percentage conceivably could be as high as 50 per cent. I say that this is a matter of national concern.

When we take into account the particular figures relevant to that section of the province, of northern New Brunswick, we have to realize that there are urban areas which have a much lower rate of unemployment than the rural and fishing areas, and when we state that there is an unemployment rate of something like 26 per cent—an increase of over 2 per cent from the time Senator Fournier (Restigouche-GloUCEster) spoke—we have to realize that in the county of Restigouche we have roughly 4,000 people on welfare; in the county of Gloucester—mainly on the Caraquet coast, as we call it—roughly 6,000; and in Northumberland county, something like 6,000. The population of Restigouche county is about 45,000; that of Northumberland county, about 55,000; and the population of Gloucester county, about 80,000.

I repeat, this is a matter of national concern, and I refer again to the letter which Senator Michaud mentioned when he opened the debate on his inquiry, and to the recommendations that are made in it. The reason why the clergy took the action they did in this respect was the deep alarm they felt about the situation, and their conviction that something must be done, and done immediately, for these people.

I have referred to the statements of the psychologists. As I said, these are psychologists from all over the province. They say:

We believe that conditions such as these and the accelerated rate of government subsidy through welfare payments are only a minor part of the general feeling of helplessness, powerlessness and anomie experienced by a large proportion of North Eastern New Brunswick residents. The prevalent characteristic of this condition of anomie appears to be a lack of control over one's own destiny.

They are addressing the Premier, of course, and I must stress that I am not criticizing the Premier in any way, because he is concerned, too. They speak of the work done by Rotter, who is an authority on psychology.

[Rotter] concludes that an individual who believes that he is not in control of his environment, specifically in terms of his economic status:

1. becomes less alert to those aspects of the environment which provide useful information for his future well-being.
2. cannot take steps to improve his environmental conditions.
3. places less value and sees fewer rewards associated to skill and achievement and becomes less concerned with his ability.
4. becomes less resistant to subtle attempts to manipulate and influence him.

This has gone on for generations, honourable senators, and I say that at this time we have to make a concentrated effort at all levels of government in order to relieve the people of northeast New Brunswick of the terrible frustrations which they are experiencing. The psychologists in their letter go on as follows:

Hand in hand with upgrading the economic plight of the North East is the responsibility of government—

And I suggest it must be government at every level.

—to provide avenues for social awareness. We recognize that existing communications networks such as Television Service is both inadequate and unreliable. Although the C.I.C. has improved considerably the school facilities in many locations, we would urge you to adopt a more far-sighted program regarding education. We remind you, as J. McV. Hunt has clearly shown, that the children of the poor first arrive at the public school with their various defects primarily because they have not had the opportunities required to master the linguistic and numeric skills basic to normal performance in intellectual tasks, or the motivational systems required for attention to teacher's speech, or the habits of conduct required for teacher control and approval. We press upon you the urgency of compensatory education in day care program, kindergarten programs and throughout the public school careers of these children. To ignore this situation has a "snow-balling" effect which becomes more and more difficult to adjust.

Then the psychologists make recommendations, and I quote again as follows:

Our knowledge of and experiences with the situation in the North East of New Brunswick leads us to make the following recommendations to you—

I pause here to point out that the president of the New Brunswick Psychological Association is a director of a mental health clinic in Bathurst, right in the heart of the area. I have talked to this gentleman, and he is genuinely concerned. He takes it so seriously, as do the other members of the association, that they are pleading—indeed, I might say that they are screaming—for action to assist, to upgrade, the people of the northeastern part of New Brunswick. Among the recommendations, there is the following:

● (1440)

That you take steps to prevent the occurrence of events over which persons in the North East have no control. Specifically in the reduction of unemployment, retraining and the need for relocation of workers.

When they talk about the "relocation of workers," they do mean relocation to the more industrialized centres of the province of New Brunswick, to the large urban areas. It can be quite understood that when you uproot these people, or when you uproot the father of a family, the consequences can be quite serious, because most of them have large families. They own their own homes, and they take great pride in them. So if they have to go away and spend, say, two weeks in the industrial centres of the province—for example, in the city of Saint John—they begin to lose their culture, and they begin to lose contact with their families, and unfortunately they tend to lose their language. In my view, as a confirmed Canadian who believes in the two cultures and the two languages of Canada, I am aghast sometimes when children come into my home, children of people who have been forced to migrate from northeastern New Brunswick, and say no when I ask them if they speak French. They say that their fathers and mothers speak French at home, but "we are shy about speaking French amongst ourselves in school or on the streets because we feel that people might laugh at us; we understand our parents and their language, but we answer them in English."

Honourable senators, if ever a culture should be fostered, nurtured and preserved, it is the culture and the language of the Acadian people, because we know what has been their history. We know of the way that they were exploited, and we know of the privations that they have suffered down through the generations. I feel it is a matter of national responsibility—I know it is provincial to some extent, but it is national in scope—to take steps to preserve this if we really believe in the two languages and the two cultures of the founding people of this nation.

They must not be uprooted. Efforts must be made to upgrade their environment. Their culture is a quaint one; it is different from what we normally call the French-Canadian culture. It is the Acadian culture, and in some respects you might say that they speak the Acadian language. I say that, honourable senators, because the Acadian people originated in Brittany in France, and they have preserved their expressions, idioms and language generally more so than have the other French Canadians. You will hear expressions among the people who speak pure Acadian that you will never hear in the province of Quebec. It is old-world French. They have customs that are not the same as those of other French Canadians. They have, as I have said before, their own history. They wish to preserve that history, and they want to continue to live in their own environment. So we, as a nation—and particularly those of us who are here in Ottawa, and the government—should make sure that they do.

There are many things that can be done in the northern part of the province. When the Prime Minister recently replied to the clergy of the diocese of Bathurst, he pointed out that the federal government was aware of and deeply concerned about the problems of regional disparity. He said that the federal government is waging its own war against regional disparities. He pointed out that we had gained some benefits in the northeastern section of New Brunswick. I am not from that section, honourable senators, but in speaking as I do I wish to acknowledge a great debt of gratitude, personal gratitude, to the Acadian people of my province.

The Prime Minister said that we have gained greatly from DREE, from ARDA and from FRED, and pointed out that negotiations were proceeding at the present time to reach a sub-agreement with the Province of New Brunswick in order to cooperate with them in upgrading the conditions which exist there, and improving them. He also said that the federal government has commenced negotiations with the province towards extending, beyond the close-off date, the development effort in New Brunswick, that public meetings will be held and consultations invited in order to try to develop a plan under this sub-agreement.

But there are all sorts of things that can be done, and I am going to concentrate for a moment on Gloucester county because I feel that it is the focal point of any effort to be made in improving conditions in this area—bearing in mind again that in some sections of this particular region unemployment runs to 50 per cent, and bearing in mind further that these people are not indolent. They are ambitious for their children, even though they continue to experience these terrible frustrations. They want their children to have opportunities of employment; they want them to have opportunities of gaining control of their own environment; and they want them, most of all, to be able to attain the level of their destiny.

Honourable senators, there are many constructive suggestions that I could make. One which comes up frequently in these briefs and representations to government at all levels is the development of an adequate road system through the early completion of Route 11, as we call it. Realizing that there has always been the question of which came first, the chicken or the egg, there is the question of what should come first in northeast New Brunswick. What comes first is the accelerated completion of the road known there as Route 11. It should be upgraded in such a way as to provide proper access to the Caraquet coast in order that they may, first of all, develop their tourist industry. The Province of New Brunswick intends to build an Acadian village which, as a matter of fact, is now under construction and development. That will be a great thing for tourism, and will attract people to learn about, and live as tourists among, the Acadian people of the northeastern part of our province. It may not be finished until 1977, but when it is completed I doubt whether there will be proper access roads to it. We have an Acadian museum in the village of Caraquet. This museum is most interesting, depicting as it does the history of the Acadian people in that area.

● (1450)

But what is the good of these things? I know that the minister of tourism is concerned, and that there is a lack of funds at the provincial level. We are all aware that it is a question of priority. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is advertising through the Community Improvement Association in New Brunswick to indicate again the seriousness of the situation in the northeast. In the body of the advertisement is a paragraph entitled "The New Approach", from which I will quote:

Both Canada and New Brunswick have agreed to work towards a new development agreement for Northeast New Brunswick.

[Senator Riley.]

The agreement will come under the umbrella provided by the General Development Agreement signed by Canada and the Province of New Brunswick. The principal objective of the General Development Agreement is to help close the gap in per capita incomes between New Brunswick and the national average. It also follows that income disparity must be reduced within the province.

We have a very happy situation presently in the Saint John area, where I live, but when we go from 2.7 per cent unemployment in Saint John to almost 50 per cent in Northeast New Brunswick, I am sure that honourable senators will agree with me that it is a devastating difference. The advertisement continues:

The basic objective of a Northeast agreement should be to accelerate development in Northeast New Brunswick to improve the well-being and standard of living of residents.

Since one of the most obvious indicators of disparity in the region is the unquestionably high level of unemployment, the goal becomes one of better utilization of all resources (physical and human) of the Northeast through a higher level of economic activity.

I say that the first thing to do is to give the highest priority to, and complete, such development in the province of New Brunswick. DREE is involved in this, and invites consultations and briefs from the public. I am reading from an advertisement entitled "Northeast New Brunswick," which appeared in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of March 25, 1976. It is a long advertisement, and would possibly be considered by some to be an expensive one. However, the invitation reads as follows:

If the economic gap which exists between Northeast New Brunswick and the province as a whole is to be closed, a continuing special effort is required. A part of that special effort is the proposed Northeast New Brunswick Development Sub-Agreement.

That is being negotiated now. The invitation continues:

Obviously, income and employment differences are significant parts of the problem but what are the appropriate solutions?

The people of the province of New Brunswick are being invited to offer suggestions, but this all takes time.

I served in the government of Senator Robichaud when he was Premier of New Brunswick. I held two portfolios, and saw what he was endeavouring to do and how he did it. I did not agree that the program of equal opportunity for the people of New Brunswick should be implemented so quickly. However, he had the courage and foresight to do it, and he did it immediately. He did it quickly, irrespective of the fact that there were deficiencies which had to be corrected later. Nevertheless, he said that the people of Nigadoo must have the same educational opportunities as the people of Saint John; that the people of St-Isidore and of the backlands in Kings County, which is adjacent to Saint John, should also have the same educational opportunities as the people of Saint John and Moncton.

This was a bold new approach, and I say that with respect to developing the northeastern section of New Brunswick we must concentrate first on Route 11. We must upgrade it so that people will move into the area, and tourists will visit. There are beautiful beaches, but not enough camping areas or trailer parks. There is nothing whatsoever beyond the Acadian village, the fishery school and the Acadian Museum, to attract tourists today, because they do not want to travel over lumpy roads. It is not only Route 11; there is a network of roads running through that whole area which must be upgraded. If special promotional efforts can be put into the tourist industry immediately, first by upgrading Route 11 to standards which will enable tourists to travel, we will then see a resurgence of interest on the part of the people from within and outside New Brunswick to visit the area. There are many beautiful sandy beaches there, and deep-sea fishing is available, together with many more inducements for tourists. This is something that can be done immediately, and it should be started immediately. The rebuilding and upgrading of Route 11, not patching it, should definitely be started this year. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, the Government of Canada has already sunk approximately $67 million into that road—with provincial participation, of course. The most important part of it is that which extends from Newcastle in Northumberland county around the Caraquet coast in Gloucester county. Until there are better roads, there will not be a very good acceleration in development. I believe that honourable senators will agree with me on that point.

● (1500)

I would urge, irrespective of this new study that was advertised on March 25 in the Telegraph-Journal by the Community Improvement Corporation of DREE, that a special effort be made immediately by the federal government to negotiate a settlement in respect of the construction of Route 11. If that is not done, I would not like to see—and neither would my colleagues from New Brunswick—a retarded development program that will continue until the year 2000. I therefore urge the federal government to take the initiative in respect to Route 11, and to advise the Province of New Brunswick that it is ready to make a greater contribution, provided the province participates as it should.

I am not criticizing the Government of New Brunswick, because it is beset by the problem of lack of money, and it recognizes the necessity of restraints. However, high priority is being given to multimillion dollar grants to industrial firms, for hydro and nuclear power plants, and so on. I do not know whether we in New Brunswick should have any dealings with nuclear power plants, but someone said the other day—I do not think it has been denied, although there was an attempt to deny it—that delays in the construction of the nuclear power plant at Lepreau on the south coast have cost the province something like $42 million. When I read that, I was not surprised that rates for electrical energy in New Brunswick had risen by 12 per cent. That is probably not within the ambit of the Anti-Inflation Board to probe, but the people of Northeast New Brunswick are affected when their rates for electrical energy are increased by 12 per cent.

We talk about making large grants available to industrial giants for their plant, equipment and operations. We should also consider the social and economic effects of a large grant to our road building program and to make the Caraquet coast of New Brunswick more accessible to the people of the province, and thereby give the people who are living there in poverty—there is no question but that conditions there, the unemployment and welfare, can properly be called conditions of poverty—the opportunity to hoist themselves up by their bootstraps. We should do that right away. If that can be done, then the problems posed by the letters of the priests of the Diocese of Bathurst and the New Brunswick Psychological Association can be partially met, and the development of the area will be accelerated.

On motion of Senator Robichaud, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, April 5, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, April 5, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Darling had been substituted for that of Mr. Dick and that the name of Mr. Paproski had been substituted for that of Mr. Darling on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region.

COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-92, to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Langlois: I move, seconded by Senator Carter, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday next, April 7, 1976.

Senator Flynn: We would have been prepared to give leave to proceed tonight. You don't know when to ask for leave.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Report of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce Act, Chapter I-11, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Anti-dumping Tribunal for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 32 of the Anti-dumping Act, Chapter A-15, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board for the crop year ended July 31, 1975, including its accounts and financial statement certified by the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 22 of the Livestock Feed Assistance Act, Chapter L-9, R.S.C., 1970.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 6, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Manning be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Everett on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Davey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, for the second reading of the Bill C-58, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act"—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I would ask that this item stand. I am prepared to yield to anyone else who wishes to speak. I intend to speak on this subject tomorrow night.

Senator Croll: We will wait for tomorrow night.

Hon. Eugene Forsey: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might make my twopennyworth contribution to this debate at this point, if I may have leave of the Leader of the Opposition?

Senator Flynn: Not only leave, but the blessing.

Senator Forsey: I didn't say leave of the Senate; I said leave of the Leader of the Opposition. My remarks will be very brief. The first thing I want to say is that I am in favour of the general principle of this bill. It removes a tax preference and privilege which I have never been able to understand and whose removal I think is long overdue.

I am in favour of its application both to periodicals and to broadcasting. My experience on the Board of Broadcast Governors has left me with a very small amount of sympathy for the trials and tribulations of private broadcasters generally and American private broadcasters in particular. Nor am I going to waste any sympathy on the advertising people, who I think are well able to look after themselves.

I am not at all worried either about the dreadful peril in which the Americans stand as a result of this, or the irritation which it may cause in their sensitive bosoms. I think this is a matter of purely domestic policy and I can't see any reason why the Americans need take it as a dark and deadly conspiracy against their interests, or something that is going to cause any substantial damage to the people of the United States. To some very small groups of people in that country perhaps, but those groups, again, are quite well able to look after themselves, and I simply brush aside that as of no importance whatsoever, disrespectful as that may seem to some of the eminent senators who have stated the contrary view.

There are just two things that worry me about this bill. One is its application to periodicals like MD of Canada, on which Senator Sullivan spoke the other night. I really can't see why the existing exemption which is allowed, if I remember the act correctly, to religious and scientific and similar periodicals should not continue. It seems to me there is a special case there for special treatment. I don't mean to dwell on that because I think the Honourable Senator Sullivan the other night made the case amply and with the unequalled authority which he possesses because of his professional distinction.

The other thing that worries me is this business of—what shall I call it—the expanding, the inflating, the growing, the rising, the escalating percentage which is required, apparently—has been required, at any rate—by the Department of National Revenue for Canadian content.

I dare say that when the Honourable Senator Davey makes his final speech in this debate, he may clear up both these points. I hope he will. Perhaps he will reproach me for not having read carefully enough the debates in the other house, and in committee there, which perhaps dwell on these subjects and might have satisfied me. I confess that I may have been delinquent in not doing so.

I searched Senator Davey's speech in this house, which I unfortunately missed hearing, with great care, and I couldn't find in that any explanation that satisfied me.

For that reason, and because the bill presents a number of features which I think need very careful consideration, and full explanation not only from the minister but from his officials, or perhaps from more than one minister and more than one set of officials, I am very glad that this bill is, as I understand, going to committee. I think it ought to go there, and I trust that it will get in committee the very careful examination which to my mind it deserves. It is possible also that by the time it comes out of committee the feeling that I have about it may be different from what it is now. Perhaps I shall discover that some of the arguments that have been made against it here will seem to me then more cogent than they seem so far.

• (2010)

That is all I want to say about this bill, honourable senators, and I think I can, for once, be congratulated on living up to my statement that I intended to be brief.

Senator Flynn: Before moving the adjournment of the debate, may I put a question to Senator Forsey? As joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, is he worried about the proposed discretion given to the Minister of National Revenue under Bill C-58?

Senator Forsey: I am always worried, honourable senators, about discretion given to ministers. It is something that needs to be watched very carefully. I recall—at least I think I recall—that some years ago, when another party was in power, this house jumped heavily on a bill from that particular government, which would have given an expanded discretion to the Minister of National Revenue. I think that particular bill died unwept, unhonoured and unsung.

Senator Flynn: That is a very good indication of what Senator Forsey may eventually do. I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 1, the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Michaud calling the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to make extensive remarks on this inquiry. I was impressed by a statement made just a moment ago by Senator Forsey—a statement which he made in a “Forsey-like” manner. He made a very valid point, and I, too, hope to make a very valid point in the few remarks I intend to make this evening.

At the outset of my remarks, I should like to congratulate Senator Riley on the contribution he made to this debate last week. Although an Irishman by descent, he proved himself to be great Canadian. He was raised in an area of New Brunswick which had a great many French, English and Irish. He retained his Irish heritage but accepted the French fact, for which I give him full marks. In that respect, I was most appreciative of the remarks he made in the Senate last week.

I should like to commend Senator Michaud for having introduced this inquiry.

[Translation]

I would like to convey my warmest congratulations to Senator Michaud for drawing the attention of the Senate to a subject that is close to everyone's heart in New Brunswick. It is an inquiry that seems very mild when considering what goes on in the world, according to the newspapers, but such is not the case because it has a sense. Further, in his presentation, he introduced all kinds of doctrines that could be of help to a given area of the province. I was very impressed. I hope he also impressed most of the honourable senators who are here tonight.

I also appreciate the remarks made by Senator Michel Fournier, a former minister in the provincial government of New Brunswick, who was greatly concerned about the development of the area and did everything he could to reach his objective. I shall come back to that later to speak about it at greater length. I always appreciate the judgment of a valuable man such as Senator Michel Fournier, who is not very loquacious but when he speaks what he says makes good sense and is to be considered. This is one of the messages that I would like to leave to the Senate at the present time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Robichaud: When Senator Michaud's words are said to apply to a very restricted situation in New Brunswick, perhaps their meaning could be broadened a little bit to describe the economic situation of the entire province of New Brunswick.

I am here, as you are here honourable colleagues, to represent your community, your voters—not your voters right now, but those whom you represent, and I am conscious that those I represent are first of all from Madawaska, Restigouche, Gloucester, Northumberland, Kent and Westmoreland. They are not all offspring of my area, but they are the Acadian people, the French-speaking population of New Brunswick, and that fact has persisted for the past 200 years. I cannot change that. Nor can my colleagues here. For 200 years now, the situation has been the same. Regardless of the economic level, or what they have in the area, they cannot make ends meet. That is not my fault. Nor is it anyone's fault here. But it is someone's fault. It cannot be said, in 1976, that quite an important area, a good part of the country should be underprivileged because of outside economic circumstances over which we have absolutely no control. I will not accept that. I have said it several times. In fact, I have said it so often that I may have said it too often. Still, I say it again. In northeastern New Brunswick, going down, there are natural resources that should be developed, both by the provincial and the federal governments. The federal government has done all it could. I shall come back to that later on. But, I am afraid that at some point in time the provincial government may have failed. I do not have to tell you I have done my utmost for the economic cause, not only of my province but of all the Maritime provinces, the Atlantic provinces, the northeastern area. And I shall say it again if anyone dares put questions to me.

● (2020)

You hear from every quarter today that the Maritime provinces suffer from an economic inferiority complex, et cetera. When it comes to Quebec, one thinks: It is their fault; let them take care of themselves. And when it comes to Ontario, again we say: they can take care of themselves.

[Senator Robichaud.]

I now live in Ontario. I am very concerned about the economic problem of the Maritime provinces, the Atlantic provinces, and specially that of my own province of New Brunswick.

We had the mines, and Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester) gave some explanations about this. You know what is happening in the economic complex of New Brunswick when we have—I am not sure if I described correctly the geographic situation—inside a whole English-speaking complex. We have outside, along Chaleur Bay and Northumberland Strait, an Acadian complex which has been fighting for its own identity for 200 years, as Senator Riley told us last week. We have been trying for two hundred years to gain our own identity, to build our economy so that we can grow and keep our people at home. But we did not succeed in spite of what Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester) said last week to the effect that the northeastern reaches of the province have mineral deposits unique in North America. But what happens when we have mineral deposits? We have the situation that I found when I was premier. I do not mention these facts just for the sake of it; I only wish to recall what happened.

Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester), who was a minister and a member of my government, had been telling me for years: "There are in my riding thousands and thousands of tons of minerals that could be developed immediately but they do not want to do it." I was a young premier and I did not know what to do, but I followed his advice and the advice of some others. I asked those companies to develop the mines in the area, something which was necessary at the time. There were, I think, 253 million tons. I do not have the exact figure. But it was enormous. It was a foreign and not a Canadian corporation that controlled the mines. I immediately asked them to surrender their control to Canadians. I asked them to surrender it to Canadians, otherwise they would lose all their rights. We started in the northeast area, which comes under the inquiry proposed by Senator Michaud. I asked them immediately to develop the mines or else they would disappear. This is not separatism. I did not want to get separated from the rest of Canada. I wished to stay within Canada but I wanted our resources to be developed immediately for the benefit of all Acadians, of our people living in the area. Right away the foreign corporation said: "Well, we are going to surrender our rights." After all sorts of complications—there were many problems during the development—a big refinery was built; a mine was built at a cost of $210 million. The province and the northeast area benefited from it, but do you know what happened during the whole process? Those who took over from the company came to see me one day and asked if I would agree to relocate the refinery and instead of building it in Gloucester county where it was, to build it in Saint John in the south where, as it was said last week, there was an unemployment rate of 2.9 per cent. Furthermore, it was said that in northeastern New Brunswick there was an unemployment rate of about 50 per cent. Fifty per cent may be an exaggeration but this is what newspapers say. They wanted to build the refinery at a cost of $210 million, which is now producing in Belledune in New Brunswick, in Gloucester county, They wanted to build it in Saint John.

Do you want to know what I told them? I am not afraid to say it or to put it on the record in the Senate or anywhere else. So what did I tell those who approached me to have this refinery built in Saint John? I told them in English:

● (2030)

[English]

"Yes, you want to have it built in Saint John instead of between Restigouche and Gloucester County where it belongs, where the raw material is. You want it to be built there. I will tell you one thing."

[Translation]

That was a spontaneous reaction. I told them—and I did not say this very often—we had at that time a multiple county system. I told them—

[English]

We have three members in Restigouche County. If the smelter is going to be built in Saint John, the three of them are going to resign, and incidentally—actually accidentally, if you want to put it that way—they were Liberals; they were supporters of mine. And the next county was Gloucester. There were five members there and I said, "In Gloucester County I have five members and they are going to resign." Then in Northumberland there were four members at that time, and I said, "Four members are going to resign." I said, "My wife comes from that area and she is going to divorce me. Now, do you still want to build the smelter in Saint John?" They replied, "Of course not."

That was my answer, and I wanted to have it on the record because it is so accurate. You know what is happening in this area? There are resources there, but they wanted to develop them elsewhere. They said, "We want to create some employment elsewhere."

I am certainly not a nationalist. I never will be, because I believe in equal opportunity. I believe in equal opportunity in the development of our natural resources. I believe in equal opportunity in education and in all the fields that we are endeavouring to work in and to work into.

[Translation]

It may be humiliating for me to have to say that I am from a region which has to arrive—

[English]

I am sorry, Senator Smith, I did not understand you, but I would like to hear what you have to say.

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I was speaking to my friend about northeastern New Brunswick. He does not know as much about it as I do.

Senator Robichaud: If I have not been successful in describing it accurately, perhaps I can continue to try to do so because I have lived there ten years of my life, and I have known and I still know what they have to go through, despite the fact that they have some of the greatest natural resource industries that are found anywhere in Canada, such as mining, forestry, agriculture and, above all, fisheries. Why then is it that that area is 200 years behind the times economically? Don't ask me to answer that.

[Translation]

Do not ask me to give the answer because I do not have it. I have tried myself—there have been many economic studies on the area to find a solution to this situation. It is difficult to find it. You cannot say that it is the fault of the people of the area, because all those who leave the area and go outside become successful in their respective fields. Therefore, why could they not be successful in the environment in which they have lived, since they become successful if they go to Montreal or elsewhere? Moreover, in Montreal you meet people from the northeastern area that Senator Michaud has described; you see thousands of such people who have become successful. Why could they not stay where they came from, when there is well organized fishing, when there is a well organized forestry, when there is a well organized agriculture, when there are well organized mines? It is their region. It belongs to them and to nobody else. Why could the governments not get together to allow these people to enjoy their daily life, to enjoy a good daily life like everyone else in economically developed countries?

Maybe I could talk about a period which was much sadder for the people and which Senator Riley mentioned last week, a period when many other people suffered—the period which preceded the equal opportunity program in New Brunswick. It would take a long time to explain the equal opportunity program in New Brunswick, but it is simply this, and I would like to say a few words in English to explain it.

● (2040)

[English]

In those days it was Canada's policy to follow the principles of the United Nations, the Marshall Plan, the Colombo Plan and CIDA. Then the program of equalization payments was instituted in Canada, under which the less-favoured provinces were to be assisted more by those provinces possessing most of our natural resources, thus providing equal opportunities throughout the country. So, we followed these plans on the international and national levels, and New Brunswick did so on a provincial level because it desired that every section in the province should have equal opportunities in the fields of education and social services. In my opinion, we did this in a very good fashion—better, actually, than it was done at the international level and, perhaps, better than it was done at the national level. We asked the royal commission to study all these problems, which they did in a very competent manner.

[Translation]

They produced the social equality program, and as a former premier and present senator I regret the gradual destruction of that program which tended to be copied by every Canadian province and a number of American states. I regret the intention to destroy it in New Brunswick for partisan reasons. There is in my view a gradual erosion, a kind of conspiracy of silence to ruin the basic principles of a program that perhaps should be introduced in every Canadian province, with the cooperation of the Canadian government. A basic principle is lost when one says that, after the provincial government absorbs the total cost of education, health, administration of justice and social services, these being the four basic services, the taxpayer was asked to pay only $1.50 per $100 evaluation at market value of their property. This was reasonable. It was a reasonable basis for taxation. And now in New Brunswick they say it is too much. This is going to be reduced over a three- or four-year period. One political party says three years, the other says four years. I don't know which says what. This is destroying the foundation of something that should be basic to every provincial government. I am convinced of it. But what can one do? I simply suggest that the wilful erosion of the equal opportunity program in New Brunswick will destroy what we had in mind, what Senator Michaud had in mind, what Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester) had in mind, what Senator Riley supported. It is going to be gradually destroyed.

[English]

Since the creation of all the organizations, it was easy to speak of these things. I fully realize that I may have spoken too long this evening, but I hope to discuss it even further at some future time. In concluding my remarks I would simply like to point out that throughout the years we have said that we would start to solve the problem, but we have never really made a good start. When we built that smelter, we thought it was a good start. It gave employment to perhaps 1,000 people. It was a good start, of course, but what is needed at the moment is the cooperation of the provincial government. I am not trying to be critical. I am being realistic. The federal government is offering all sorts of money, despite the inflation program, to help that area. I am simply asking the provincial government to respond in the way it should by paying a trivial percentage, so that it can get the federal moneys that are required to finish Route 11, which is essential if we want to develop that whole area. That is the area we are concerned with—from Chatham up to Neguac, where my wife comes from, to Caraquet, Tracadie, Shippegan, Bathurst and Campbellton.

● (2050)

I have been the Premier of the Province of New Brunswick, and I know how tough it is to assign certain amounts of money to certain areas. I wish to say to the Senate today that I made this commitment long before coming here tonight. We want the provincial government to respond. That should have been done in 1971. We are now in 1976. It should be done this year, and I will do my darndest to make sure that it is done.

I come to my final point. Senator Croll will have to wait a few more minutes; I have waited for him for many minutes.

[Translation]

Some people feel that the economic situation in that area is deplorable, while others say it is disastrous and yet others feel it is improving. Notwithstanding all that, it is unbelievable to see the number of artists, musicians and singers who came from among those people. It seems that when you go to those places you feel at home. You can visit any city, any home, and you can sing songs which belong to us, French songs particularly. And because of this atmosphere, we have developed our own talents. If I were to recall the past, I could mention Anna Malenfant, who has an international reputation; Arthur LeBlanc, who has also gained international recognition; Marguerite and Germaine LeBlanc, two sisters who won every kind of prize throughout Canada; Gloria Richard, who won also many prizes. They have made it on the national and international scene. I am sure that those who are music lovers know Denis Losier, and Isabelle Roy, and Edith Butler, who goes everywhere. Those are people who were born, lived and grew up there. Also, Donat Lacroix, Roland Richard from Rogersville, Roseline Blanchard, Calixte Duguay, Mathieu Duguay, Jean-Guy Brault, who is a regular trumpet player at the National Art Centre here in Ottawa; Rose-Marie Landry and many others. There are so many artists in other fields that I could name such as—

[Senator Robichaud.]

Senator Langlois: Literature.

Senator Robichaud: Antonine Maillet, in literature. She is very popular right now. She was born and raised there. Incidentally, she is Senator Michaud's sister-in-law.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Robichaud: And there are many others who succeeded in spite of their financial difficulties. They did not go looking for financial difficulties but they must live with them. In spite of all that they are doing well, but they want, they now demand—they were docile in the past—firm cooperation from the federal government. They get it, but now they also expect support from the provincial government and they are hopeful.

Senator Molgat: If no other senator wants to speak tonight, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

[English]

FREE TRADE

AN ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION FOR CANADA—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Langlois: May I ask a question of Senator Grosart? If he does not intend to speak to this item before the Easter recess, would he mind postponing the debate until after the recess?

Senator Grosart: In reply to the Deputy Leader of the Government, I point out that on two occasions I have explained the reason why I have stood the item. It is because the substance of the motion is before one of the committees of the Senate, and I have been waiting to hear the evidence on it. If there is any concern, I would be very glad to yield to any other senator who wishes to speak on this subject of free trade—or, if it is causing any problem, to drop the subject entirely.

Senator Langlois: It was only a suggestion.

Senator Grosart: It is my intention, as soon as the evidence comes before the committee of which I have spoken, to speak immediately. In the meantime, I should like this order to stand. If it is causing any problem, I shall be very glad to yield or to accept the decision of Her Honour that the matter has been disposed of.

Senator Langlois: Thank you.

Order stands.

LABOUR

THE WORKING POOR—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the state of the working poor in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the inquiry standing in my name is to the effect that I will call the attention of the Senate to the state of the working poor in Canada. I intend to speak about workers and those drawing minimum wages, and to relate that to the minimum wage, to welfare, to the poverty line, to union wages and to fringe benefits.

● (2100)

I should like to start with the work ethic which, in effect, says that if one works hard, one is justly rewarded. There is a feeling—and, in my view, it is justified—that those who work hard and live by the rules do not always get a fair break. That is the theme on which I shall speak this evening. With your indulgence, it is my intention to take an in-depth look at the working poor—who they are, where they are, how they got there and how we can get them out of there.

As to who they are, I would say that in the main they are the alumni of our educational system of no school and no skill. They are the hotel workers, laundry workers, those who work partly for gratuities, hospital workers, service workers, clerks, stenographers, sales people, domestics, those who work in shops, piece workers who work at home, and so forth. They number about a million in this country, all of whom work full time, part time, any time they can, at or below the minimum wage. The reason they work for the minimum wage is not that they do not do good work, or necessary work, but because they lack a wallop. The labour force of this country is about 30 per cent organized.

I have sent honourable senators copies of certain statistics I intend to refer to during the course of my remarks this evening. The number of people employed in Canada as of the last day of February was about 9,178,000; it is usually about 9.25 million. By breaking that total down province by province, we find that Newfoundland has 140,000 fully employed; Prince Edward Island, 40,000; Nova Scotia, 286,000; New Brunswick, 215,000; Quebec 2,380,000; Ontario, 3,575,000; Manitoba, 400,000; Saskatchewan, 361,000; Alberta, 789,000; and British Columbia, 994,000. All of these figures, by the way, come from Statistics Canada.

Eight to 10 per cent of the working poor are to be found in the province of Ontario; 10 to 15 per cent in the province of Quebec; 10 to 12 per cent in the West; 15 to 20 per cent in the three Maritime provinces, and 25 per cent in Newfoundland.

Originally, or course, the introduction of minimum wage standards had a useful purpose, that being to provide a uniform rate across the country so that firms located in high-cost areas could be competitive.

Unemployment among those between the ages of 14 and 19, the least skilled and experienced group in the labour force, is double the national average. It is not a higher minimum wage that creates unemployment amongst teenagers, or the fact that they are seeking jobs in marginal industries, but the lack of marketable skills.

The minimum wage was designed to protect workers with little bargaining power, to eliminate poverty, to provide all workers a living wage and to protect low wage earners from exploitation. The preamble of the minimum wage legislation of Manitoba reads, "To take into account the cost to the employee of purchasing the necessities of life and health." The preamble of the minimum wage legislation of Quebec states, "To take into consideration competition from outside countries, other provinces, and economic conditions peculiar to various regions of the province."

To date, minimum wage standards have done nothing to eliminate poverty; rather, they perpetuate it. Moreover, minimum wage standards are not enforced. The people generally seem to know little about minimum wage standards or, indeed, pay any attention to them. In that respect, I should like to quote from the Globe and Mail of December 5, 1974, as follows:

Labour Minister John MacBeth—

Mr. MacBeth is the Ontario Minister of Labour.

—admitted (Monday) that a provincial arbitration board had awarded some workers of the Bobier Convalescent Home in Dunton (Ontario), wages lower than the minimum wage.

That is an arbitration board award!

A minimum wage for female workers was introduced in Alberta in 1914. A minimum wage standard for men in Newfoundland was introduced in 1950; in Prince Edward Island in 1960; in Nova Scotia, 1945; in New Brunswick, 1945; in Quebec, 1940; in Ontario, 1937; in Manitoba, 1933; in Saskatchewan, 1940; in Alberta, 1936; and in British Columbia, 1925. The 1935 Minimum Wages Act of the Dominion of Canada was declared ultra vires, and the federal government enacted the present Canada Labour (Standards) Code in 1965.

I well remember the passage of the Ontario act in 1937. We had high hopes for it at that time. However, the years have diminished and eroded the purposes for which that act, which we then hailed as bringing on a new day, was passed. It was forward looking in its day. Despite the fact that minimum wage standards were raised then and subsequently, studies indicate that such increases had no effect on lessening unemployment. Studies in the United States and Canada have indicated that minimum wage standards do not bring about employment. Of course, the purpose, as I indicated, was to protect the worker from poverty and to keep him off welfare. Also, there was to be a floor.

● (2110)

Today in Canada there is no minimum living wage, which, as I will indicate a little later, is due to the fact that no employee with a normal family and being paid the minimum wage can earn enough money to live and meet the necessities of life. The income of the number of women in the work force has effectively helped to keep the basic wage low, while at the very same time boosting family incomes.

We are now looking at the facts and considering the minimum wage almost forty years later, and what do we find? We find that the minimum has become the maximum, and we find that the floor has become the cellar. Instead of alleviating poverty, it has perpetuated it. The poor are working for less than others get on welfare. What we must do is rescue them from the relief.

At the present time Alberta is—and has been for a considerable length of time—giving some help to the working poor. Ontario has given some help. However, most of it is given through welfare. These people who are the working poor will not accept it. The City of Toronto had to advertise. I saw an advertisement in the Toronto Star, giving a telephone number and asking people to apply. They would not apply because they had to fill out all the welfare forms. They had to make an application, and they had to appear to be on welfare. The result is they are not getting any help at the present time and, in turn, this is resulting in something which we had not foreseen.

Once upon a time a wife had an opportunity to either work or stay at home and raise a family. Today that is clearly not within her own capacity to decide. The wife goes out to work, and the children are put in day care centres. The older children go out to work. The result is that the family is working for minimum wages and sending the children out to work for minimum wages, and they perpetuate the situation. We have to do something to break that cycle. Moreover, employers assume that today's married worker has a working spouse and receives family allowance payments to help support the children.

I said earlier, I would reconcile the minimum wage with welfare and with the poverty line. In order to bring the complete picture home, I would indicate that the number of people at the poverty line in Canada at the present time is about what it was when the Special Committee on Poverty made its original report in 1971. That report, entitled Poverty in Canada, indicated that at that time 23 per cent of the people were at or below the poverty line, and the Canadian Council on Social Development said that 27 per cent of the people were at that level.

Senator Bourget: Are those working people, or people in general?

Senator Croll: Working people; nothing to do with welfare at all. However, they may find themselves there.

Of those at the poverty line, 40 per cent are people with children under 16 years of age; 20 per cent are 65 years of age and over; 20 per cent are heads of one-parent families; and the remaining group of 20 per cent are poor despite the fact they work full time the year round. That is the cause rather than the solution of their plight.

I have here the poverty line for 1975 which I would ask leave to place on the record, to appear as part of my speech.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Croll]

Senator Croll: There is no official poverty line in Canada. These are basically the four poverty lines arbitrarily defined by four independent organizations. The first independent organization, you will see, is Statistics Canada, and its poverty line was based on the 1961 knowledge of Canadian consumer spending patterns. It said that a family essentially lives in poverty if it spends 70 per cent or more of its income on food, shelter and clothing. That was the poverty line used by the Economic Council in its Fifth Annual Review, published in 1968. Statistics Canada revised the poverty line developed in 1973, incorporating more recent knowledge of Canadian consumer spending habits. Essentially a family lives in poverty if it spends 60 per cent or more of its income on basic essentials. This poverty line also takes into account the fact that it generally costs more to live in large urban areas than in rural areas.

The Senate committee's poverty line was based on the average Canadian family income, adjusted for income tax paid, as well as for changes in family size, and it indicated that a family is poor if its income is 57 per cent or less of the average Canadian family income. According to the Canadian Council on Social Development poverty line, which is based on the average Canadian family income adjusted for families, a family is poor if its income is less than 50 per cent of the national average.

● (2120)

For all intents and purposes the Statistics Canada-Economic Council poverty line is obsolete. First, it makes no allowance for family members beyond the fifth. Secondly, the 70 per cent criterion for basic necessities is no longer an accurate picture of Canadian life, because the average family income in Canada has increased whereas the proportion for food, clothing and shelter has fallen. The more recent spending surveys show that the average family spends closer to 60 per cent of its income on essentials.

Honourable senators, I have here a list of the general minimum wage rates for experienced adult workers, legislated as of December 31, 1974. I obtained this information from the research branch of the Department of Labour, and I have extended it to show the number of hours worked in each province in Canada, the rate per hour, the rate per week, the rate for a 40-hour week, and the rate for a 44-hour week. May I have leave to include this table as part of my remarks this evening?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Rowe: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Did I understand him to say that the absolute number who are at the poverty line today is the same as the absolute number who were at the poverty line at the time his committee made its report some years ago, or did he mean that the percentage is the same today as it was then? I ask that because he did mention the figure of 27 per cent, and, of course, there would be quite a large difference. If the absolute numbers are relatively the same, then there has been a tremendous improvement, whereas if the percentage is the same, the situation has remained relatively static. Can he clarify that for me?

Senator Croll: Actually, senator, I was dealing with percentages, and I indicated that the percentage was just about the same as it was at the time the report was brought in. But there has been some improvement.

Senator Rowe: Thank you.

Senator Croll: There has always been an historical relationship between minimum wages and welfare. The minimum wage was to be higher than welfare, and for a long time it remained so. In trying to understand these problems in Canada we work on the basis of what is considered a normal Canadian family, namely, one consisting of a father, mother and two children. Using that as the base, in Ontario at the present time a family receiving the minimum wage, paying income tax, unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan, car fare and health insurance, has a take-home pay of $403 per month. A similar family on welfare in Ontario, being free of all those various charges, and having the extra paid for it, would receive $428 per month, which is about $25 more per month. In other words, the man who works regularly every day makes less money than it would be possible for him to receive if he were on welfare.

As I believe I indicated originally, there are approximately three million unionized workers in this country. For the most part these are people who have belonged to unions for some time, and they are not thinking in terms of working-class solidarity so much as simply contributing dues in order, as they believe, to have the unions negotiate better wage deals for them collectively. They hope to have better bargains with their employers than would otherwise be possible individually. By and large, they have proved themselves to be right in that supposition. Even in today's circumstances, under the present anti-inflation provisions, union workers are more likely to do better than non-union workers.

Let me give you an illustration of the type of situation which often develops. Let us consider a man living in a motor city—it could be a steel town, or some other industrial city—who is without any apparent skills and has had no particular schooling. He becomes employed in an automobile factory doing hard, boring, tedious work. For that work he receives, at the present time, $5.43 an hour plus $1.10 cost-of-living bonus for a total of $6.53 an hour. In addition, he receives a pension by means of which, if he has put in 30 years, he will receive $625 a month; and that will rise to $700 a month in 1978. If he becomes unemployed he can go on supplementary assistance for almost 95 per cent of his last salary, and if he has enough seniority this could be for 52 weeks. If you calculate that out in its totality, you will see that he is receiving about $9 per hour. That is, while $6.50 an hour would be his basic pay, he would receive another $2.50 an hour in fringe benefits. These figures would be higher in the automotive industry than perhaps in other industries.

According to the table of general minimum wage rates to which I referred a moment ago, the highest provincial minimum wage rate is found in British Columbia. It is $3 per hour, or $6,240 per year for a 40-hour week. Compared to that, the minimum wage rate in Prince Edward Island is $2.50 per hour, or $5,200 per year, which is considerably less.

If you look at the poverty line for a family of four you will see that it is $1,000 less than any of the poverty lines that are in vogue at the present time. Even if they get $3.50 an hour, as they are now permitted to do, this will only amount to $7,200 per year, as opposed to the poverty line laid down by Metropolitan Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal, which I think you will find is nearly $9,200.

● (2130)

What is really needed, therefore, is at least $4 an hour, which, in my view, is not in the books. As a matter of fact, it is not tenable. The kind of industries which pay the minimum wage are marginal, inefficient, under-financed, require only a low level of skill, are more often than not to be found in small towns, and have only a low rate of production. They could not possibly pay such a figure. You will usually find that the man who gets $9 an hour is not more skilled than the man who gets $3 an hour. He may be a little luckier, and he has the muscle and strength to help himself.

We are now actively discussing a supplementary income for the poor to give them an incentive to work in low-paying jobs without denying the worker's family its basic needs. Ontario, Alberta, British Columbia and Quebec are already providing incomes for the aged, the disabled, and mothers with dependent children. The federal government has been providing supplementary incomes for the aged for some time. Under our old age security arrangements there is a supplementary allowance in this area that has been working well for some years. This is something we pay because there is a need for it.

We do not have to look out for the princes of labour—they will look after themselves. I am talking about the paupers of labour, those who do not have the same advantages.

After the war the workers in this country demanded social wages on top of whatever wages were then in effect. The social wages grew from time to time, and now they are almost 20 to 25 per cent of the wages paid organized workers. Those in receipt of minimum wages, however, get none of this at all, and so we are faced with a difficult and painful situation. How much more can we ask of these people who believe in the work ethic and genuinely put it into practice, when at the best minimum wage being paid they cannot possibly rise above the poverty line?

Some time ago, when speaking in this house, I suggested that something be done about fringe benefits. Not a great deal has been done about it, and we must realize that no head of a Canadian family of four, working at the highest minimum wage paid in this country, can support his family in accordance with reasonable standards. To meet this standard his wife or children must also work. The family needs one and a half incomes in order to stay ahead of the game, or even "even."

To suggest that the wages of such people be supplemented is not to suggest anything new. We are doing it already, as I said, in the form of old age security. Britain does this, as do the Germans. They also have fringe benefits for the working poor. It is not a matter of throwing problem dollars at problems but, rather, investing dollars in people with problems. These people have no special lobbyists. They have no one working for them in Ottawa, except us. They have few special pleaders and no special talent for expressing themselves. Something must be said for them. They know they are losers, and they fear that their children will be losers.

The minimum wage, for all practical purposes, has outlived its usefulness, but until we have something to substitute for it we have to hold on to it.

We pay little attention to these million people; as a matter of fact, we ignore them. It is time that the situation was brought to the attention of the majority of Canadians. A majority has no right to be wrong, and I repeat that something has to be done for people who have to live on the minimum wage, in order to make sure that they continue working. They have already lost out to the welfare departments; they have already lost out to people who get fringe benefits. How much longer can we expect them to go on?

Those of you who have a document on your desks today from the Department of National Health and Welfare dealing with guaranteed income will see that three alternatives are suggested. One is a guaranteed income, another is a wage supplement, and the third is a negative income tax. The labels may be different, but the effect will be the same. We should not let the labels fool us at all.

It is my view that these people are ahead of the politicians. They have a more friendly view than we have of the basic guaranteed income, which is designed to establish a floor for a family income. The time is long past for us to take some effective action.

The course that is open to us is one of supplementing, through a guaranteed income, the wages of the people on minimum income so that they will know exactly where they stand. As a consequence, they will continue to work and produce, and it will no longer be a case of the people who are not producing receiving more than those who are.

● (2140)

Honourable senators, we owe it to these people to take some action as quickly as possible, and my purpose tonight is to bring this to your attention. I realize that the economic climate is bad at the present time but, even if it means an uphill struggle at this particular time, something has to be done. I suggest that some of us participate in this debate for the purpose of sending and emphasizing the message to the Canadian people and to other parliamentarians that this is a problem which is long overdue for attention.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 6, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE WILLIAM A. BOUCHER
THE HONOURABLE HENRY D. HICKS

FELICITATIONS ON RETURN TO CHAMBER

[Translation]

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, allow me to point out the return of our colleague Senator Boucher who is back this evening after a lengthy illness.

We are pleased to see him back among us aglow with health and we hope he will remain so for several years to come.

Senator Boucher: Thank you very much, Senator Langlois, for your kind words.

[English]

Senator Langlois: I am also very pleased to welcome Senator Hicks back to the chamber. I am sure all honourable senators are glad to see him in such splendid health.

Senator Hicks: That is very gracious of you. I thank you very much indeed for your sentiments.

Senator Flynn: Speaking of health, would the deputy leader report on the state of health of the Leader of the Government?

Senator Langlois: I am very pleased to report that the Leader of the Government is on his way back to Ottawa. He will arrive late this evening and will be with us tomorrow.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Davey for second reading of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have been challenged both by Senator McElman and Senator Perreault—I regret that the latter is not here tonight because I have a few words to say about his speech—to participate in the debate on this controversial piece of legislation. I have never backed away from such challenges in the past, though in some instances it might have been more prudent of me to do so, and I am not about to do so tonight.

Senator McElman, when he spoke in this debate, reminded us all of a previous debate on the same subject. It took place in 1965 over Bill C-118. Bill C-118 dealt, in part, with advertising space in issues of non-Canadian newspapers or periodicals and the conditions under which the cost of such advertising could not be a deductible item of expense when the taxpayer came to reckon his income taxes for that year.

But the debate on that part of Bill C-118 in 1965 which dealt with periodicals centered mostly on subsection 2 of the new section 12A which was being added to the existing act. It provided an exemption which made the cost of advertising deductible even though the advertisement appeared in an issue of one of the two most important, then so-called, non-Canadian newspapers or periodicals—Time and Reader's Digest. The idea, it became obvious, was to permit Canadian advertisers to consider advertisements placed in the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest as tax deductible.

The Liberal government of the day was of the opinion that Time and Reader's Digest should, for the tax purposes of those Canadian firms who used them as an advertising vehicle, be considered Canadian magazines. We in the Opposition were of a contrary opinion; we felt that Time and Reader's Digest should lose their special status.

Today, Senator McElman points to the position we took eleven years ago and suggests we should be very happy with Bill C-58. That is, to say the least, tenuous and simplistic reasoning.

What Senator McElman has overlooked in his eagerness to point to as much inconsistency in the Opposition as exists in the government is the matter of context. The position I took in 1965 must be placed in the proper context. As to the purpose of this type of legislation, I said in 1965—and I am reading from page 291 of the Debates of the Senate of the 1965 session:

We all agree that Canadian periodicals play a fundamental part with regard to the creation, if not the preservation, of a truly Canadian spirit.

There is something subtle there which I hope has not escaped Senator McElman.

Of course, competition from American periodicals is for our own periodicals a very serious threat of extinction.

With regard to the desirability of affording protection to Canadian periodicals, I should say that I have not changed my mind; it's important that we provide it. I am not, however, completely convinced that competition from American magazines is any more serious today than it was in 1965. In any case, if a threat does exist, it will certainly not be diminished by the type of legislation before us now. If protectionism is the course we wish to follow, then the logical step would be to bring in legislation barring the entry into Canada of all American and other non-Canadian periodicals. But none of those who have defended this bill has suggested we go that far nor am I now suggesting that we do so.

The threat to our national identity and cultural welfare surely does not come from the presence in Canada of Time and Reader's Digest alone. If such a threat exists, it must be seen as coming from the presence in Canada of a multiplicity of non-Canadian publications. And these periodicals have continued and will continue to enter Canada whether we pass Bill C-58 or not. In other words, if what we seek is protection for our national identity and cultural purity, then, as I will try to indicate, this bill is useless. So, why bother with it?

The method proposed in 1965 to help Canadian periodicals was to deny Canadian firms a tax deduction for moneys spent on advertisements in American magazines, if those advertisements were directed primarily at a market in Canada. On that particular quasi-solution to the problem, I had this to say at the time—and I am reading again from Hansard for the 1965 session, at page 291:

This way we assume—

And I underline "assume".

—that advertising will be channelled towards Canadian periodicals. I am not sure—

And I underline "I am not sure".

—that this will be definitely the result, but the method which is suggested here is certainly worth a try.

It should be obvious to the clear-thinking objective reader that I was not endorsing without reservation the solution proposed at the time. And now, in retrospect, I would say I was right not to do so. Essentially, my belief was that if you want to go that way, go all the way. And I now suggest to you, honourable senators, that there is precious little evidence that this was the best method to use to achieve the goal the government of the day had in mind.

● (2010)

It is well to remember also, as we seek to compare the attitude one had in dealing with the 1965 bill with that which he has in regard to Bill C-58, that in the 1965 bill the provision dealing with the "magazine tax," as it was then referred to by Senator Hayden, was only one of several in that bill to amend the Income Tax Act. Bill C-58, on the other hand, deals exclusively with the matter of tax exemption for Canadian firms advertising in American magazines or on American radio or TV if the intended market is in Canada. So, the focus of the present bill is different from that of the 1965 bill. Furthermore, close to 11 years have elapsed since Bill C-118 and, if I, like Senator McElman, may be permitted a pun, we have had "time" to "digest" not only the problem but the value of the solution proposed at the time. The problem, if one really existed, remains the same. So, the solution must then be deemed to have been ineffectual.

Another difference between this and the 1965 bill is the fact, as I said a while ago, that the present bill deals not only with periodicals but also with broadcasting, which is something totally different. With broadcasting, we are into an area of much greater sensitivity involving the continued harmonious relationship we enjoy with our neighbours to the south. There has been very little criticism in the United States over our forcing Time Canada out of business. But such has not been the case with regard to what is viewed in the United States as our attempts to interfere with the freedom to broadcast. Strong protestations have been made in Congress, and extensive discussions have taken place between the CRTC and the American FCC. The broadcasting stations on both sides of the border which would be affected by the provisions of this bill are not all in the same situation. Yet, the bill makes no distinction between them. It is quite obvious that station KVOS in Bellingham, Washington, which is the property of a Canadian company, does not fit into the same category as do the Buffalo area stations.

So, to those on the other side who would criticize me for taking a different position now from what I took 11 years ago, I would say that people in glass houses should not throw stones. The government side also has come around 180 degrees. They gave Time and Reader's Digest an exemption in 1965, and now they want to remove it. I maintain there was no evidence to justify giving them an exemption in 1965; whereas now there is evidence that the removal of the exemption would accomplish nothing. The government was wrong in 1965 and it is wrong again now. That does not surprise me, and it will not surprise very many other thinking Canadians. I only mention this to point out how unwarranted was Senator McElman's implied criticism of my position.

With regard to periodicals, this bill has one major fault which has been mentioned by most of those who have opposed the bill in this debate. Very simply, it gives far too much discretionary power to the Minister of National Revenue—power to decide the percentage of Canadian ownership required and the percentage of Canadian content required before a periodical published in Canada can be considered "Canadian" for income tax purposes. We have proof that this sort of discretionary power is dangerous. Time magazine was uncompromisingly forced out of the country—a sort of literary exorcism. Reader's Digest, on the other hand, was permitted to stay.

Reader's Digest provided many jobs in Quebec and, as Senator Sullivan pointed out last week, the people of Quebec, liking the French language edition of Reader's Digest, did not want to lose it. So the standards with regard to ownership and content were lowered to accommodate Reader's Digest. But they could not be lowered any further.

That sort of double standard, that sort of adjusting of the rules to favour those whom you want to see win, is dangerous. The way this government has spared Reader's Digest but has put the screws to Time, because there was something to lose politically by being equally harsh with Reader's Digest, leads me to say that the government is no more sincere now than it was in 1965.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: The government lacks the courage of its convictions, or else it has realized that what it is doing here is basically useless but it feels it must do something to appease the nationalists and so it has decided to sacrifice one—Time.

Like Bill C-118 in 1965, Bill C-58 affords me once again the opportunity to say of the government that it is much more concerned with giving the impression of doing something than it is with actually doing something of measurable worth. All of the reasons I have just suggested for the government's behaviour are as likely as they are unsavoury. And so, if for no other reason than that, I think the bill should be shot down in flames.

But those are not the only reasons for doing away with this bill. Another is that it is unnecessary. We can do away with it, and still the government's purpose will have been achieved. Time has left Canada and will not be back, whether we pass this bill or not. Reader's Digest will continue publishing as if nothing had ever happened. Indeed, I doubt that the percentage of Canadian content in the future will be any different from what it has been in the past. Reader's Digest is here to stay, whether we pass this bill or not. Moreover, under the regulations pertaining to the Foreign Investment Review Act, it is doubtful that Reader's Digest would be permitted to revert to being principally American-owned.

So why bother passing a bill, the principal aim of which has already been reached? More particularly, why pass such a bill when its secondary effects are as unwholesome as they are? I refer here to the effect this bill would have on a magazine such as MD of Canada. Bill C-58 would destroy MD of Canada. Senator Sullivan explained last week the special circumstances surrounding that excellent publication. I, personally, cannot help feeling that we would be ill advised to eliminate publications of such a scientific and professional nature, publications which cannot be replaced by Canadian—in the National Revenue Department's definition of the term—journals of “anywhere near equal worth.” I am quite sure that, if the question had been limited to publications of that type, no one would seriously have suggested that the government should bring in legislation to force them out. Who could reasonably defend the thesis that “such publications represent a danger to our national identity and our cultural integrity?”

Senator McIlraith, I suggest to you, was right in his assessment of this bill. If we kill it we will be forcing the government to review the whole question and to come up with another remedy, if indeed the question still presents a problem of any significance, and if a solution is possible the effects of which will not prove to be worse than the problem in the first place. In the meantime, Time will have left the country; Reader's Digest will be in the process of becoming a thoroughly Canadian magazine—which means it is likely to become dull—MD of Canada will still be sent free to all our medical practitioners, and the world will be allowed to unfold as the real God intended it to.

● (2020)

I come now to broadcasting. The problem here is much more complicated. By trying to adopt the same tax principle to this field of endeavour as we have used with regard to periodicals, we risk confrontation with the United States and an uneven treatment of all the particular cases involved.

I was much surprised by the government leader's speech on this subject, and before I quote excerpts from it pertaining to station KVOS, I would like to make a few comments on its general tenor.

Its impassioned tone clearly indicated that the government leader was very worried about the criticism levelled against this bill by several of the government supporters in this place—Senator Perrault's own troops. The speech was a call to arms, an endeavour to rally the forces. I want the government leader to know that it was very gratifying to the Leader of the Opposition to see the reaction of those on the government side who have opposed this bill. They did not appear to be either moved or convinced. It appears that this is one instance when party loyalty will have to take a back seat to reason. There is a limit to the number of times a government can ask its supporters to follow without question. There is a limit to the number of times a government can ask the Senate not to think for itself and not to act according to what it considers right.

If the Senate kills this bill, it will have done something of which it can be justly proud. Of course, the likelihood of that happening at second reading stage is remote. Time magazine was obviously very pessimistic. They left the country without even waiting for the bill to come before the Senate. There is a message there somewhere—and it is not that Time knew nothing of Canadian parliamentary procedure. If anything, it is that Time knew too well how this place usually operates. They probably foresaw an earth-shaking speech by Senator Perrault, and concluded that the faithful could not resist the power of his logic.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: But I will still be interested to see whether this bill can get by second reading, and, if it does, how it will fare in committee.

Coming back to what Senator Perrault said about the desirability of applying this type of tax measure to broadcasting, I was most interested in his recitation of the success story that is station KVOS. I would ask honourable senators to bear in mind that the purpose of this legislation is the protection of Canadian culture and not the financial protection of Canadian broadcasters, which would be only a means to achieve the real purpose. I quote from page 2001 of Debates of the Senate of March 30 last:

In 1953, when KVOS-TV was the lone television station offering its signal in the Vancouver market, today's problems did not exist. Then came channel 2, CBC Vancouver, channel 6 Victoria, and channel 8 Vancouver and their many other counterparts in the Maritimes, the Prairie Provinces and Ontario. But the West is the area I know best. The fact is that, after 23 years of its highly profitable existence, almost all of the KVOS-TV programs are available or potentially available on the dial from other stations or on the cable system.

So, Senator Perrault admits that Canadian stations are offering the same programs as KVOS-TV. Does he suggest that this legislation will change the nature of those programs? It is quite evident that presently all Canadian stations carry programs originating in the United States and that therefore the solution, if one is required, is not in this tax measure but in regulations by the CRTC. Everybody knows that this is a very difficult problem for the CRTC. Experience has shown that a preponderance of Canadian radio and television programs on our networks is not a goal that we are about to achieve.

Of course, if the proponents of this measure wish only to channel more money into Canadian broadcasting; if their only objective—and I would be pleased if they were frank enough to admit it—bears no relation whatever to ensuring high quality Canadian content in our broadcasting, but is an attempt at offering financial security to the broadcasting industry, then I would ask them if they are prepared to offer the same protection to other fields of endeavour. It comes to mind that the Canadian textile industry, for instance, would certainly be happy with some measures destined to help it solve its many urgent difficulties. But here again, the problem would be one affecting the commercial relations of Canada and the United States.

The broadcasting problem is one similar to that affecting the importation of goods and services. Broadcasting is an imported service whether it comes from Buffalo or from Bellingham. And under the terms of GATT, Canada and the United States have agreed, as sovereign nations, that no tax will be placed upon imported products, which can be defined also as services, to the detriment of the imported product over the domestic product.

Senator Perrault said, as reported on page 1998 of our Senate Debates:

These references to broadcasting have commercial and viewer implications across Canada. It may be that our negotiations with our friends to the south should be resumed for the purpose of discussing the ultimate aspects of television and radio broadcasting, cablevision, and the question relating to the ownership and rebroadcasting of program material. I do not resist that idea at all. I think it is very important that we continue discussions and negotiations in those areas.

I would ask him, if he were here, if he does not resist the idea that discussions and negotiations on the various aspects of television and radio broadcasting with our friends to the south will be enhanced by the passage of this bill. Our representatives would be going into such discussions with a law that could be put into force the very next day, because this is what is provided for in this bill with reference to broadcasting. We would be telling our friends to the south, "We will have what we want, or else." I suggest to you that if we were to adopt an attitude like that, the discussions would not be very long, nor would they be very fruitful. Of course, there would be the discretion given by the legislation to the Minister of National Revenue; but as I said before, I cannot accept that a problem of this kind be dealt with in one way today and in another tomorrow.

Therefore, whether we look at the bill as it affects periodicals or as it affects broadcasting, I suggest to you that arguments have been made that should convince the Senate to resist the passage of this bill at the stage of second reading.

I have reread most of the speeches made in this debate and I need not repeat the objections which were raised successively by Senators Walker, Cook, Hayden, Laird, Manning, Beaubien, van Roggen, McIlraith, Sullivan and Paterson. I am not saying I accept all their arguments, but most of them are strong enough to force me to the conclusion that although the purpose of this bill may be laudable, the method it seeks to employ in order to achieve its goal is extremely dangerous. It is arbitrary, will most likely be ineffective, and is susceptible of creating injustice, confrontation and irritation south of the border.

● (2030)

It is arbitrary because the minister would be in a position to change the norms from day to day. It would likely be ineffective as far as publications are concerned because Time is out and Reader's Digest is in. It would only result in pushing out of Canada such publications as MD of Canada. It is susceptible of creating an injustice for the very reason that publications such as MD of Canada would no longer be able to publish in Canada.

As far as the broadcasting aspects are concerned, it would create injustices by dealing in the same way with stations which are not in similar positions. Also in the area of broadcasting, it would create confrontation and irritation south of the border.

The government, I suggest, should be forced to reconsider all aspects of the question with a view to arriving at a more acceptable solution. The way to obtain such a solution is by killing Bill C-58, either at this stage or, if that does not happen—the most obvious reason for which would be the eloquence of the Leader of the Government, and I am sorry he is not present to hear that compliment—strangling it, or putting it to sleep, if you prefer euphemisms, at the committee stage.

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Davey speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, I am grateful to those who have participated in this debate which, if nothing else, has convinced me of my inadequacy as a sponsor of legislation. Certainly, during the course of this debate we have heard a great deal of misinformation and misunderstanding. Before I proceed, with the hope of setting the record straight, I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition for speaking this evening, which he did at my convenience. In congratulating the Leader of the Opposition, I imagine myself standing here eleven years from tonight having changed my mind 100 per cent on this issue.

Senator Flynn: I hope you do change your mind from time to time.

Senator Davey: If I could do so at all, I assure Senator Flynn it would not be with his grace, dexterity and wit.

I have purchased a copy of the current issue of Newsweek, which I have here in hand. In this debate my honourable friend, Senator Desruisseaux, as reported at page 1865 of Debates of the Senate of March 9—and I invite honourable senators to listen carefully to his words—said:

Time is said to have 500,000 Canadian subscribers. Some have said that the number is a little smaller than that, but it is still an impressive figure. Newsweek, which makes no waves and has no special Canadian news section, has less than half the circulation of Time in Canada and less than half the amount of Canadian advertising.

I draw the attention of honourable senators to the last words of that passage—"and less than half the amount of Canadian advertising." The fact is that Newsweek does not carry any Canadian advertising, and never has.

In a sense, that is what this debate is all about. Bill C-58 seeks to put Time on exactly the same basis as Newsweek and every other American magazine entering Canada. It will not prevent Time magazine from entering Canada. Indeed, I purchased the latest issue of Time magazine at the airport this morning. What this bill will do is prevent the dumping of editorial material from Time Inc. into a so-called Canadian edition, which can then skim off the cream of available Canadian magazine advertising revenues.

Incidentally, in the debate which we are now concluding, my friends, Senator McIlraith and Senator Manning, expressed some concern for the plight of Canadian advertisers if this bill is passed—that is, once Time ceased publishing a Canadian edition, as indeed it has. I think those honourable senators would be interested in the following quotation from Marketing—and Marketing is the trade newspaper of the advertising industry in Canada—which states in part:

Time magazine will offer space in its March 15 issue—

And that, of course, is no longer the Canadian edition; it is the United States publication of Time.

—to Canadian advertisers for up to almost $4,000 less per page.

Doug Findlay, vice-president and advertising and sales director, said, "We've decided to peg our rate base at 200,000 and pass the savings on to the advertiser." These are the people for whom Senator Manning and Senator McIlraith were weeping crocodile tears. Here is the advertising manager of Time saying that they are going to pass the savings on to the advertisers. Mr. Findlay added:

I stress that the Time magazine read now in Canada will be the same as before, except there won't be a Canada section. The advertising will continue to be Canadian and we'll continue to print the magazine in this country as before.

Last week, Time announced its new subscription rate in Canada, which is $30 a year. I quote Stephen LaRue, who was President of Time Canada Ltd., as reported in the Globe and Mail, as follows:

Mr. LaRue said the $30 is a reduction. Subscriptions to the U.S. edition used to cost $40 in Canada before the suspension of the Canadian edition. The company could not sell it more cheaply. That is the price of that magazine in Canada.

So the price of Time in Canada is now $30 a year.

I made reference just a moment or two ago to Newsweek, which now comes into Canada on the same basis as Time. The subscription rate for Time is $30 per year; Newsweek manages to sell subscriptions in Canada for $19.50.

The debate on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-58 has been a good one. It has been a full debate, and it has been useful. I do have one disappointment, however, in the debate, and it is that so few of the speakers, including those of us who support the bill, did not direct much of our time, attention and concern to the need we have in Canada to develop and support our own native, home-grown Canadian magazine industry. In this connection, the letter I am about to read is self-explanatory. I hasten to add, I received this letter during the course of the debate. It was unsolicited by me, and I do not know the people involved. It is from Vancouver and is dated March 4, 1976. The letterhead reads Canada's Westword, The Magazine for British Columbians, and it is signed by Mr. Clive Cocking, Editor. He says:

—we thought you might be interested in the enclosed presentation describing a new Canadian magazine which we are currently developing.

Called Canada's Westword, it is to be a monthly news feature magazine covering British Columbia affairs exclusively and is planned to have a circulation of approximately 275,000, making it the largest publication in B.C.

The key to it is a shared distribution scheme which has arranged with some 25 community weekly and daily newspapers, whereby they will distribute the magazine as a supplement each month. Its format will of course be that of a magazine—on the same glossy stock as Time—and its contents will be very topical and strongly news-oriented.

● (2040)

The publisher, Mr. Bob Leighton, has asked me to particularly tell you the actions of the government in fighting to encourage the development of an indigenous Canadian magazine industry have been very much appreciated here. We are very hopeful now that more equitable competitive conditions appear to have established, that Canada's Westword will be able to establish itself and prosper.

In a sense, honourable senators, that says it all about what we are attempting to achieve with this bill. I honestly believe that if we reject this bill, then we are turning our backs on this kind of Canadian initiative.

Those who oppose the bill appear to have several main objections, the chief of which, I suggest, stems from a total misconception of what constitutes a Canadian magazine. I quote first my friend Senator Walker. I am sorry he is not here this evening. On March 3, Senator Walker said:

What sort of news magazine would it be with 50 per cent of its content Canadian? There is not enough news in Canada to make 50 per cent of a magazine such as Time Canada.

Senator Smith (Colchester), who I am sorry is not here this evening, and who certainly has impressed us with his lucidity on a wide range of issues since he has been with us, disappointed me greatly when he said on March 11, with reference to Time:

It did so—and to me this is a perfectly reasonable position to take—because it is a news magazine which draws on world news sources for its coverage. You cannot find 80 per cent of all the news in the world in Canada, no matter what the federal government says.

Of course, honourable senators, the federal government has said no such thing and I suspect my friend Senator Smith realizes that. Senator Walker went much further. He described Maclean's news magazine as "a farce."

I want to make it clear that I have no special brief for Maclean's magazine. Indeed, since its inception as a news magazine I believe I have been its most frequent target of all honourable senators; possibly Senator Austin is the runner-up. I believe those are facts which might well cause Senator Walker to change his mind about Maclean's magazine. In any event Senator Walker's opinion of Maclean's being "a farce," I am frank to say, is an opinion which I do not share. In not sharing that opinion, I reject out of hand the automatic assumption that if something is Canadian, whether it is a television program or a magazine, it is automatically inferior. That is a proposition which I believe all honourable senators reject out of hand.

I have here an issue of Maclean's magazine, which I also purchased this morning. I do not apologize for saying—and I do so frankly—that I think it is an excellent news magazine. It is loaded with world news. Of course, there is more Canadian news than we used to read in Time Canada. There is more Canadian news, but it is also loaded with news of the world. The important point is that the news of the world is presented through the eyes of Canadian newsmen and reporters. I have said many times before, here and at other places, that Time has presented us each week with an excellent window on the world. I have also said that it has been a window on the world through American tinted glasses—a welcome window on the world, and one which is still available to us. What we will now have is a window on the world through Canadian tinted glasses. Meanwhile, far from being a farce, Maclean's is thorough. It is professional. It is Canadian. I do not think it has to take a back seat to any other news magazine in the world.

Senator Flynn: Does it need this bill?

Senator Davey: While I am referring to Senator Smith—

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Which Senator Smith are you speaking about?

Senator Davey: Senator Smith (Colchester). I apologize to Senator Smith.

Senator Flynn: Which one?

Senator Davey: This is your Senator Smith, Mr. Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: Is that your apology?

Senator Davey: In the debate on March 11 last, Senator Smith (Colchester) spoke about Senator Grattan O'Leary and his appearance before the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, and said, quoting Senator O'Leary:

I am not so sure that Time magazine today is not the best Canadian magazine we have.

Senator Smith (Colchester) then went on to say:

Note that he did not say merely "the best magazine distributed in Canada," rather he said "the best Canadian magazine."

In response to that I can only quote an article from the October 1974 issue of The Canadian Forum. The article was written by Peter Newman but the quotation quotes a perhaps even greater authority, or at least as great an authority as Senator O'Leary. Peter Newman is writing about the O'Leary Commission, and says:

I attended most of the Commission hearings and I remember best how Larry Laybourne, then managing director of Time-Canada, closed his submission with a humble little bow to the Commissioners and declared: "I invite the Commission to consider whether Time Magazine in Canada is not in all essential respects a Canadian periodical, having regard to the character and quality of its contents and the nature of its publishing operation." That was more than O'Leary could stomach. His Irish up, he telephoned Henry R. Luce and asked him to fly down from New York. On January 17, 1961, the mighty Luce mounted the witness-stand and made what remains the definitive statement on the Canadian status of Time: "I may be in some disagreement with my colleagues," he said, "But you said, sir, you want me to be very plain. I do not consider Time a Canadian magazine."

I hesitate to wade too deeply into the swamps of substantially the same, especially since I know this will be dealt with in some considerable detail by the committee. In discussing this bill and referring to the ownership and content requirements, Senator Hayden—I hope I quote him correctly—suggested, "One ain't good without t'other."

I think he is exactly correct, although I concede at once that Senator Hayden was making a far different point from the one I want to make. He was not speaking with obvious approval; I do. Without ownership requirements or without content requirements, this legislation will not work—that is to say, it will not even the competition thus creating the climate for a revitalized Canadian magazine industry. So, I agree with Senator Hayden, "One ain't good without t'other."

I do comprehend the concern some senators have about "substantially the same," but it is a concern that, while I comprehend it, I cannot share. Perhaps that is because I believe this bill is so important, and perhaps it is because I am not a lawyer. I certainly recall the words of Senator van Roggen in this debate when he said:

What would constitute "substantially the same"? A good and difficult question, but not insoluble, because lawyers and courts in Canada have built up a body of law over the years on such words as "substantial," "undue," "reasonable," and so on. These are words regularly used in legal documents and agreements.

Senator Forsey made an inquiry last evening, and because of this I would repeat just a line or two of the speech I made when I introduced this bill. Referring to the Minister of National Revenue, I said:

He has decided that the content of a Canadian magazine is not substantially the same as that of a foreign issue if the combined editorial and pictorial content is at least 80 per cent different. In my opinion any lesser percentage would allow foreign periodicals to continue to dump editorial material into Canada.

Honourable senators, for me the most perplexing argument of all those advanced against this bill, the one I find most difficult to deal with, is that it would be an irritant to the United States. Senator Cook, my friend who converses with me often in this chamber, even went so far as to talk about ultra-nationalistic madness. In all honesty, I think it is quite possible to be a Canadian nationalist without being either mad or anti-American. I see nothing strident in this quotation from the report of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, which I included in my speech on March 3:

The United States happens to be the most important, the most interesting country on earth. The vigour and diversity of its popular culture—which is close to becoming a world culture—obsesses, alarms, and amuses not just Canadians, but half the people of the world.

What we are suggesting is that the Canadian media—especially broadcasting—have an interest in and an obligation to promote our apartness from the American reality. For all our similarities, for all our sharing, for all our friendships, we are somebody else.

Honourable senators, I submit that is not ultra-nationalistic mass media nor is it strident anti-Americanism. Indeed, just the week before last the new United States ambassador to Canada spoke to the men's Canadian Club here in Ottawa, and I would like to read something he said in that particular speech. He said:

• (2050)

The assertion of Canadian national purpose is not an issue between us. Americans understand and respect it. We expect you to be yourselves. We understand why you wish to diversify your foreign interests; we will cooperate with that effort. Few Americans who have dealt with Canada have ever doubted the separateness of Canadian interests and destiny.

I submit that the assertion of Canadian national purpose is what this legislation is all about. We need in this country our own native Canadian consumer magazine industry, and this is the only way in which we are going to get one.

In a similar vein several senators have said in the course of this debate that Time has enjoyed special status in Canada over a long number of years. I can only respond to that by saying that surely when the Government of Canada grants special privileges, it does not do so forever. It does not grant special privileges in perpetuity.

Now I want to say a word about MD of Canada, because I am always interested in what my friend Senator Sullivan has to say, and I have the greatest respect for the honourable senator, as he knows. I have some sympathy for his view on this particular issue. I would just like to point out that in a letter dated February 2, 1976, and addressed to members of the other place, MD of Canada claims that it "offers no competition to any other journal or magazine directed exclusively to physicians in Canada."

I should have prefaced my remarks by pointing out that MD of Canada is owned by MD International Inc., 30E. 60th St., New York. This assertion that it offers no competition to any other journal or magazine directed exclusively to physicians in Canada is correct, because indeed there is little competition in such a highly specialized market and the publication MD of Canada is unique. It therefore cannot be duplicated easily by a Canadian publisher. But for this very reason, coupled with the fact that MD of Canada is delivered free of charge to 25,000 members of the medical community in Canada, thus providing its advertisers with a captive and sure market, it is the government's contention that MD of Canada could continue its operation in Canada without a special tax status and without any serious negative effects. Of course, the government would welcome any decision by MD of Canada to completely Canadianize its operation, as required by law.

[Senator Davey.]

Senator Flynn: Are you prepared to buy it?

Senator Davey: But should it choose not to do so, it would most likely not preclude its availability or operation in Canada. I am sorry, Senator Flynn, I did not hear what you said.

Senator Flynn: I asked if you were prepared to buy the controlling interest?

Senator Davey: I am not in a position to buy magazines. I wish I were.

Senator Flynn: I am afraid nobody is.

Senator Davey: Now I want to turn to the bill's broadcasting component, because the broadcasting component is every bit as important as the magazine component. I think the concern expressed in this debate about the bill as it relates to broadcasting can be distilled down to two points. One is as to whether the legislation is really necessary, and the second is as to why there should be an open mandate for the date of implementation. Well, in my judgment the bill is necessary and it requires very early implementation. Let me say at once that I do share the concern of some honourable senators about the uncertainty of the date of implementation. In this connection our friend Senator Hayden made a very practical suggestion, although I would prefer that the date of implementation, as far as broadcasting is concerned, should be the date when the bill receives royal assent. There is absolutely no reason that I can see for any delay.

Let me remind you about this part of the bill and what it is about. An estimated $20 million advertising revenue, which is growing at a rate of 15 per cent per year, is spent by Canadian advertisers on American television and radio stations. Thus these American stations derive this revenue from a market they were not licenced to serve, and at the expense of Canadian stations playing under altogether different and more stringent ground rules. In the words of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, which is the association of all private broadcasters in Canada today, the competitive gap continues to widen as the American stations do not have the same economic requirements as Canadian stations which carry high-cost Canadian content or are liable to the regulations or supervision of the CRTC pursuant to the Broadcasting Act. Thus the United States stations are able to sell more competitively in Canada because they are able to purchase their products without taking into account the Canadian market and have no responsibility under the Broadcasting Act to internally cross-subsidize the development of Canadian content programs as required by the CRTC. What started as a soft spot in the underbelly of Canadian broadcasting turned into a commercial tumour, and has been transformed into an economic cancer of some $20 million annually. These U.S. television stations have been able to attract increasing volumes of Canadian advertising dollars thereby inhibiting the growth and diversity of Canadian television outlets. This loss or spill-over has resulted in a reduction in programming choice, and economic barriers to providing new job opportunities for creative Canadian and higher quality Canadian programming.

In this debate, honourable senators, our friend Senator Hayden asserted that Canadian television stations are either all sold out or simply not commercially attractive. I want to quote Senator Hayden from the debate here on the evening of March 9, when he said:

I can tell you that a difficulty we have now in respect of the Toronto stations is that most of them are sold out to the end of 1975, according to the latest figures I have from Statistics Canada. I have here a list of prime time availabilities, and I believe prime time is from 6 p.m. to 12 p.m. It shows CTV as sold out until May 1975; CFTO, sold out until April (85 per cent sold out for entire 1975); CHCH, most shows sold out until January 1975; CHUM, sold out until end of December 1974.

Now, honourable senators, I am sure that there is only one thing in the entire world that I know as much about as my friend Senator Hayden, and that happens to be broadcast advertising because I spent eleven years in the business. So with the greatest of respect to Senator Hayden, I should like to comment on his assertions in this chamber on March 9. First of all he says he got his statistics from Statistics Canada. Statistics Canada, to the best of my knowledge—and I checked this out—does not collect such information. He included CTV as a Toronto station. Well, of course, CTV is not a Toronto station. It is involved in selling network time across the country and should not be considered as belonging exclusively to the Toronto market. He made reference to CHUM, implying that it is a television station. CHUM is, of course, a radio station.

As to the question of popularity in the Toronto market, it is interesting to note that the January Bureau of Broadcast Measurements Survey reports that the prime time for the 7 to 11 p.m. Monday to Friday share of audience is as follows:

	PERCENTAGE
CFTO	16
CHCH— Hamilton	15
WKBW— Buffalo	15
CBLT— The CBC station	14
WBEN— Buffalo	11
CKGN— A new Canadian station— The Global network	10
WGR— Buffalo	10
CITY— An independent Canadian station	3
WUTV— The educational station— Buffalo	2
All others	5

For the period from 4 to 11 o'clock for the TV audience share in the fall, according to the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement, the figures were:

	PERCENTAGE
CFTO	20
WKBW	14
CKGN— The new station Global, along with CHCH and CBLT	12
WBEN and WGR—Buffalo stations	10
CITY	6

The point I want to make is that in terms of straight audience share, the Canadian stations in Toronto are extremely competitive and the new ones are working very hard indeed. No mention was made by Senator Hayden or other senators about advertising in other than the 7 to 11 o'clock period at night. And, of course, for many small advertisers this time could be more cost-efficient.

● (2100)

The simple fact is that Canadian stations have a large inventory of time available and the competition is keen. Indeed, this very night CITY television has an exclusive sports scoop in the Toronto area. It is the only station which is carrying on television the first game of the play-offs between the Pittsburgh Penguins and the Maple Leafs. So there is not much doubt that this new station, CITY, will undoubtedly have the largest audience in Toronto tonight and, probably, the largest audience that it has ever had in its history.

Turning to the points made by Senator McIlraith and Senator Manning, it is true that the Association of Canadian Advertisers and the Institute of Canadian Advertising, which is the association of advertising agencies, have opposed this legislation, both as it relates to broadcasting and to magazines. But these exact same people using the exact same words, almost the identical legislation, were just as stridently opposed to the CRTC's Canadian content regulations for television and radio, Canadian content regulations which have by any standard been remarkably successful without jeopardizing one bit the members of the Canadian advertising industry. Incidentally, I share Senator Hayden's enthusiasm for the CRTC, which I was delighted to hear him declare in the course of this debate. I would remind Senator Hayden and all other senators that the CRTC has requested this specific legislation on broadcasting. Indeed, I should like to quote the Chairman of the CRTC, Mr. Harry Boyle, who was speaking to the Canadian Club in London, Ontario. This is a précis of his speech as it appeared in the Financial Post. In my opinion he makes the point extremely well.

Senator Flynn: What date is it?

Senator Davey: I am sorry; it is a recent issue, but I do not have the date.

Senator Flynn: Was Mr. Boyle chairman at the time?

Senator Davey: Yes. This is since he became chairman. I will obtain the date for you. Speaking to the Canadian Club in London, Ontario, he said:

Let's go back to the $20 million of advertising solicited by American border stations in Canada. In 1974 our total TV advertising revenue was only $225 million.

If the reverse situation were true and Canadian stations were placed advantageously close to the border of America's largest cities, that 10 per cent would amount to $485 million. But what happens when we do nudge up to an American metropolis? Take Detroit, for instance.

Well, the Americans know how to look after their own. When Canadian networks buy American programs they are not allowed to schedule them in Windsor. The Detroit market is protected.

Not so in other centres because the American outlets are up alongside the larger Canadian population centres.

Ninety per cent of the revenue of a station on the border in Washington State comes from Vancouver. The revenue may well be $9 million—$9 million extracted from Vancouver by a station in a small city or overgrown town of 35,000 people with absolutely no responsibility to the Canadian system.

As for those border stations which are now prepared to do all kinds of wondrous things for us on this side of the border, I simply think they underscore the fantastic bonanza they have reaped from Canada. I honestly do not think we want this kind of patronizing tokenism. We want to do it ourselves and I believe we can if the competition is even.

Finally, I believe that honourable senators, given the flow of this debate, will be interested in this item which was aired recently on CBC Capital Report. The speaker was Barrie Zwicker, who is editor of Content, which is a publication aimed at journalists in this country. Some senators may have heard this on the program Capital Report:

While the editorial writers were painting Canadian magazine publishers as heavies greedily dedicated to legislating their innocent competitors out of existence, I happened, as editor and publisher of a journalism review, to notice that very few Canadian magazine publishers ever got their say in the news columns either.

So I began an analysis. I clipped out very nearly every bit of coverage of the magazine controversy from one of the country's best papers, the Toronto Globe and Mail, for a 20-month period from mid-March 1974 to mid-November 1975. The results illustrate one major reason most people see the whole issue in a distorted way.

In the 20 months there were 43 news stories, about 25 letters to the editor, seven editorials and 10 signed opinion columns, totalling 1,065 column inches.

When a story contained absolutely no statement from any spokesman for any Canadian magazine or magazine association, I classified it as unfair to Canadian magazines. If a story contained any comment from a Canadian publisher or association—even one sentence—I generously classified it as fair. If it fitted neither category, neutral.

Remember, this particular analysis had nothing to do with whether I agreed or not with any of the information. I was only looking at the basic unquestioned norm of journalistic fairness, namely, getting both sides of a story.

The findings: 180 column inches fair; 177 inches neutral; and a staggering 708 column inches—or 66 per cent—of stories and comment in the Globe and Mail on the Canadian magazine issue carried not one word from anyone representing Canadian magazines.

The Globe and Mail reporter, who over this period wrote by far the most stories on the topic, not once in the 20 months so much as phoned the Canadian Periodical Publishers Association, just a few blocks from his office on the same street. When another Globe reporter interviewed Ralph Davidson, president of Time Incorporated, in his New York office, Davidson was not asked a single hard question. Indeed, he apparently was not asked any questions at all. He just talked and said, by the way, that those Canadians who did not agree with Time's stand on Bill C-58 are "a pain in the ass."

If Bill C-58 passes and is implemented, it will be despite a million-dollar lobby by the two foreign magazines which have—in a classic example of propaganda turning things on their head—successfully portrayed themselves as the underdogs. In other words, if C-58 passes, it will be despite massive misrepresentation by this country's press. A thoughtful citizen should worry. The Canadian magazine industry may be entering an era in which the competition is a bit less grossly unfair than it has been. But the citizen is still being informed by a press which on many important national issues does not observe even the most elementary standards of fair reporting.

As I say, that was the editor of Content magazine speaking on the CBC.

Honourable senators, I appreciate your patience. I now move that we give this bill second reading, agreement in principle, and then refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, where I know it will receive a thorough and fair hearing.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Davey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang, that this bill be now read a second time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Since there appears to be some uncertainty, those in favour of the motion will please say "yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker: Those against the motion will please say "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker: In my opinion the "yeas" have it. And more than two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker: Please call in the senators.

PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the inquiry of Senator Michaud calling the attention of the Senate to certain economic conditions existing in the Province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my comments on this inquiry will be brief. My reason for wanting to say a few words on this subject is not that I am an expert on conditions in New Brunswick but that this particular motion is an example of what an honourable senator and the Senate can do. This is a perfect example of the kind of thing that we as senators can do for the good of our country, and I wish to compliment my colleague, Senator Michaud, in this regard. He knows the problems of Kent County particularly, and has brought those problems to the attention of the Senate.

No doubt other senators are not as fully conversant with the problems existing in that area, but they recognize that we have before us a problem that occurs in other parts of this country. It certainly occurs in the marginal territories of my province, and I suspect it occurs in most provinces. I am referring to the problem of the small farms, the depopulation of the rural areas, the imbalance that we find between the need for agricultural production and the fact that agricultural land is not being used in a productive way.

This is the kind of action that the Senate can undertake. As I have said, I am not an expert on the problems of Kent County, but I consider it important that we recognize here the type of investigation that the Senate can undertake to the great benefit of Canada. It is the type of investigation, I suppose, that no civil service will undertake, because civil servants are busy with their day-to-day problems, the administration of their departments, and so on. It is difficult for them to undertake the type of investigation that we should be making more frequently. I could certainly mention many areas in my own province which could be benefited by a Senate study.

I look forward to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture in Kent County and would urge the committee—and I am a member of that committee—to present its report at the earliest possible date, following which we can proceed to investigate other areas of particular need.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE LATE HONOURABLE M. GRATTAN O'LEARY TRIBUTES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, it is with a very heavy heart and deep regret that I rise to announce officially to the Senate that we have lost one of our esteemed colleagues. The Honourable Michael Grattan O'Leary died this morning. His passing was, of course, expected by his many friends in this chamber, by his family and, certainly, by himself, but the courage he displayed over the past months has been remarkable, consistent with his incredible, indeed indomitable, spirit.

We shall miss his great qualities and abilities in Parliament, his great and infectious spirit, which refused to concede that any situation, any human condition, was beyond hope. We shall miss his sense of humour; his wit was brilliant and infectious, but never cruel or unkind. He possessed a remarkable understanding of this nation and its people. He was a confirmed optimist in every sense and his personal knowledge of Canada's political history, indeed his participation in that history, was of great value to his modern-day contemporaries of all parties, who were reassured regularly by him that in the context of history today's problems may be difficult, but not beyond resolution. It was well said of him on another occasion:

He believed that democracy's victories are never final, that history is a perpetual recommencement, and that life at best is a hard campaign with some lost battles.

That has been his spirit in journalism, in politics, and in human affairs.

Grattan O'Leary was a great Progressive Conservative, a great Tory, a great orator, a great journalist and a great Canadian. This chamber, and indeed this country, will not soon see his like again.

To the members of his family, our hearts go out today in their great sorrow.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, you will understand that I rise today under the stress of great emotion, to mourn the passing of a colleague and a friend, one of the most illustrious members the Opposition side of this chamber has ever known, Michael Grattan O'Leary. Grattan O'Leary was not only a man but a veritable institution. He had been on this Hill in various capacities as reporter, editor, and senator for some 65 years.

He and I had what I considered to be many things in common, which objectively may not be too important to all honourable senators but which were important to me.

Grattan O'Leary was born in Percé, Quebec—the beautiful village of Percé—the place where my grandfather was born. He was an Irishman, and I am partly Irish, though my Irish temper was nothing compared to his.

A member of the Conservative Party in the province of Quebec, he ran for Parliament in 1925 in the riding of Gaspé and was defeated. It took a great deal of courage to even be a Conservative in Quebec at that time, let alone run for Parliament. But courage was characteristic of this man; he exhibited exemplary fortitude many times during the course of his lifetime.

He was a giant amongst journalists. At one time I, too, looked forward to a career in journalism, but I was never able to muster the drive and determination required. These qualities Grattan O'Leary had in abundance. To pursue his career in journalism he came to Ottawa from the small village of Percé, with three years of formal schooling and a gift for words enhanced by long hours of reading by candlelight. This was a brilliant man, a man of the people, a man who considered anger had a cleansing influence and used it frequently and skillfully to decry that which was sham and dishonest.

As was mentioned by the Leader of the Government, Grattan O'Leary was one of Canada's greatest orators, and we in the Senate had the privilege of listening to some of his most excellent addresses. I well remember the speech he gave at a dinner organized in his honour last year. It was a speech which many of us who were present will never forget.

Grattan O'Leary was a crusader, a man who fought for what he thought was right regardless of the odds. He was admired and respected because he was fair and honest. He spoke forcefully but never without having first done his homework. He merited fully all the respect and admiration people had for him. He had been entrusted by God with singular gifts and he used them well.

[Translation]

Grattan O'Leary was one of my heroes when I was young, and even in later years. In addition, I well remember how, when I decided to run as a candidate in the riding of Quebec-Sud, he encouraged me; later, when I arrived here in Ottawa, he never failed to give me his wholehearted support and most comforting advice. He had panache. He leaves the memory of an outstanding man.

His family knows beyond a doubt, I am sure, that in the Senate there is no one who does not share in their grief as do all Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Léopold Langlois: Honourable senators, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not join in the tributes being paid to our departed colleague, Senator O'Leary. As honourable senators are aware, Senator O'Leary was born on the Gaspé coast in the small but beautiful village of Percé, which forms part of the riding of Gaspé, which I had the honour of representing in the other place for some twelve years. On the Gaspé coast, Senator O'Leary was known and respected as a true and great Canadian.

[Translation]

Senator O'Leary was of Irish descent, as has already been pointed out, and out Gaspé way, in the Gaspé peninsula, he had countless friends. He was a Conservative in politics, but had everyone's respect.

Senator Flynn told us a while ago that he had been a guide for him, a model to emulate; for me, who was of another political hue, he was also a guide and an example which I have always endeavoured to follow, though he stood head and shoulders above me. Still, in political life as elsewhere it is good to have personalities who, like him, impress you, give you an ideal which you strive to follow. Of course, you cannot hope to really follow them, or catch up with them, or attain their height, but still it is well and good to have before you someone who can encourage you to become a better Canadian. Senator O'Leary had all those qualities.

We, from Gaspesia, loved him and worshipped him. Today we join his colleagues in this chamber, in conveying to his family and his many Gaspesian friends our deepest condolences.

[English]

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I believe everyone who ever knew Senator O'Leary has a pleasant story to tell about their relationship. This is perhaps a measure of the man, because he had a great capacity for friendship.

First of all, he was a great journalist. Some of the best traditions of the press gallery of this Parliament have been fostered and developed over the years by the work that Grattan O'Leary did there. This may be recognized by the fact that in the Hall of Honour between the two houses, three journalists are commemorated there by having their faces carved in stone. One is Charlie Bishop, a former colleague of ours; another is Henri Bourassa, not only a journalist originally and later, but also a great parliamentarian; the third is Grattan O'Leary.

He was great in the parliamentary press gallery. I believe one of his great achievements was the work he was able to do as editor of the Ottawa Journal. That work made the paper one of the most widely read and one of the most respected sources of editorial opinion in this country. He used to say that between elections he wrote in a detached manner but when it came to election time that was when he really pulled out the guns and fired them at the Grits.

His life in the parliamentary press gallery gave him an appreciation of Parliament. That, too, is a legacy which he leaves to this country and to this Parliament. He knew his leaders from Borden through Meighen through Bennett to Diefenbaker. He knew them well. If, perhaps, he had an idol among them, it would have been Mr. Meighen.

Senator O'Leary's speeches in this chamber and, indeed, outside this chamber for many years have reflected his interest in Parliament, in the people of Parliament, and in the traditions of Parliament. Senator Macnaughton reminds me that he was particularly active after he came here in the work of the Canada-U.S. Committee. He did a great deal for the fostering of good relations between members of the Congress on the one part and the members of Parliament on the other.

His parliamentary interest was not confined to this country. We have heard his speeches here about Victorian politics, about the Gladstonians, about Morley, about Disraeli, and Justin M'Carthy, a member of the British House in those days, and also the historian of the period, was one of his very favourite authors. But he would talk about the Irish leaders in the British house, about Tim Healy, about Parnell and about John Redmond. He knew these men. He had met them. He had untold admiration for them and he knew as much about Irish literature and Irish poetry as they did.

Grattan O'Leary was a man of happy disposition, but he had experienced deep sorrow. I can recall, although it is a long time ago now, how deeply affected he was at the death of his son Owen, who was killed when flying with the Royal Canadian Air Force on a mission over Germany. The awareness of that tragedy remained with him for many a year. Again the loss of his wife Molly, a little over ten years ago, also affected him deeply. We will not soon again in the Senate see the like of Grattan O'Leary. I can but say, "God rest him," and simply thank heaven for the kind of memories we have of him.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, as has been said, this is a sad day for the Senate, for the Parliament of Canada, for Canada, and perhaps most of all for those of us, many of us, who knew Grattan O'Leary personally, intimately and who admired and loved him.

As I came into the chamber today I looked immediately to the vacant seat behind me where I had sat for ten years as Senator O'Leary's deskmate. Those were my first ten years in this place and his first ten years. It was a privilege for which I am grateful. It was not only a privilege, it was an honour, and certainly an education and an unforgettable experience. It was a decade of my life, distinguished particularly by the richness of the friendship which he was generous enough to extend to me. Yes, I look at that vacant seat of his because he said to me that he hoped that the other vacant seat, the one which I had occupied, would not be filled immediately; and I am touched by that memory.

I look, too, at the press gallery. It is hard to believe that Senator O'Leary sat there 65 years ago. He recalled it often with some amusement. He first came to work for the Ottawa Journal in the year 1911, and he reported from our gallery the famous debate on the Navy bill of 1912. As has been said, it was 50 years ago that he ran as a candidate for the Conservative Party in Gaspé. Those two dates recall to all of us the length of his most distinguished career.

● (1420)

In subsequent years, all the honours that any could wish came to him: degrees from many universities, his place in the newspaper Hall of Fame and his rectorship of Queen's University, among others; but I think what will distinguish Grattan O'Leary in the history of Canada more than anything else, perhaps, is that there was no other Canadian that I can think of who had the confidence of so many of our great political leaders over the years, regardless of party, and particularly of the long succession of Prime Ministers who occupied that high office during his lifetime and during his journalistic days here in Ottawa. He would tell stories of conversations with Prime Ministers of the party he opposed, and the confidence which they placed in him always seemed to me to be the most remarkable thing that I have ever known about any man.

Personal memories, of course, crowd in at this time. He and I had much in common. Like Senator Flynn, I was also a young, ambitious journalist when Grattan O'Leary was already recognized as one of the great leaders of that profession. As the years went on we developed a common interest in politics, but perhaps my deepest memories of him would be in connection with the common interest we had in literature, history and, perhaps above all, poetry. In my personal recollection, Grattan was at his very best when he was relaxing with a drink in one hand and a book of Irish poetry in the other. I remember his saying to me, when he was reading Yeats one night, "Well, one day I will go to the Land of Heart's Desire. Do you remember the poem?" I said, "I think so." I looked up this poem this morning when I heard of his passing, and I can say that he has gone, in the words of Yeats' poem "The Land of Heart's Desire," to:

The land of faery,
Where nobody gets old and godly and grave,
Where nobody gets old and crafty and wise,
Where nobody gets old and bitter of tongue.

I recall the evening when he called me up and said, "I want you to get out here as soon as you can, Allister. I have something important to say to you." What he had to say to me on that occasion was that he had just received the news of the affliction which has finally taken him from us. He said, "I want you to be one of the very first to know. I don't want you to be sad, but I'm going before very long." He then said, "You know, it's quite a coincidence. I've just finished reading the last volume of Sean O'Casey's autobiography, Sunset and Evening Star. I've just put it down. This is how I'm going." He then read it to me, from this very volume that I hold in my hand. Perhaps honourable senators will permit me to read it, because they are his words—certainly his words to me—and I believe his words to all those who would mourn him at this time.

This is the way Grattan saw his going:

Even here, even now, when the sun had set and the evening star was chastely touching the bosom of the night, there were things to say, things to do. A drink first! What would he drink to—the past, the present, the future? To all of them! He would drink to the life that embraced the three of them! Here, with whitened hair, desires failing, strength ebbing out of him, with the sun gone down, and with only the serenity and the calm warning of the evening star left to him, he drank to Life, to all it had been, to what it was, to what it would be. Hurrah!

As I think of him at this moment, honourable senators, that word "hurrah" typifies to me so much of his life, and certainly the courage with which he faced those last terrible months. Not many of us saw a great deal of him in the last few weeks. He had wasted away to perhaps no more than 70 pounds. But when I would bring him greetings from his colleagues in the Senate, he would say, "I want them all to remember me as I was," and so, honourable senators, I am sure we shall.

[Senator Grosart.]

I am sure it would be the wish of all honourable senators that I should on your behalf extend at this time our condolences to those of his immediate family that he leaves behind, to those he loved—his daughter, Moira, the wife of a former member of Parliament, the Honourable Frank McGee, and a former member of the Cabinet, and to his sons Maurice and Dillon. I know something of the sorrow that they are feeling at this time. I would want them to know that there are many who loved Grattan O'Leary as they did and who share with them their sorrow on this occasion.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, as a French-speaking senator and former colleague of Senator O'Leary in journalism for twelve odd years before being appointed to the Senate, I would like to join in the eloquent eulogy pronounced by the previous speakers.

Senator O'Leary had the gift to make friends, and throughout his life he never stopped gaining new ones.

We saw him at work here stating the views in which he believed always in a very constructive manner. He developed his thoughts which he sincerely believed to be solutions to the many problems we must tackle.

For over fifty years he was devoted to the Ottawa Journal, which became, as noted earlier by Senators Flynn and Connolly, a great newspaper with much appreciated editorials. It was mostly his work. Fifty years are not easy to forget. In 1963 he retired after 52 years to assume the presidency and the editorship of the paper.

Unfortunately here in this house we had him for only 14 years. However, his contributions, as I said, were outstanding. His literary qualities have hardly been equalled in the Senate history. His judgment was something remarkable. His friendly relations with his colleagues and with us Francophones were also worth remembering. He understood, in the course of his long career, the problems of our country, the Canadian problems.

I can only echo the eloquent tribute paid to him and convey to the members of his family our most sincere condolences.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFUSAL BY PASSPORT OFFICE TO ACCEPT $50 AND $100 BILLS—QUESTION

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I have the following questions for the Leader of the Government in the Senate:

1. Is it a policy that the passport office of the Department of External Affairs in Ottawa does not accept $50 and $100 denominations of Canadian currency bills for payment of services in the issuing of passports?

2. What are the reasons for not accepting this Canadian currency?

3. Who is responsible for establishing such a policy?

4. Are there other government departments which abide by the same policy and refuse to accept Canadian currency?

5. If such a policy was established because of the danger of receiving counterfeit currency, does the government recommend that no Canadian firm or individual accept such currency?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall be pleased to take that question as notice, and endeavour to obtain a reply.

ENERGY

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF PIPELINE FROM PRINCE RUPERT TO EDMONTON—PROPOSED PIPELINE TREATY BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES—QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government on a matter of considerable urgency. Its focus at this moment is in British Columbia, although its effect seriously relates in one way or another to the whole of Canada. Notice of this question was given to the leader this morning.

I refer to the serious examination now under way by private interests, controlled in part by United States investors, into the possibility of using Prince Rupert as the major landing port for Alaska oil bound for mid-western United States markets. What is being considered is the construction of an oil pipeline east from Prince Rupert, across British Columbia, and finally to Edmonton to join the presently existing Interprovincial pipeline which carries Alberta crude oil to the United States and central Canada. The cost of new pipeline construction including looping of existing facilities could easily exceed half a billion dollars.

I ask the following question of the government: Is the government prepared, as it did on August 13, 1970, with respect to oil and gas pipelines from the Arctic, to make a policy statement as to whether it favours in principle the construction of this essentially United States pipeline across more than half of Canada, and, if so, what terms would the Canadian government require to protect Canada's essential interests, including environmental and security of supply considerations?

In addition, would the government leader advise the Senate whether the present draft of a proposed pipeline treaty between Canada and the United States would allow Canada to request and obtain assured and reasonable-cost oil supplies from Alaska production in payment, or part payment, for any permission for such a pipeline to be built on Canadian territory?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate very much Senator Austin's giving me prior notice of this question.

Senator Flynn: Yes, I can appreciate that also.

Senator Perrault: I have two rather brief replies.

Senator Austin asks: Is the government prepared, with respect to oil and gas pipelines from the Arctic, to make a policy statement as to whether it favours in principle the construction of this essentially United States pipeline across more than one-half of Canada?

I can only answer that question by saying that we must wait for the application to the National Energy Board, where the merits of the application will be considered.

Secondly, Senator Austin asks: Would the government leader advise the Senate whether the present draft of a proposed pipeline treaty between Canada and the United States would allow Canada to request and obtain assured and reasonable-cost oil supplies from Alaska production in payment, or part payment, for any permission for such a pipeline to be built on Canadian territory?

The answer is that the pipeline treaty has not yet been ratified by the two governments, so it would be presumptuous to make any kind of prediction at this time. Each pipeline proposal will have to be established under a protocol arrangement which spells out the terms of any such arrangement.

CONSTRUCTION OF ARCTIC GAS PIPELINE—SUPPLY OF ARCTIC GAS TO SOUTHERN CANADA—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have an additional question to ask the Government Leader relating to one aspect of government policy on the construction of an Arctic gas pipeline, that of the available time to the government and to the country in which to make a decision whether to supply Arctic gas to southern Canada.

I ask the government this question because I believe there is considerable public misunderstanding about the Canadian supply-demand situation as it affects the need to build an Arctic gas pipeline and, if there is such a need, the timing of introducing Arctic gas supplies to the rest of Canada.

Will the Minister of the Crown in the Senate advise this chamber, and the Canadian people—courtesy of Canadian Press—whether the government sees any reason at this time why it should not await in due and reasonable course the advice of the Berger Commission of Inquiry and of the National Energy Board as to whether and when and on what terms and conditions a natural gas pipeline from the Arctic might be built? Put another way, is there such a gas supply shortage looming in southern Canada that the Government may not be able to await the normal course of receiving these reports before feeling compelled to take action?

Senator Flynn: A very good speech.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice. I do not have a reply to that particular question at my desk.

Senator Grosart: Whether it was a threat, or a question.

COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Chesley W. Carter moved the second reading of Bill C-92, to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, every once in a while we are presented with a piece of legislation which members of the House of Commons and senators of all political persuasions can support with great pride and pleasure. Such a measure is Bill C-92, which is now before us.

I find particular pleasure in having the honour to introduce the bill, because I know from personal knowledge that it is a culmination of efforts put forth by veteran organizations, members of Parliament in both houses and of all parties, and by the Commons Committee on Veterans Affairs. As a matter of fact, Bill C-92 embodies almost completely the recommendations of that committee.

I should like to begin my introduction by calling attention to the title of the bill, as it appears on page 1, and also to the short title in clause 1. The title of the bill is:

An Act to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof.

For the short title, clause 1 says:

This Act may be cited as the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act.

I should like to focus attention for a moment on the word "compensation" as distinct from the word "pension". Under the Pension Act, entitlement to a disability pension is dependent upon the presence in the veteran of a medically recognizable or identifiable disability, and the amount of pension is based on an assessment of the proportion of that disability which can be attributed to military service. Thus a person may be 100 per cent disabled, but if only 50 per cent of that disability can be attributed to his war service he would be entitled to only a 50 per cent pension. Prisoners of war who have medically identifiable disabilities receive their disability pension in the normal way, the same as any veteran who was wounded on the field of battle or suffered injury during his military service.

As time went on, certain disabilities began to show up in prisoners of war as a group rather than as individuals. For example, in comparison with the population generally it became noticeable that the rate of suicides was greater than in the population as a whole, the rate of depression was greater, and the ability to carry on or to concentrate on work was much less. Many other characteristics showed up in this group of prisoners, which distinguished them from the population as a whole.

One must assume that those disabilities can be attributed to the kind of treatment a prisoner had to undergo, because a prisoner in a prisoner of war camp received very different treatment from that received in a civilian jail. Prisoners of war had to endure inadequate food, exposure, severe physical abuse, and, most of all, emotional torment and shortened life span. Lack of food gave rise to a disease called avitaminosis, about which medical science knew very little at the time. It was very difficult to diagnose because it produced different effects in different individuals. In fact, we know very little about it even today.

As a result, a new principle was introduced in the form of compensation for prisoners of war who had as individuals no identifiable or medically recognizable disability but who fitted into the characteristics of a group such as the Hong Kong prisoners. It was called compensation as distinct from a disability pension.

It will be recalled that in 1971, five years ago, Parliament passed legislation granting a blanket assessment of 50 per cent compensation to all prisoners of war who had been incarcerated by the Japanese for at least 12 months. That legislation presented some problems because of the ceiling of 50 per cent. For example, a prisoner of war who had a medical disability of 10 per cent could receive only 40 per cent compensation because he had been a prisoner of war; a prisoner of war who had a medical disability of 40 per cent would receive only 10 per cent compensation for his experiences in the prisoner of war camp; and a prisoner of war who had medical disabilities and entitlement of more than 50 per cent received, of course, no compensation at all.

With respect to prisoners of war, Bill C-92 does three things. It corrects the anomaly to which I have referred in connection with prisoners of the Japanese, which caused injustice to those who, despite their medical disabilities, cannot receive more than 50 per cent. I might point out that the 50 per cent figure was chosen mainly to protect the widows of prisoners who had already passed on, because under the Pension Act payment is made at the nearest round figure, so that a veteran with a 48 per cent disability would receive a pension at the 50 per cent rate, and the widows of pensioners at the 50 per cent rate would receive the pension as a matter of right. However, if the disability was under 50 per cent, they would receive it at the discretion of the Pension Commission, and would possibly receive a widow's allowance rather than a widow's pension.

As I have said, Bill C-92 does three things. First, it corrects this anomaly, in cases where a pensioner is in receipt of both compensation and a disability pension, so that the two can now be added together. If a person has a 40 per cent disability, he can receive another 50 per cent compensation, which would increase his total to a 90 per cent assessment. The maximum figure in the bill is 100 per cent. No veteran can receive more than 100 per cent.

Further, the bill creates a second group—those who were prisoners of war of the Japanese for less than a year. We do not know whether there are any in this group. Under existing legislation, a veteran who was a prisoner of the Japanese for less than 12 months would not be covered. Under Bill C-92 he is covered in a partial manner, to the extent of 50 per cent if a prisoner for more than one year, and 20 per cent for over three months but less than 12 months.

● (1450)

This bill also extends the principle of compensation to prisoners of war held by the European powers and by Korea, but again on a smaller scale. The scale provided in the bill is 10 per cent in respect of a prison term of over three months and less than 18 months; 15 per cent in respect of a prison term of from 18 months to 30 months, and 20 per cent in respect of a prison term of more than 30 months.

Honourable senators, Bill C-92 is further recognition of the debt of gratitude owed to those who gave of their health and strength to serve Canada and to preserve freedom and peace. It is not a perfect piece of legislation. There are still some groups which are not covered, such as escapees and evaders, and one of our goals in terms of future legislation in this area is to have those groups included.

I would be remiss in my duty if I did not express our thanks and appreciation to the Minister of Veterans Affairs for successfully steering this legislation through Cabinet at a time when the pressure for budgetary restraint is extremely great. I am sure all honourable senators and all veterans, particularly former prisoners of war, join me in acknowledging the minister's efforts in this regard.

As I indicated earlier, this is not a controversial piece of legislation. It received unanimous support in the other place, and I am sure it will receive the same treatment in this chamber. It was referred to the Veterans Affairs Committee of the other place, and was amended to make it retroactive to April 1 of this year. I do not feel anything would be achieved by referring it to a Senate committee, but if it is the wish of the house that it be referred to committee, I shall be only too glad to make the appropriate motion.

Senator Norrie: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a question of the sponsor of the bill? A very close friend of mine, formerly of Truro but now living in Sydney, was what is referred to as an evader. He is very concerned and upset that evaders are excluded from benefits under this legislation. Is that true?

Senator Carter: Yes.

Senator Norrie: Unfortunately, there was a rather nasty story about evaders in one of the newspapers recently. It was to the effect that some of them did not try to escape; that they actually enjoyed hiding. That story only served to make the matter more insulting to my friend.

To give you some background, he hid for several months in an attic, with the Germans constantly knocking at the front door and searching the woods around the house in which he was hiding. He had no chance of escaping for the whole period he was in hiding. For that reason he feels he, and others like him, should be treated in the same way as prisoners of war. It causes him a great deal of sorrow to feel he is being pushed aside.

I am wondering whether perhaps this bill should be referred to committee where this aspect of it can be further explored.

Senator Carter: This aspect was brought up during the course of the debate in the other place, as well as during the committee proceedings. It is true that evaders are not included in this bill, although the committee of the other place did recommend it, and it had the support of veterans' organizations. Evaders are specifically excluded, of course, because the measure applies only to those who were incarcerated for a period of more than three months.

It is perhaps a bit unfair, because it is the military duty of a prisoner of war to try to escape. Those who were successfully evading capture were really carrying out their duty, for which it would now appear they are being penalized. Personally, I have a great deal of sympathy for them, and I am disappointed, as I mentioned earlier, that they are not included. However, it is a goal we hope to achieve in the future. The feeling is that we are fortunate in getting this much, and I do not think we should hold the bill up hoping for something which does not seem possible under present economic conditions.

I might mention that the three-month incarceration requirement is in the legislation because it was felt that those who were prisoners of war for only a matter of days or weeks, not having been subjected to the same treatment and conditions that gave rise to long term disabilities, should not be eligible for compensation. As honourable senators are well aware, during the latter stages of the war many people became prisoners of war for overnight, or were held for only a few days or weeks.

I am hopeful that we will succeed in having such groups as evaders included for compensation in future amendments to this legislation.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like to thank Senator Carter for an able and excellent explanation of Bill C-92. As he indicated, we on this side can readily support its passage. At the same time, however, I must express regret that certain classes of veterans have been excluded.

Recently, the Carleton University student newspaper, The Charlatan, presented a number of awards to various classes of politicians, and the recipient of the Rip Van Winkle award was the present Minister of Veterans Affairs. The citation on the award quoted one of his replies in the House of Commons to the effect that while they were considering the legislation embodied in Bill C-92 he did not wish to tie down the government in this respect.

Perhaps it was a bit unfair to single out this particular Minister of Veterans Affairs, who is really very conscientious. Since he comes from my province, I should perhaps come to his defence. I think the Department of Veterans Affairs, and perhaps Parliament itself, should have received the Rip Van Winkle award because, as the student newspaper went on to point out, World War II ended 31 years ago and here we are just now bringing in legislation to compensate a special group for the first time.

When I first came to Parliament, I was made very much aware of the situation in respect of POWs by Marcel Lambert, who is presently the member for Edmonton West. He was taken prisoner at Dieppe, and has quietly campaigned for special legislation to compensate prisoners of war.

● (1500)

As the sponsor of the bill explained, the bill sets up three classifications. Those receiving the greatest benefits are the so-called Hong Kong prisoners. In this regard we are correcting a mistake that was made in the previous legislation, which limited everyone to a benefit of 50 per cent. This has now been removed and the Hong Kong prisoners can receive compensation for the physical and mental torture they suffered.

The second classification—that is, those receiving a 20 per cent benefit—is designed particularly for those taken prisoner at Dieppe. I should point out that the Dieppe POWs received far harsher treatment from the Germans than any other group. In 1942 the Nazis were confident of winning. They had no respect at all for the Geneva Convention, and those unfortunate Canadians taken prisoner at Dieppe were chained together for, in some cases, periods of well over a year. You can imagine the trauma suffered by those young people while chained together for over a year. If honourable senators would like to receive this information first hand, they can speak to Major Vandelaac, the Black Rod, who was taken prisoner at Dieppe and later escaped, and who upon recapture was incarcerated in a special prison for such escaped prisoners.

Senator Norrie inquired of the sponsor why there is no compensation provided for evaders and escapees. I join in asking the government to give special consideration to this group. It is not large. I do not believe the number would exceed 250 in all of Canada. Most of these people were members of Bomber Command who were shot down, some of whom were picked up by the underground organization and passed along to Spain and thus back to England. These people had to be hidden by the underground, and it was not uncommon for them to be left alone in hiding for periods of weeks, during which time they received little food and water. It was always a great worry to these people that they would be recaptured and interrogated by the SS, who were very anxious to discover who were the individuals serving in the underground. When they were captured, they were given very harsh treatment, and sometimes tortured, in the hope that they would reveal the names of the members of the underground who had assisted them.

It is rather interesting to recall the reactions of the Germans when a prisoner or an escapee was at large. Up to a full division was often employed in searching for one man. The evaders and escapees made a tremendous contribution to the war effort by causing large numbers of troops to be engaged in searching for them.

The sponsor of the bill said that the legislation is based upon the fact that a pension of 48 per cent or less dies with the recipient. I believe it is time that we reviewed this aspect of the legislation respecting veterans, because it has become very important now. The veterans are approaching retirement age. A veteran may have an income of $200 a month from a disability pension and compensation for having been a prisoner of war, and those two amounts combined may be less than 48 per cent. If he dies the pension will cease. His widow then suffers an extra financial hardship because the expected retirement income included compensation and the disability pension from the Veterans Affairs Department. I do not think we should continue on without reviewing the effects of the 48 per cent clause in the legislation.

The retroactivity of this legislation again applies only in cases where the disability pension and compensation exceeds 48 per cent. This creates a very special discrepancy between a case where the disability pension and compensation combined may total 45 per cent, and thus cease on the death of the recipient, and a case where that combination reaches 48 per cent and continues on after the death of the recipient. For the difference of 3 per cent I believe that is an unusual hardship.

I find the legislation in respect to the war veterans allowance to be rather vague. The reports of the proceedings of the committee of the other place do very little to clarify it. I would hope the sponsor of the bill can give us further information respecting the effects on those receiving war veterans allowances and, in particular, those veterans receiving the guaranteed income supplement.

I fail to understand why an individual must apply. Surely there is a list of former prisoners of war in the department. I find it rather strange that a veteran, who may not follow the procedures in Parliament as closely as we do, has to apply. I think the benefit should be automatic. I point out that if an individual fails to file an income tax return this month, he will be notified by another department that he failed to file. Government agencies should work the other way once in a while.

Senator Carter mentioned committee proceedings with reference to this bill. I really do not believe it is necessary that we delay passage of this legislation. It received rather unusual cooperation in the other house, and perhaps we could continue in the same spirit. However, it would be wise for a committee of the Senate to make a detailed study of the legislation affecting veterans, and I hope we will do this.

● (1510)

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I do not wish to delay second reading of this bill, and therefore I shall not speak at length. I congratulate the sponsor on his excellent presentation, and I also congratulate Senator Phillips on his speech. Between them they have brought out all aspects of this legislation, and Senator Norrie has pointed out one weakness which needs to be overcome, if not now then at some future time.

I should also like to congratulate the minister. I think it is wholly wrong to say that he is to blame in any way for the long delay in introducing this legislation. After all, he has not been the Minister of Veterans Affairs for 32 years. There have been many ministers in the interim, and, although they were wholly sympathetic to the plight of veterans, they were unable to bring forward this type of legislation. I think the present minister is to be congratulated for being the one capable of doing so.

There are one or two items I should now like to comment upon. I do not know if there are any veterans of the First World War who were prisoners of war, but even if there are this measure does not apply to them. Again, I think the time limit is too rigid. I can appreciate the idea that a veteran must have been a prisoner of war for three months before being able to receive any benefit from this legislation, but I venture to predict that if this legislation is passed it will not have been in force for more than a month before special hardship cases will be coming to the attention of the Department of Veterans Affairs. It may well be that a veteran who was a prisoner of war for only a month was, nevertheless, so adversely affected that he needs special consideration.

As Senator Carter mentioned, compensation is the principle upon which this bill is based. Most of us know some veterans who were prisoners of war, and we know that they suffered certain privations, hardships and indignities. While they were young men they seemed to be able to throw off the effects of those hardships. As they have grown older, these things have come back to haunt them. In some cases it is a matter of physical disability; in others, it is mental disability, which is a reasonable basis for compensation. I must reiterate that the three months' time limit seems quite unfair. In my opinion, the minister should have discretion to extend this compensation to persons who were prisoners for less than three months if the circumstances justify it. I hope that in days to come we will be able to amend the legislation to provide for that.

There is another aspect in which the legislation could be strengthened. It provides that in no case can the compensation be more than 100 per cent of the disability pension. I cannot see why that should be, because if a person is already receiving a 100 per cent disability pension and yet has been a prisoner of war, then he receives no benefit from this legislation. In my opinion, in such a case the compensation should be extended to cover 150 per cent. Why not? They deserve it. That is another weakness I should like to see corrected in days to come.

Honourable senators, I believe everything has been sufficiently covered by the previous speakers. I wholly agree with them that no useful purpose would be served at this time by referring this bill to a committee. The sooner we pass it, the sooner the veterans who were prisoners of war will be able to receive the benefits we all want them to have.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I am as anxious as anyone to have this bill passed as quickly as possible so I will take up only two minutes of your time.

I went overseas with the Essex Scottish Regiment early in 1940. That regiment was in the second division, fourth brigade, and participated at Dieppe. By that time, I had been seconded to another regiment which was being made ready for Kiska. The Essex Scottish Regiment suffered heavy casualties, and many of the soldiers were taken as prisoners of war. There were hundreds of them, and I knew almost every one. In later years they suffered as a result of the treatment they were subjected to as prisoners of war, which Senator Phillips has so vividly described. Particular efforts were made not only to chain them, but to hold them in chains. Many of those former prisoners of war are dead; many of them are now grandfathers.

A year ago, after the Hermann Report came in and was endorsed by the committee of the House of Commons, I was invited to go to a conference of veterans' organizations in Windsor. I told them that there would be nothing to passing this legislation, that it would be passed almost immediately, that they need not worry about it. I was not running for office; I was talking to my own people. I thought there would be nothing to it at all, and that it would be accepted immediately. But then the difficulties started. At meeting after meeting in caucus, and at other times and places, pressure was brought to bear to pass this legislation. We were told that the veterans were dying and that they needed it, that time was against them and that something just had to be done. Well, it finally was. The legislation has been endorsed by all parties.

In all fairness, however, it must be said that we really could not do a great deal much earlier. If we are a little late, it must be remembered that in the early days there were so many issues and so many other problems to deal with, that not everything could be done at once. Nevertheless, I am delighted to know that recognition has finally been given to the needs of ex-prisoners of war—my comrades and men from other regiments and brigades. I maintain that the people of Canada have dealt fairly with their veterans of World War II, even if it must be admitted that the veterans of World War I were not so fairly treated.

I am delighted to be here in Parliament 35 years after the event, and to be able to join with my fellow Canadians in seeing a measure of justice being given to these deserving people even at this late date. I support the bill.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, I join in the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-92 at this stage not because I have anything new to add to the comments of those who have already spoken, but simply to add one more voice to the plea they have been making.

There are two or three points I feel quite concerned about in respect of the treatment of Canadian veterans. I agree with Senator Croll that the treatment of Canadian veterans returning after the end of the last world war under the Veterans Charter was probably second to none in the world. I am sure that fact is appreciated not only by the recipients, the veterans, but by Canadians generally. I am not so sure, however, that we have given sufficient consideration to the hardships undergone by so many of young Canadians who were either taken prisoner or found themselves behind enemy lines and managed to escape. This legislation requires that a prisoner of war must have spent in excess of three months in a prison camp in order to qualify for the benefits. As Senator Macdonald pointed out a moment ago, that is simply unfair and unjust.

Many prisoners of war, I believe, suffered their greatest hardships in the first days and weeks after they were captured, and I believe there is a continuing price that these people are paying and will pay for the rest of their lives. I do not think there should be any time limit here. I think, if a person was taken prisoner in the latter period of the war, though he may have served only a short period of time as a prisoner, that that does not necessarily mean he suffered less than other people who spent a much longer time in a prison camp. Sometimes the greatest problems arose during the period between capture and shipment to a prison camp and we can be sure that it takes a much shorter period of time than three months to do irreparable harm to a human being.

I am not asking that this legislation be delayed—not at all; as many senators have said, it is long overdue—but I hope that this chamber, and the government, will give consideration to extending the benefits of this legislation to all prisoners of war, regardless of the length of time they may have spent in captivity.

I am sorry that the legislation is not broad enough to cover the people who found themselves behind enemy lines and who, through their good luck and ingenuity, were able to find their way back to friendly lines, or across the English Channel to Britain. Surely anyone who has any conception of what some of these people went through in order to escape from enemy territory and return home to fight again must agree with me. The first requirement of any prisoner of war or potential prisoner of war is to escape and return to his own lines and fight again. I happen to know of one particular individual who made his way out of occupied Europe back to Britain on three different occasions, and I happen to know a little about the problems he has had in life up to the present day. He was never captured. I repeat, he made his way out of occupied Europe and back to Britain on three different occasions. There is no doubt in my mind that this man has paid as great a penalty as most prisoners of war, and that he should be excluded from this legislation is, in my view, neither fair nor equitable.

I agree with what Senator Phillips said when speaking of those veterans who, because they are in receipt of partial disability allowances, are not able to pass on any of those benefits to their families. I do not believe there should be a percentage of disability which dictates whether the widow will receive any benefit after the death of the pensioner. I believe that if a person is in receipt of a disability pension, regardless of whether it is 10 per cent or 100 per cent, then the widow ought to be entitled to some portion of it.

Why is a disability pension paid in the first place? In my view, it is paid because an individual, through war wounds or otherwise, has to be compensated for his inability, after leaving the services, to perform to the extent of 100 per cent. These people have paid for what happened to them all their lives. Why should their widows be cut off because their pensions were less than a certain percentage? I believe that every veteran of any war, whether in receipt of a pension or not, has paid a price which, God knows, we can never measure. But to say that benefits are payable only while the pensioner lives is, to me, morally wrong. In my view, his wife or his mother ought to receive a percentage, at least, of the pension that has been payable to that veteran while he lived, and it ought not to be cut off in its entirety on his death.

[Senator McDonald.]

I do not want to delay the passing of Bill C-92, as I said earlier, because it is many years overdue, but I do hope that when it is passed into law discussions on this subject matter will continue.

I give full credit to the Government of Canada and the Canadian people for the generosity extended to Canadian veterans under the Veterans Charter, but I believe that in many instances we have not been fair to pensioners, regardless of the percentage of pension they may draw. There are many examples of where pensions given to veterans in this country have been far less than the amounts of money we have been prepared to pay under other social programs. I do not want to put veterans in a special category, but, on the other hand, I do not want them to be downgraded. In my view, in light of the amounts they receive as compared to the benefits that other people in Canada receive from taxpayer's dollars, veterans have been, and still are, downgraded.

The veteran, in my view, has never received the attention that he is entitled to, and will not do so under this bill. While it is an improvement, it still does not meet the needs of, and does not deal fairly with, those people who volunteered their lives—many of whom gave their lives—in the defence of those things we believe in. If we are not able to be as generous, if not more generous, to that group of people as we are to certain others, then I do not think we, as Canadians or as parliamentarians, are accepting the responsibility that is ours.

Hon. Chesley W. Carter: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Carter speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Carter: Honourable senators, I thank all those who have spoken for their eloquent interventions in this debate. I assure them that I sympathize completely with the positions they have taken with respect to evaders, and with respect to widows.

I should have mentioned earlier in my remarks that if we take all prisoners of war as a whole, 50 per cent of them were incarcerated for 18 months or less, 15 per cent were incarcerated for between 18 months and 30 months, and 35 per cent were incarcerated for over 30 months. So the number that is not included will be extremely small, and I think the house can rest assured that the pressure will continue to be maintained by our colleagues in the other place, by honourable senators and by veterans' organizations generally, to have this legislation still further improved. Nevertheless, we must admit that this represents a great advance in veterans legislation, and is something that is far ahead of anything to be found today in any other country in the world.

Senator Phillips raised the question of widows being entitled to a pension in their own right only if their deceased veteran husbands had been assisted to the extent of 48 per cent or more. The principle of the Pensions Act is that a widow's right flows from her husband's right or entitlement, and while I do not think there is anything particularly sacred about 48 per cent, nevertheless, at the time it was introduced it seemed to be a reasonable level. It was agreed to by all parties at that time, and was also agreed to by the committee of the House of Commons. Others have suggested that a widow should receive a pension as of right on a basis that is proportional to her husband's entitlement, so that if her husband was a 20 per cent pensioner, she would be entitled to a 20 per cent widow's pension. This is very important because when a widow receives a pension as a matter of right, then other income is not taken into account. But a widow who does not receive a pension in her own right is more or less subjected to a means test and, as I said before, she has to apply and make her case before the Pension Commission.

With respect to applications, those veterans who were prisoners of war and who are already disability pensioners will receive their compensation in addition to their disability pension without having to apply. Of course, others will have to apply. As I said earlier, we speak of Japanese prisoners of war—and we call them Hong Kong prisoners, because the vast majority of them became prisoners as a result of the battle of Hong Kong—but others including naval personnel, air force personnel and civilians became prisoners of the Japanese too. The only way we can help them is to have them apply because, as far as I understand, we do not even know whether there is in existence a group who were incarcerated in Japanese prisons for less than one year.

With respect to Senator Phillips' question about the war veterans allowance, I would say that that, of course, applies to all veterans. Any veteran whose disability pension rate is lower than the rate for the war veterans allowance can have it supplemented by the war veterans allowance. Furthermore, the compensation can constitute a form of entitlement to the war veterans allowance in the absence of a disability pension.

As to the question of the 100 per cent cutoff, I am told we do not have provision in the Pensions Act for multiple disabilities in excess of 100 per cent. Some countries do have provision for multiple disabilities where they can add up to 100 per cent, 120 per cent or 150 per cent—at any rate, in excess of 100 per cent disability—but we do not have that in our pensions legislation at the moment. However, we do have dependants' allowances and assistance of that kind, and these pensioners will be eligible for these other allowances. I am told that as far as the Hong Kong prisoners are concerned, most of them will receive combined 90 per cent or 100 per cent pension and compensation.

I think that Senator Macdonald's suggestion of providing discretion to the minister is an excellent one. As I said earlier, I am sure all those suggestions will be pressed on the minister and on the government in future years as the committee and the organizations interested in veterans make their representations.

Let me conclude, honourable senators, by thanking those who participated in this debate. I want to point out that even though this legislation does not go as far as we would like it to go, nevertheless it represents yet a further improvement to the Veterans' Charter which is already the envy of the world.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Carter: At the next sitting.

Senator Macdonald: With leave, now.

Senator Carter: With leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that this bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TRANSPORTATION

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—INQUIRY STANDS

On the Inquiry by the Honourable Senator Bonnell:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the British North America Act as it pertains to transportation.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I expected to speak to this inquiry last night, and then I hoped to speak to it today. However, under the block system of committee meetings, the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy is scheduled to meet at 3.30 this afternoon, and there is quite a number of highly paid public servants waiting to give of their knowledge, so perhaps the Garden Province, Prince Edward Island, can wait one more day for me to bring to your attention its transportation problems.

I ask that this inquiry stand, and that it be the first item of business tomorrow, and on all subsequent days until it is disposed of. This will enable me to catch an afternoon flight to Prince Edward Island tomorrow. One has to start early in order to get there the same day. As it is, I shall not arrive until after midnight.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Inquiry Stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, before the Senate adjourns I would like to raise a point of order.

I thank my honourable friend Senator Bonnell for postponing his speech until tomorrow. I was under the impression that with the establishment of the block system of committee meetings we would not sit past half past three on Wednesday afternoons because the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy meets at that time on that day. It now appears it may be necessary to have an order of the house that it do not sit beyond 3.30 on Wednesday afternoons. I do not want to be taken as asking the leader or deputy leader to introduce such a motion, but I hope that such motion will be introduced either tomorrow or upon our return after the Easter recess.

Senator Grosart: May I ask the Leader of the Government or the deputy leader if it is the intention to introduce such a motion making it certain that there will be an order of the Senate that we adjourn at 3.30 on Wednesday afternoons? Otherwise, I do not believe the block system for committee meetings will work so far as that particular committee is concerned.

Senator Langlois: When the block system was introduced it was my understanding that we had reached general agreement on both sides that we would adjourn at 3.30 in the afternoon on each Wednesday. Therefore, I do not see the necessity for a motion.

Senator Grosart: In my view, it is necessary to have such a motion because some honourable senators are not aware of this particular understanding, or perhaps they forget it on Wednesday afternoon, as I am sure has been the case today. This will continue to happen unless there is an order of the house that it adjourn at 3.30 in the afternoon on Wednesdays. It is quite understandable that honourable senators, during a debate to which they wish to contribute, will continue to speak unless they know that the Senate is to adjourn at 3.30.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 8, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1975, pursuant to section 46 of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, Chapter C-3, R.S.C., 1970.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN TEXTILE PROBLEMS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Senator Macnaughton: Honourable senators, on behalf of the Honourable Salter Hayden, I have the honour to table the first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on Canadian Textile Problems. I would ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Senator Forsey, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented the eighth report of the committee as follows:

Thursday, April 8, 1976

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its Eighth Report as follows:

In relation to the Order of Reference of the House of Commons dated Thursday, February 12, 1976, relating to the subject matter of Bill C-225, "An Act respecting the right of the public to information concerning the public business", Guidelines for Motions for the Production of Papers tabled December 19, 1974, by the President of the Privy Council, the Official Secrets Act, the Federal Court Act, the Statistics Act, Prerogative Writs, and laws related to the question of freedom of information and the protection of privacy, and the question of automatic data processing in the above context, with due protection for privacy of persons.

Your Committee recommends that one member of the Committee be authorized to travel outside Canada, namely, to London, England, to attend a "Symposium on Freedom of Information" to be held on April 29, 1976, by the All-Party Committee on Freedom of Information of the British House of Commons.

Respectfully submitted,

EUGENE A. FORSEY,

Joint Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

[Translation]

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I ask for leave of the Senate now because we are dealing with an urgent matter since the trip is to take place or at least start before the next sitting of the Senate. The question we are dealing with concerns an order of reference from the House of Commons. This may not be our business but the committee needs the permission, the approval of the Senate before sending one of its members to a meeting, in my view a very important one, in London for about a week. I hope the Senate will grant the permission which is required, this afternoon. Otherwise, it would be utterly useless.

Senator Flynn: Would the honourable senator mention who is to be sent over there?

Senator Forsey: We do not know yet, but it is not I as I happen to have a previous engagement.

Senator Flynn: If it were Senator Forsey, I would have no hesitation in giving my permission. However, in any case, let us take a chance.

Senator Forsey: This is the second blessing I have received from the Leader of the Opposition and I am deeply grateful to him.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move, seconded by Senator Perrault, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 27, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, I should like to give a brief explanation of this adjournment motion. In moving the adjournment of the Senate until Tuesday, April 27, I take into consideration that there is at present no legislation before the Senate, and it is very unlikely that any bill will reach us before next Wednesday. Even if we did receive legislation by that date, there would not then be sufficient time to proceed with it before both houses adjourned for Easter. However, there is still a great deal of work before our committees. I understand from the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce that a meeting of that committee has been scheduled for Wednesday, April 28, at 9.30 a.m. At this meeting the committee will commence its examination of Bill C-58.

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is still working on the advance study of the subject matter of Bill C-83, and the chairman of that committee has just informed me that this committee will be sitting on April 27 at 10.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the draft report on Canada Manpower under consideration, and the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is engaged in a study of Canada's relations with the United States.

If this motion is adopted, I propose to move, with leave of the Senate, that both the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee and the National Finance Committee be given power to sit during adjournments of the Senate. The committees on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Foreign Affairs, and Agriculture already have that power. This motion, if adopted, will enable the committees on Banking, Trade and Commerce and National Finance to sit during the adjournment should it be considered necessary.

There are two bills on the House of Commons Order Paper which should have reached us by the time we return on April 27. Bill C-20, an act respecting Citizenship, is at the report stage, and Bill C-61, the Maritime Code, is on the Order Paper for third reading.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, if some day there is logic reflected in the decision of the government with regard to the sittings of this house, I will probably drop dead from shock, which, I am sure, will be a relief to the Leader of the Government, or his deputy. I simply cannot understand why we are being invited to return on April 27 rather than on May 4.

Recently we attempted to reorganize the sittings of the Senate so as to provide extra time for the work of the committees. That was the main reason for the reorganization; there wasn't much before the Senate itself.

It appears to me unlikely, but I ask the question anyway: Is there any likelihood that legislation will have come from the other place when we return on April 27? If no legislation reaches us before next Wednesday, then it is very likely there will be none when we return on the 27th. That should be obvious.

The Deputy Leader of the Government has suggested that committees might meet while the Senate is not sitting. I do not know when all those sittings are to take place, but one thing I do know for sure: the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs had a program for next Tuesday, with everything already organized. If we really want to do something to help our committees, I suggest the proper thing to do would be to come back next week and then adjourn for two weeks or more.

The same thing applies with regard to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. The chairman said, in committee this morning, that he had organized a meeting for next Tuesday. What is he to do now, cancel everything and ask the witnesses to come some other time? We are quite obviously doing violence to the principle we tried to adopt just a few short weeks ago to the effect that Senate sittings would be arranged to give committees a chance to adjust their schedules and be assured of having members present.

I would think it would be more logical to either adjourn tonight and come back on May 4 or come back next week and then adjourn until May 4, but not to April 27. This is entirely illogical and contrary to everything that was recently said about the way we should proceed in future. I cannot understand this nonsense. It defies logic. And I trust I am not alone in thinking so.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I regret that I am unable to meet the wish of the honourable Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Flynn: It is not a wish of mine. I am simply trying to elicit something logical from you.

Senator Langlois: There is some logic in the explanation I gave earlier when I said that there were two bills to come to us before we return on April 27.

Senator Flynn: I am not speaking of legislation.

Senator Langlois: If we have legislation, we have to deal with it. It is our job in the Senate—

Senator Flynn: None will come.

Senator Langlois: —to deal with legislation when it comes to us.

● (1420)

Senator Flynn: None will come.

Senator Langlois: The House of Commons is coming back on Monday, April 26, but we will not be sitting until the following night, April 27, at eight o'clock.

Senator Flynn: And do you think in that short space of time they will send any bills to us?

Senator Langlois: They are already dealing with a bill on third reading and they may very well have third reading of that bill either on the Monday night or the Tuesday afternoon, and we, as I have said, are coming back only on the Tuesday evening at eight o'clock. We have been receiving assurances from the other place that we will have legislation to consider on the Tuesday.

Senator Flynn: Hah!

Senator Langlois: That is the only reason we are coming back on that Tuesday. I, myself, should have preferred taking the additional week off, and I would certainly hate to see the Senate recalled if it had no work before it, but the fact is that we have been told there will be work before this chamber, and in that event there is no alternative but to return in time to consider the matters placed before us.

Senator Flynn: You realize that according to my proposal we would be getting the same time off. I am simply saying that there will be no legislation available for us to consider on the 27th, whereas we have scheduled meetings of committees for next week. I would certainly not object if you wanted to adjourn today until May 4, in any event, but I would ask you not to be so illogical as to call us back on April 27 when it is quite obvious that, if nothing has reached us before next Wednesday, nothing will reach us for the 27th.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: On division, that's for sure.

Motion agreed to, on division.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING ADJOURNMENTS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Senator Flynn: Leave is granted, but we need explanations.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, since the Leader of the Opposition has asked for an explanation, may I say that, before any decision was reached on the adjournment motion we have just passed, the chairmen of committees were consulted. Two committee chairmen expressed the desire to sit during the adjournment, and since they had no power to do so it was necessary to bring forward a motion of this kind. The other committee making this request is the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs—I am sorry, I mean the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs already has the necessary power to sit during adjournments.

I am not a committee chairman. If the Leader of the Opposition wants further information, I will defer to the chairmen of these two committees and let them answer his questions. They know better than I do what their requirements are.

Senator Flynn: I'm sure they know that better than you do, and it is quite obvious from what the deputy leader said in speaking to the adjournment that those committees do not plan to sit before April 27. Obviously, therefore, they do not need permission to sit while the Senate is not sitting. I understand that the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee intends to meet on April 27, which is the day we will be returning. So it does not need that leave either.

Senator Langlois: Yes, it does.

Senator Flynn: No, it does not.

Senator Langlois: I am sorry to disagree with the Leader of the Opposition, but, when an adjournment is for more than one week, no committee may sit unless it has been given specific authority to do so.

Senator Flynn: But the Senate will be sitting on the 27th.

Senator Langlois: But only at night. The committee intends to sit in the morning, and it will not be able to.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Langlois: Because of the rules of our house.

Senator Flynn: When the Senate sits on the same day as a committee, any committee may sit. It does not need special permission.

Senator Langlois: I am sorry, but your interpretation of the rule is wrong.

Senator Flynn: I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to clarify the situation so far as his committee is concerned.

Senator Langlois: His committee already has power to sit during adjournments, so he does not need to ask for it.

Senator Flynn: Are you not asking for it?

Senator Langlois: No, not for the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. That committee already has power to sit.

Senator Flynn: I therefore ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to explain what plans the committee has for the next couple of weeks.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: This question is not at an end, Madam Speaker, with due respect. We do not have to rush. We have ample time. We have nothing to do this afternoon, apparently, except to discuss this matter. I would therefore like to ask someone from the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to explain this motion, since the deputy leader says he does not know the reason for it.

Senator Macnaughton: Honourable senators, the chairman of the committee is not here at the moment. I was under the impression that we would not be sitting, but perhaps he has other plans. He certainly has not told me about it, or, I believe, the Leader of the Opposition either; but I suppose there is no harm in having this residuary power, and I do not see that it would create any harm.

Senator Desruisseaux: May I add that I spoke with Senator Hayden just before we opened this meeting, and he informed me that the date of April 28 was set for the minister to appear. We have had trouble over the last week or so with regard to a date for this meeting. Senator Hayden mentioned also that if the Senate were to recess until May 4, he would contact the deputy chairman and the minister and set another date.

Senator Flynn: This is exactly what I wanted the record to show; namely, that the plan of the Banking,

Trade and Commerce Committee was to have the minister appear on April 28.

Senator Langlois: I have announced that meeting.

Senator Flynn: For the 28th. So you do not need this motion at all. The purpose of the motion is simply to cover up the illogical proposal which was made before, and I suggest that there is no point in adopting this motion simply to make the deputy leader appear to know what he is talking about.

Senator Langlois: The last comment of my honourable friend is uncalled for, and is not worthy of him.

Senator Flynn: It is what you said yourself.

Senator Langlois: I said that we had consulted the chairman of the committee, and this is what he had suggested. I am not one who sends out notices of meetings; but we have been asked to do this, and it has been my reaction for a long time, when I get a request of this kind from a committee chairman, to cooperate with him as much as possible.

Senator Flynn: I do not object to that, as long as your cooperation is needed. None is needed in the present case, and I dare any member of that committee to say that we need to sit before April 28.

Senator Langlois: Question!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING ADJOURNMENTS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: To put the motion only, surely.

Senator Grosart: Explain.

Senator Hicks: When is it contemplated that the committee will sit?

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I do not wish to prolong the discussion any longer than is necessary, but if the Senate is going to meet on April 27, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, although this is not decided as yet, might want to meet on the morning or afternoon of the same day. It seems to me that if it is proposed to adjourn the Senate until 8 p.m. on April 27, we would not have the authority to meet earlier that day as a committee. That is my understanding of the situation.

As deputy chairman of this committee, and speaking in place of the chairman, I would hope that we would be able to schedule a meeting for the purpose of hearing witnesses from the Department of Manpower and Immigration on Tuesday, April 27, prior to 8 p.m.

[Senator Flynn.]

• (1430)

Senator Flynn: Does the deputy chairman not think it might be safer to sit on Monday night in order to have the members available to attend the meeting in the afternoon of April 27? From what we have been told before, that is the reason why we began sitting on Monday nights. What has the deputy chairman to say about that?

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, I would think that if we do schedule a meeting of that important committee for these important hearings, then we will not have any problem in having senators turn up for the hearings even if the Senate does not sit until Tuesday night. It is not my intention at this particular time to discuss the merits of whether the original decision to sit on Monday night was good or bad.

Senator Flynn: So you are not satisfied that we have to sit on Monday night in order that committees may be adequately manned on Tuesday morning.

Senator Perrault: Stop leading the witness.

Senator Flynn: Senator Perrault is not a lawyer and shouldn't try to behave as if he were in court. If he persists, I will be forced to challenge him on his knowledge of the subject.

Senator Langlois: Stop making challenges.

Senator Flynn: Seriously, honourable senators, it seems ridiculous when the Senate is sitting at night, that we should have to give leave for a committee to sit that very afternoon. Normally when we sit on any day, then any committee has the power to sit on that same day. It is not because the Senate is not sitting at a given hour that a committee does not have power to sit. Anyway, in summary I would say that this whole matter of the adjournment and the power of committees to sit during adjournment has been completely bungled by the deputy leader and the leader.

Motion agreed to, on division.

LAW CLERK AND PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL TO THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF RAYMOND L. DU PLESSIS, ESQUIRE, Q.C.

Senator Laird, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That Raymond L. du Plessis, Esquire, Q.C., be appointed Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel to the Senate effective 1st January, 1976.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Laird: Honourable senators, by way of a brief explanation, I think most of us are acquainted with the work of Mr. du Plessis, who was seconded to us from the Department of Justice some months ago to assist the then Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, E. Russell Hopkins. We have been able to arrive at suitable and satisfactory arrangements with Mr. du Plessis. I should mention that we do not set his salary; that is done by Order in Council. Of course, it is not divulged in these circumstances, but it is satisfactory. Since it has been the practice in the past for the Law Clerk appointed by the Internal Economy Committee to have his appointment confirmed by resolution, I now move confirmation of the appointment of Mr. du Plessis as Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel.

Senator Flynn: I can say, having watched Mr. du Plessis since he has been seconded to the Senate, that I heartily endorse the motion. I am sure that the Senate will be well served by him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, pursuant to an order of the Senate of yesterday, I shall now call Inquiry No. 1, respecting the British North America Act as it pertains to transportation, and standing in the name of the Honourable Senator Bonnell.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I did not know this afternoon whether I was in the Senate or in the other place.

Senator Flynn: Were you in the other place?

Senator Bonnell: I came to the conclusion after a while that there was a filibuster taking place to make sure that I did not catch my flight. However, let me say that as I read the Minutes of the Proceedings today I did not gain the impression that any notice had been taken of the point I made yesterday when I asked that this item stand. I asked that it be the first item of business for today, and for each succeeding day until disposed of. It does not appear on today's Orders of the Day, but remains under Inquiries. My adjournment went back to Inquiries. I then read the Debates of the Senate for yesterday to see what I had said, which is as follows:

I ask that this inquiry stand, and that it be the first item of business tomorrow—

That, apparently, was carried unanimously by the Senate without a dissenting voice. It was put by the Speaker, and agreed to. I looked at the Order of Business, which indicated that this would come first, followed by Presentation of Petitions, Reading of Petitions, and so forth. However, it was not my intention that this should be the first Order of Business, but the first Order of the Day. Allow me to say that Her Honour the Speaker very graciously postponed the Orders of the Day and allowed Inquiries to proceed, so I shall bow to her gracious ruling. My point is that I wish to straighten out the records of the Senate. My motion was that it be the first Order of the Day, and it should have been the first Order of the Day, not placed under Inquiries.

It is my hope today to bring to the attention of the Senate the terms of the British North America Act as they affect transportation in Canada, with special emphasis on the province of Prince Edward Island.

To Prince Edward Island, transportation is probably one of the most important factors in its proper development and economic growth. The whole economy of the province is based on its ability to export its goods to the rest of Canada and foreign markets, and its ability to compete without elaborate transportation costs in the marketplace. It is also essential for Prince Edward Island to be able to develop and maintain its place in the economy of Canada, to be able to purchase its goods without elaborate transportation costs. It is for this reason that I believe that the time has come when the Government of Canada should place special emphasis on the transportation needs of Atlantic Canada, and more particularly of the province of Prince Edward Island.

Most of the things I shall mention today which have to do with transportation might well be said for Newfoundland, which is another island province and which also is very highly dependent upon transportation for its growth and development.

● (1440)

The British North America Act, which was the basis of the foundation of Canada and which was passed in 1867, provided for the union of the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick into the Dominion of Canada. It also provided:

It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on Addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, and from the House of the Legislature of the Colony ... of Prince Edward Island ... to admit [that colony] ... into the Union ... on such Terms and Conditions ... as are in the Addresses expressed and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the Provisions of this Act; and the Provisions of any Order in Council in that Behalf shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

An Order of Her Majesty in Council admitting Prince Edward Island into the union was approved at the Court at Windsor on June 26, 1873.

Under the Terms of Union, it was agreed:

That the Dominion Government shall—

It is not "maybe," or "would," or "could," but "shall."

—assume and defray all the charges for the following services, viz.:—

The salary of the Lieutenant-Governor;

The salaries of the Judges of the Superior Court and of the District or County Courts when established;

The charges in respect of the Department of Customs;

The Postal Department;

The protection of the Fisheries;

The provision for the Militia;

The Lighthouses, Shipwrecked Crews, Quarantine and Marine Hospitals;

The Geological Survey;

The Penitentiary;

Efficient Steam Service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, to be established and maintained between the Island and the mainland of the Dominion, Winter and Summer, thus placing the Island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the Dominion;

The maintenance of telegraphic communication between the Island and the mainland of the Dominion;

And such other charges as may be incident to, and connected with, the services which by the British North America Act, 1867, appertain to the General Government, and as are or may be allowed to the other Provinces;

That the railways under contract and in course of construction for the Government of the Island, shall be the property of Canada—

And so on. Finally:

That the provisions in the British North America Act, 1867, shall ... be applicable to Prince Edward Island, in the same way and to the same extent as they apply to the other Provinces of the Dominion, and as if the Colony of Prince Edward Island had been one of the Provinces originally united by the said Act.

Honourable senators, with that as background for the province of Prince Edward Island, I wish to say that the Government of Canada has been negligent in complying with the terms of union almost from the year in which the Order in Council was signed.

In the early history of Prince Edward Island, Canada wooed the Island delegates, and the federal delegation pledged that Canada would assume and defray all charges for an efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, to be established and maintained between the Island and the Dominion, winter and summer, thus placing the Island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of Canada. The Island colony refused to join, because there was no settlement of the land question—which was a burning question in Prince Edward Island in those days—but the essential communication feature was included in all future negotiations until Prince Edward Island became a province in 1873, and this communication pledge was incorporated in the Terms of Union.

The efforts of Island people to secure their constitutional right to efficient and continuous ferry services at the expense of Canada form a dominant theme in the province's relations with the Canadian government. Nearly 50 years of persistence was rewarded in 1917 by a daily car ferry service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, and it became an integral part of the transcontinental railway system of Canada.

During the first three years of Confederation, the Government of Canada subsidized the Island Steam Navigation Company for operating two paddle boats, one from Summerside to Shediac, New Brunswick, and the other from Charlottetown to Pictou, Nova Scotia. In December 1873, the government accepted a contract from James King of Halifax to run the Albert during the winter season between Georgetown and Pictou. This old wooden steamer was unable to cope with the ice, and so the Alexander Mackenzie government decided to purchase its own vessel. The Northern Light began 12 years of Island service on December 7, 1876. This service, which was inadequate, unsafe, and missed as many as 45 days during the winter months because of ice, was finally replaced by the Stanley on December 18, 1888, which provided a much better service but it was still quite inadequate. Even the Stanley missed crossings on 43 different days during the winter season.

[Senator Bonnell.]

At this time an honourable member of this house, a Conservative from Prince County, Prince Edward Island, by the name of Senator Howlan, resigned his seat in the Senate to contest the Prince County seat with a view to supporting a tunnel to New Brunswick from Prince Edward Island. Senator Howlan declared that upon his success at the polls depended the future of the tunnel project. Howlan was defeated, and was reappointed to the Senate. As usual, with the dust of the election settled, the tunnel was soon forgotten.

In 1898 the Laurier government added another steamer to assist the Stanley. The new steamer, the Minto, like the Stanley before it, had the effect of temporarily appeasing the Islanders and removing the idea of a tunnel further from the sphere of party politics.

In 1909, the Government of Canada supplied the Earl Grey, which commenced service between Charlottetown and Pictou on December 30, 1909, replacing the Stanley, which was transferred to the New Brunswick agency of the Department of Marine. The Minto continued on the Georgetown route and the two steamers, in their first season together, kept up continuous communication, so that the ice boats were not employed.

On October 16, 1917, the Department of Marine transferred its vessels to the Department of Railways and Canals. A railway link with the Island was forged—the 38 miles of the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway from Sackville to Cape Tormentine—and the first daily car ferry service between Cape Tormentine and Borden was inaugurated on that date, nearly 50 years after the original pledge.

From October 16, 1917, until the present day many steamships and motor vessels have been used in the service. The Scotia I started operation in November 1920, the Charlottetown in 1931, the motor vessel Abegweit in 1947, and the motor vessel Confederation in 1962. In 1963 the Prince Nova commenced service between Wood Islands and Caribou, Nova Scotia. There were the John Hamilton Gray and the Lucy Maud Montgomery in 1968, and the Holiday Island and Vacationland in 1971. In 1973 the motor vessel Prince Edward operated between Wood Islands and Caribou.

My reason for giving this history of transportation problems between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is to show that since Confederation it has been felt by most Islanders that they have not received an efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers, both winter and summer. We feel that these ferries should not be stopped by other than natural disaster; that they should not be stopped because of strikes or any other reason; that the Government of Canada is obliged to operate them regardless of national strikes. The province of Prince Edward Island has been neglected and given the run-around by the Government of Canada, regardless of the political party in power, since Confederation. The province of Prince Edward Island has been promised, from time to time, tunnels, causeways, and continuous and efficient services, but on each occasion over the last century those pledges by the Government of Canada have not been fulfilled.

● (1450)

One of the reasons I want to bring this to the attention of the Senate at this time is that there is a rumour predominant in Prince Edward Island these days to the effect that the federal government proposes to increase transportation rates on passengers, vehicles and freight using the CNR ferries. In my opinion, such an increase should not be contemplated on the ground that under the Terms of Union between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada the federal government was to defray all cost in connection with the maintenance of these ferries.

There are those who will say that this does not mean it cannot impose a charge on those using the service. I say it means that the people of Prince Edward Island, and those who intend to visit Prince Edward Island, as well as the shippers, the importers and exporters of Prince Edward Island, should not have to pay this cost. It is a cost which should be defrayed out of general revenues. In other words, it is my contention that the people of Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, British Columbia and Manitoba, and the other provinces that joined Confederation later, should share the cost of operating those ferries, and the burden should not be placed on the people of Prince Edward Island and its visitors.

I further contend that the Government of Canada should make extra financial payments to Prince Edward Island in lieu of the fact that it has not carried out its promises over the years since Confederation. The economy of Prince Edward Island has been injured and almost destroyed because of the poor, inadequate and undependable service by the Dominion of Canada as pledged by the Order in Council of June 26, 1873.

It is also my belief that when the Government of Canada considers raising the rates for Prince Edward Islanders going from one province to another, for those wishing to visit Prince Edward Island, and for those wishing to import into or export goods from Prince Edward Island, it is not doing justice as pledged in the Constitution under that Order in Council. I wonder if the Government of Canada is planning to increase the Seaway tolls or the Crowsnest Pass grain rates.

I should also like to suggest that the ferries between Prince Edward Island and the mainland be considered extensions of the trans-Canada highway system and be treated in the same way as any mainland section of that network. No fee should be charged for crossing the boundary from one province to another. Any increase in the ferry rates would only add to the already unfavourable conditions that now exist, and it is well known that the ferry system is vital to all segments of the Atlantic Region economy.

We cannot, and we must not, be led down the garden path by the Government of Canada into a "user-pay" concept in the transportation system between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Increases in the ferry rates constitute an additional burden on Prince Edward Islanders—a burden which is not borne by the rest of Canada. Any action to increase the rates by the Government of Canada would subject Prince Edward Island to a substantial increase in transportation costs by virtue of its isolation from the mainland. This is completely unacceptable and should be given no further consideration by the Government of Canada. It is discriminatory and inconsistent with the spirit of the Terms of Union under which Prince Edward Island became a partner in Confederation.

I believe that this matter is important enough to be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications for study, with a visit by the members of that committee to Atlantic Canada to see firsthand the problems of transportation that exist. Perhaps they could then impress upon the government the need to maintain the status quo as far as costs and ferry rates are concerned, as well as the need to improve the general transportation system, the freight rate system, the highway system, the railway passenger system, the bus system, the air transport system, and so forth, in Atlantic Canada.

The former Minister of Transport, the Honourable Jean Marchand, appointed a high level committee, which was known as the Marine East Coast Co-ordinating Committee, whose purpose was to negotiate an agreement which would eliminate the possibility of ferry services being interrupted as a result of labour disputes. To this date, I have seen no report from that committee. I think that a report should be obtained on the progress achieved by it in negotiating an agreement whereby stoppages in ferry services owing to labour disputes could be eliminated. Further, I believe that the present Minister of Transport should be urged to do everything possible to expedite this process so that ferry services will not be interrupted by strikes in the future.

I could say a lot more concerning stoppages of the ferry services between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, but I do not want to get involved at this time in the question of whose responsibility it is to maintain continuous communications services to Prince Edward Island. This is a matter that has been before the courts and is now in the process of being appealed by the federal government. For that reason, I do not want to become involved in a discussion pertaining to the responsibilities and liabilities concerning stoppages in the area of communications.

Concerning transportation, I should like to point out that under the Terms of Union by which Prince Edward Island became part of Canada, the federal government took over the railroads of Prince Edward Island and gradually purchased the rail line from Sackville to Cape Tormentine, so that when the ferry of 1917 was inaugurated and the CNR took over operation of the ferries, the federal government paid all the operating costs and subsidized the railroad for any losses during that time.

At the time Prince Edward Island joined Canada in 1873, Part X, section 145 of the British North America Act was still in effect, and it asserted that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway was essential to the consolidation of Confederation.

Again, the degree to which Part X might be interpreted to have obligated the Government of Canada to provide Prince Edward Island with some form of rail connection with the mainland is unknown. Certainly, British Columbia, in negotiating the terms of her entry into Confederation, did not rely on the strength of Part X of the BNA Act. The Address of May, 1871, requesting the admission of British Columbia into the union, made it a specific condition of entry:

That the government of the Dominion undertake to secure the commencement simultaneously, within two years of the date of the Union, of the construction of a railway from the Pacific towards the Rocky Mountains, and from such point as may be selected, east of the Rocky Mountains, towards the Pacific, to connect the Seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada; and further, to secure the completion of such railway within ten years from the date of the Union.

When Prince Edward Island joined Confederation, the question of maintaining the rail traffic on the Island was not spelled out as directly as it was in the case of British Columbia, but by a general clause in the Address the Government of Canada undertook to assume and defray "such other changes as may be incident to, and connected with, the services which by the British North America Act, 1867, appertain to the General Government, and as are or may be allowed to the other Provinces." In this case, however, it would appear to be necessary to establish that Prince Edward Island did not have transportation services that were available to other provinces and that might reasonably be provided to the Island.

● (1500)

It is my contention that since October 1969, the Canadian National Railways have discontinued all railway passenger services in Prince Edward Island, and have expected the Island people to travel over Prince Edward Island roads by bus or private means. The freight transportation services by the CNR in Prince Edward Island at the present time are on the basis of three days a week—Monday, Wednesday and Friday—between Borden, Summerside and Tignish, and all other branch lines give service as and when required. I understand from some of our farmers in Prince Edward Island that it takes anywhere from five to seven days for Island potatoes to reach Canadian markets. I further understand that refrigerator cars are now being phased out. There will probably not be enough refrigerator cars to transport the whole, or even a good part, of the Prince Edward Island potato crop this year.

From discussions between the Potato Marketing Board and the Canadian National Railways, a pilot project evolved, with potatoes loaded into containers and moved by truck to Moncton, and thence by piggy-back to the Upper Canadian market. This mode of transportation could move potatoes to retailers' warehouses in three days. The movement of potatoes by road to other parts of Canada is probably the major area of concern to the Prince Edward Island Department of Highways.

A statement supplied to the Department of Industry of Prince Edward Island by the CNR indicates that there were 8,240 carloads of potatoes moved from Borden to Cape Tormentine in 1975. This may be translated into weight by assuming that each rail car is fully loaded to 55,000 pounds, and that a container unit is 40,000 pounds. This translates into about 11,000 container units of potatoes alone. The railway also states that there were 9,229 carload lots of other goods carried by the car ferry to and from this province.

The 1975 truck traffic by ferry, to and from this province, amounted to 103,930 trucks. If all the present rail carloads are translated into truckloads, this would mean an increase of about 20 per cent in truck volume on the Island highways.

According to figures released by the Canadian National Railways for 1975, it would take 21,489 additional trucks or vehicles of 40,000 pounds capacity each to move potatoes and other produce if Prince Edward Island had no rail system. Apparently, as of this date, no decision to abandon the railroads, or the date on which they are likely to be abandoned, has been made. Also we do not know how long after a decision is reached it will take to phase out the railroads in Prince Edward Island, but we do know that Mr. D. W. Blair, the CNR Vice-President of the Atlantic Region, stated in January of this year:

If alternate transportation can be found, the railroad will be phased out of Prince Edward Island.

We know that during the last five years, 22 of the 27 railway stations in Prince Edward Island have been closed. We also know that roadbed maintenance has deteriorated to the degree that all trains run on slow orders, in some areas at ten miles per hour. And we also know that railway passenger service was phased out ten years ago, and there are many other subtle indications that the railroads are leaving our province.

Honourable senators, it is my belief that if there is to be this extra truck traffic—an estimated 21,489 additional vehicles of 40,000 pounds each, which means an overall 20 per cent increase in use of the highways—the Government of Canada should give substantial support to the strengthening and maintenance of our highway system in the province to cope with this extra traffic and extra heavy traffic.

I also note that the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, in March 1976, reported as follows:

Rail piggy-back rates between the Atlantic Provinces and the Province of Ontario have been increased, effective March 19, 1976. The new rates on general merchandise as published by the CNR, CP Rail and Dominion Atlantic Railways, generally effect an 8 per cent increase in westbound traffic and a 9 per cent increase in eastbound traffic.

This increase in freight rates for piggy-back service will affect the marketing of Prince Edward Island potatoes if they are shipped by container service, truck and piggy-back to the central Canadian markets. It means an increase of 8 per cent in transportation costs for Prince Edward Island producers. Prince Edward Island importers and exporters are being penalized by this extra increase in rates.

I also noticed that the Honourable Dr. Ings, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry for Prince Edward Island, was reported in the Charlottetown Guardian of March 27, 1976—that is a Prince Edward Island paper that covers the island—as saying:

[The] maintenance and improvement of rail service in this Province is necessary in overcoming agricultural marketing problems . . . Transportation is the prime marketing obstacle facing Island producers.

The former Minister of Transport, the Honourable Jean Marchand, stated that the Ministry of Transport was in a mess. On June 16, 1975 he announced a new national transportation policy, and said that under that policy the Minister of Transport had a three-fold responsibility:

- (a) With full provincial development and support, to ensure the overall efficiency of the highway system on a national basis;
- (b) To ensure the appropriate level of balance between competing or complementary modes of transport;
- (c) To ensure a continuous transportation network in the national sense, both in terms of the highway network and in terms of its relationship to other modes.

He further stated that the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs was responsible for the development of the northern roads program and the infrastructures of both national parks and Indian reserves; and that it was the responsibility of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to improve accessibility to selected and isolated areas and to improve regional infrastructure and supportive services.

He also said that a number of highway programs that implement the new policy were already under way or in the planning process. That was in 1975, and they are as follows:

● (1510)

- 1. A road strengthening program for the three Prairie Provinces has been launched which involves a federal expenditure of $78.5 million over the next five years.
- 2. Interim agreements have been concluded and construction has begun on a western northlands highway.
- 3. A West Coast highway access study is planned.
- 4. Highway programs in Quebec and Ontario are also being discussed.
- 5. A study to determine the need for strengthening and upgrading major provincial highways in the Atlantic provinces is expected to get under way in the near future.

This new highway policy was announced by the Honourable Jean Marchand in June 1975 in the House of Commons—a new national transportation policy! This new policy triggered an upsurge in the hopes of Atlantic Canada that we could expect some federal assistance in this highway upgrading and strengthening program. Most of the ministers of the Atlantic provinces met with the present Minister of Transport, the Honourable Otto Lang, in March of this year but, to my knowledge, no decision has yet been reached by the Ministry of Transport as to the type of assistance that will be available to Atlantic Canada for upgrading and strengthening the highways.

The following news item appeared in the Charlottetown Guardian of March 27, 1976:

Highways Minister Bruce Stewart has repeated warnings about the possible impact of abandonment of rail lines on the Island: loss of train service would mean increased truck traffic and a threat to the province's highways.

"If I told you I don't know what we are going to do about it, that would be close to the truth," Mr. Stewart admitted in the legislature yesterday.

He said he met recently with federal Transportation Minister Otto Lang. Mr. Lang "has given a very favourable reception" to the Island's plea for assistance in rebuilding and strengthening highways.

The road-strengthening needed if train service is lost would take 10 years and cost almost $19 million, Mr. Stewart told the house. And that would be just to strengthen the main highways, not secondary roads.

It is my contention that the highway system of Prince Edward Island, which is a very important part of our transportation system, is inadequate. There have been continuing efforts by the province to encourage the federal government to participate in an upgrading and strengthening program, together with the construction of a by-pass around the city of Charlottetown. I believe that if Canadian National Railways is to be phased out of Prince Edward Island and truck container and piggy-back service is to be inaugurated, there should be some uniformity of the maximum gross loadings, the axle configuration, and overall regulations to permit the freedom of the trucking industry to travel through the Atlantic Region under a single set of regulations governing this mode of transport.

It is my belief that since the federal government paid subsidies for the losses of Canadian National Railways, and since Prince Edward Island under the Terms of Union is entitled to the same treatment as other provinces of Canada, and since the other provinces of Canada still maintain a railroad passenger and freight system, the Government of Canada should give financial aid for the upgrading and strengthening and maintenance of our Island highways. It should give extra compensation because of the fact that most of the heavy loads of potatoes and other produce will now be travelling over the Island highways rather than on the railroad, at great cost to the provincial government. Furthermore, the Government of Canada should look into the special needs of this Island province, taking into consideration its isolation as an island, its lack of railway services, its lack of railway passenger services, its lack of a provincial bus service, its increased cost of transportation because of the communication link with the mainland, and give special dispensation and compensation to the Government of Prince Edward Island and the people of Prince Edward Island for the construction of a uniform high-standard highway capable of meeting the requirements of the traffic offering. Trucks from other provinces can then continue to use our roads.

Honourable senators, I direct your attention to our need for adequate air services, our need for new accommodation at the Charlottetown airport, our need for the early construction of a new ice-breaking ferry for the Borden-Tormentine run—the Abegweit is now 20 years old—our need for more and larger ferries on the Wood Islands-Caribou run to Nova Scotia, and our need for a provincial bus transportation system to replace the train passenger system which has been abandoned.

I would like also to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the contract between Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Brotherhood of Transport and General Workers expired in December 1975. At this date, a new contract has not been signed and there is a possibility of another labour dispute arising during the process of negotiating for such contract. It is, therefore, imperative that every effort be put forward to secure a non-strike agreement covering the ferry services before the island provinces are once again subjected to the intolerable economic effects of a cessation of ferry services.

Following the last strike, the then Minister of Transport, the Honourable Jean Marchand, appointed a high level committee, which was known as the Marine East Coast Co-ordinating Committee, to attempt to negotiate an agreement which would eliminate the possibility of the ferry services being interrupted as a result of labour disputes. To date no report from this committee has been received, and the present status of those negotiations is unknown to me at this time.

Honourable senators, I believe that all these matters—the Government of Canada's anticipated increases in the ferry rates, the increased rates going into effect for piggy-back service to Ontario from Atlantic Canada, the possibility of cessation of service of Canadian National Railways in Prince Edward Island, the fact that all rail and bus passenger services have now disappeared from Prince Edward Island, and the fact that no guarantee has been received from the Government of Canada by the Province of Prince Edward Island or the other Atlantic provinces as to the amount of help it will provide to upgrade and standardize their roads to meet this extra traffic—warrant a full inquiry. And I believe that these matters should be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications for investigation. Perhaps the committee would be able to see at first hand the untenable position in which the province of Prince Edward Island in particular, and Atlantic Canada in general, has been placed, because of transportation difficulties, in respect of competing and maintaining a strong economy.

I shall leave these facts with you, hoping that other senators will speak on this issue. If it is felt that a motion to refer the matter to the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications is appropriate, then I shall be a strong supporter of it.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 27, at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN TEXTILE PROBLEMS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING
SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Wednesday, April 7, 1976.

On May 27, 1975, the following order of reference was made by the Senate:

"Pursuant to the Order of the Day, the Senate resumed the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to Canadian Textile Problems.

After debate,

The Honourable Senator Asselin, P.C., moved seconded by the Honourable Senator Choquette, that the subject-matter of the inquiry be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The question being put on the motion, it was—Resolved in the affirmative".

Pursuant to the above order of reference, your committee now presents its first report as follows:

The committee is of the opinion that immediate action can be taken by the government to alleviate the present malaise in the textile industry and, for this reason, is proceeding by issuing a first report on measures that can be instituted immediately pending a more detailed study which should bring about long-range solutions to the problem.

This report constitutes the result of the committee's examination and consideration of the written and verbal representations from the representatives of the textile industry, labour and management, and it takes into account the essence of the speeches made in the Senate on this subject.

Not all interested parties have appeared before the committee as yet, though all have been invited to do so. The presence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce before your committee has now been assured for April 28, and further, representatives of the Canadian Textile Importers Association have chosen to appear before the committee late in April.

This first report is based on the committee's interim study of the present textile problems after consideration of the evidence submitted as of this date to the committee. A further report may follow dealing with the long-range problems that may arise out of the evidence developed in subsequent hearings at which the minister and the Canadian Textile Importers Association are to be heard.

On May 14, 1970, the Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin, the incumbent Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, made known the Canadian Textile Policy in a document tabled in the House of Commons. On this occasion the minister made a brief statement of the highlights of the government's policy as contained in this document.

The minister's commentary included the reasons for the review by his department of the then present state of the textile industry in Canada and the world textile situation and the factors considered in establishment of the new policy. As reported in the Commons Debates of May 14, 1970, on page 6952, he said:

"In the first place, the restrictions by other industrialized countries lead to increased pressures from low-cost competition on the relatively open Canadian market."

and

"In the second place, other countries have severely limited the access of Canadian textile and clothing exports, and the attainment of full competitive potential in Canada has been limited by the slow progress in the liberalization of world trade in textiles."

The minister went on to say that two extreme policies, an open door policy and one of global containment had been considered and rejected.

The policy adopted was intended to provide a framework within which the industry could plan, invest and develop with more confidence. Its purpose was to create conditions in which the industry would continue to move progressively toward viable lines of production.

The minister stated that:

"... the government will be prepared, in cases of serious injury or threat of injury from low-cost imports, to accord special protection—unilaterally when necessary—in order to facilitate adjustment to or strengthening of the more viable lines of production."

Emphasis was placed on the industry planning to phase out the least competitive lines and concentrate on those with the highest competitive potential.

The committee's examination of the textile problem has exposed a most deplorable situation in the textile and clothing industries (hereafter referred to simply as the textile industry). At the present time the domestic industry is producing approximately 46% of the textile products consumed in Canada with the balance being imported. This situation has developed over a number of years, as shown by the following:

CANADIAN TEXTILE CONSUMPTION

Year	(million pounds of yarn equivalent weight)			Total Apparent Consumption	Percentage
	Production	Exports	Imports		Canadian	Import
1964	409	34	214	589	64	36
1969	455	40	339	754	55	45
1973	495	41	579	1033	44	56
1974	542	52	602	1092	45	55
1975	490	30	544	1004	46	54

It can be seen that import penetration into Canada has increased and is significantly higher than the U.S.A. (about 12%), the Common Market (about 20%) or Japan (about 10%). It should be observed that the import penetration has been accentuated even after the adoption of the textile policy in 1970.

The cause of this situation appears to be an unwillingness by the government to implement the textile policy in accordance with the aims of that policy, and in fact to promote almost an open-door policy. Further, restraints are imposed long after complaints are made by the industry. The restraint agreements are of a one-year duration and are not adequately policed. Furthermore, the items subject to restraint in Canada represent only 6 per cent of the total imports as compared to 70 per cent in the United States. At the time the textile policy was announced, restraints in Canada applied to 15 per cent of textile imports.

One of the major effects of the increase in imports has been and continues to be the reduction by domestic industry of its productive capacity. Plants have been closed and the labour force laid off. This has had a particularly severe effect due to the nature of the industry whereby in addition to a few major producers, there are many small companies situated in relatively small towns and cities in Quebec and Ontario, and the closing or reduction of such a company affects the economy of the whole town. The textile industry employs between 180,000 and 200,000 workers and in 1973 contributed 6.3 per cent of the value of Canadian manufacturing. The textile industry as a whole employs some 20 per cent of all manufacturing workers in Quebec, and it is also of primary importance in Ontario. It was submitted to the committee that 25,000 textile workers had lost their jobs in the past year and that unemployment among textile workers was 18 per cent in the second quarter of 1975 when the average seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for all Canadian workers was 7.2 per cent. These few statistics amply illustrate the importance of the textile industry in the Canadian economy.

It appears that if proper protection from imports were provided the domestic industry would have or would very quickly develop the capacity to satisfy a substantially larger proportion of Canadian requirements more in line with the U.S. situation where domestic industry produces approximately 88 per cent of total consumption. The industry has already been streamlined and at present operates at a high level of technology and efficiency. To be viable with its present capacity immediate steps must be taken to provide the industry with at least 65 per cent of the domestic market. Due to inadequate import barriers the industry's share is only 46 per cent of the domestic market. However, this 65 per cent could be significantly increased and Canadian consumers would appear to still have adequate access to low cost textile products available from abroad.

In his speech in the House of Commons in May 1970, referred to earlier, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce emphasized the following by reading directly from the document:

"Low cost measures would, wherever possible, be applied as at present by means of voluntary restraint agreements. However, in the case of undue delay or when the problem does not lend itself to a negotiated solution, unilateral measures such as global import quotas might be applied... it is proposed that the Export and Import Permits Act be amended to permit unilateral imposition of import licensing quotas in cases of serious injury or the threat of injuries."

It is obvious from the evidence presented that implementation of the policy has not met the intent set forth when announced, that not all available protective measures have been brought to bear on the problem, and those used have been ineffective. For instance, long delays are encountered between the time the injury is reported and a restraint agreement is negotiated, and recommendations made by the Textile and Clothing Board are often altered and diluted.

It would seem that consideration should now be given to effect an amendment to Canadian textile policy to assure some reasonable percentage of the Canadian market to the domestic industry and its labour force. In the meantime there are a number of measures and procedures available which could be used immediately to alleviate the current textile problems and thereby improve the industry labour situation, as follows:

(1) Under section 7 and subsection 8(2) of the Customs Tariff Act a surtax can be applied to imported products in order to prevent imports at disruptive prices. Section 7 was used in June 1970 on the importation of woven shirts.

(2) The Textile and Clothing Board would accelerate their inquiries as much as possible by whatever means available, including consideration of as many products as practicable in the course of each inquiry.

(3) The procedures by which recommendations of the Textile and Clothing Board are implemented could be accelerated and prompt actions enforced. There should be a time limitation within which action on the board's recommendations shall be taken by the minister.

(4) The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could institute a vigorous drive to negotiate as many long-term bilateral restraint agreements as possible. Such agreements should cover a broad range of products in order to afford maximum protection.

(5) Immediate monitoring of restraint agreements currently in force. A significant step in achieving this objective would be the inclusion of all products covered by these agreements on the Import Control List thereby requiring permits for their importation.

(6) Amendment could be made to the Export and Import Permits Act to allow the placing on the Import Control List of textile products subject neither to restraint agreements nor to a Textile and Clothing Board inquiry.

Respectfully submitted,

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 27, 1976

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE L. M. GOUIN

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, the Clerk of the Senate has been officially notified that one of our most distinguished colleagues, the Honourable Senator Leon Gouin, has tendered his resignation to His Excellency the Governor General. Senator Gouin was summoned to the Senate in November 1940, and at his retirement stood third on the list of senators according to seniority. During the more than 35 years he served in the Senate, he worked faithfully and thoroughly in both the Senate and its committees, and made a lasting contribution to the debates of this house. But as honourable senators are aware, his health had failed in recent years and he had reached a point where he no longer felt able to carry out his duties in the Senate in his usual conscientious manner.

Leon Mercier Gouin was born in Montreal and is the son of the late Sir Lomer Gouin, who was, in turn, Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, federal Minister of Justice, and Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec.

Senator Gouin is a barrister, an honoured member of the Quebec Bar and author of note. He was a professor at the University of Montreal and the University of Ottawa. During the Second World War he served overseas with the Educational Service of the Canadian Armed Forces. He is Commander of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem and Chevalier of the French Legion of Honour, member of the Royal Society of Canada and Alliance Française.

Senator Gouin is a man of many talents who has served his city, his province and Canada faithfully and well. He is a kind man, a gentle man. We wish him all the very best and all that is good in his retirement. We shall most certainly miss him.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government pointed out, Senator Gouin sat in this chamber for over 35 years. His was a remarkable career in the Senate and in his profession as well as in his quasi-professional and quasi-political activities.

He comes from a well-known family in Quebec and in Canada, since his father, Sir Lomer Gouin, was Premier of the Province of Quebec, Minister of Justice in the federal government and Lieutenant Governor of Quebec. I am sure he would smile at my mentioning his brother Paul who, at a crucial time in the political history of Quebec, played a very important role.

Called to the Bar some fifty years ago, he practiced his profession actively until just a few years ago. As professor at the University of Montreal, and at the University of Ottawa, he published several outstanding works. A gentleman in the old tradition, his interventions in the Senate, as in all his activities, always bore the stamp of great objectivity and consideration. Pleasant to deal with, he has only friends in the Senate; we all regret that his health should have forced him to turn in his resignation.

He may rest assured that we will remember him with fondness, that we shall always be pleased to have him visit us and that we wish him long years of happy and fruitful retirement.

Hon. Sarto Fournier: Honourable senators, if you would allow me—I am not given to praising people who are leaving us for one reason or another but in the case of Senator Gouin, that is another matter.

I became acquainted with the Gouin family when I was a little boy living in the small Beauce parish. Hanging on the wall of our living room was the portrait of his father, Sir Lomer Gouin, and the impression I retained of this face has enabled me to follow the evolution of the Gouin family. I became aware that a young man named Léon, who was to become our colleague, Senator Gouin, had succeeded at an early age to attract the attention and respect of the highest authorities in this country, particularly in the field of constitutional law. He had written a thesis or an article which had attracted Sir Wilfrid Laurier's attention, and Sir Wilfrid congratulated him on the way his young brain had so well comprehended the affairs of our country. It is thus that our colleague, Senator Gouin, started on his political career, by rising in depth, if I may so phrase it.

I have followed his development, his dedication as a teacher, a barrister, a senator, a scout before the war, during the war and after the war and I believe that we must bow respectfully to him today, and we are happy to be able to do so because we are doing it during his lifetime. Usually, we bow before the grave of someone who has just died. In the case of Senator Gouin, we readily pay tribute to his career, to his merits, to his works. At the same time we must point out that the contribution of his wife is partly responsible for his success in life. We are pleased to rejoice with him. Anyhow, for my part, I must add with much admiration and sincerity that he has lived in a world where the best things are doomed to the worst fate and he is a man who has united a superior intelligence to an exhaustive knowledge of mankind and things.

We will feel his absence, we will regret it. However, his contribution is a work of devotion and courage which invites, urges and orders us to carry on what he undertook for the well-being and the prosperity of Canadians.

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) had been substituted for that of Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate) on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

MOTOR VEHICLE TIRE SAFETY BILL

COMMONS AMENDMENTS—CONSIDERATION NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-8, respecting the use of national safety marks in relation to motor vehicle tires and to provide for safety standards for certain motor vehicle tires imported into or exported from Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another, and acquainting the Senate that they had passed the bill with the following amendments to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

1. Page 1, line 8. Strike out line 8 and substitute the following therefor:

"business of selling in more than one province or country to other persons, for"

2. Page 3, lines 1 and 2. Strike out lines 1 and 2 and substitute the following therefor:

"national tire safety mark and, without restricting"

3. Page 3, line 33. Strike out line 33 and substitute the following therefor:

"prescribe;"

4. Page 3, lines 36 to 42. Strike out lines 36 to 42 and substitute the following therefor:

"facturer, that he establish a registration system by which any person who has purchased a motor vehicle tire manufactured by him and who wishes to be identified may be identified; and

(f) prescribe the kind of registration system to be established for the purpose of paragraph (e) and the manner in which it shall be maintained."

5. Page 4, line 4. Strike out line 4 and substitute the following therefor:

"5. No manufacturer shall"

6. Page 5, line 3. Strike out line 3 and substitute the following therefor:

"into Canada;"

7. Page 5, lines 25 to 31. Strike out lines 25 to 31 and substitute the following therefor:

"(ii) the importer establishes a registration system by which any person who has purchased a motor vehicle tire imported by him and who wishes to be identified may be identified; and

(c) prescribing the kind of registration system to be established for the purpose of subparagraph (b) (ii) and the manner in which it shall be maintained."

8. Page 5, line 36. Strike out line 36 and substitute the following therefor:

"facturer or importer of a motor"

9. Page 6, lines 1 to 5. Strike out lines 1 to 5 and substitute the following therefor:

"(a) any person who has obtained, for the purpose of sale or resale, a tire manufactured or imported by him,

(b) any purchaser of that tire of whom the manufacturer or importer of that tire has a record,"

10. Page 6, line 11. Strike out line 11 and substitute the following therefor:

"(a) be given by certified mail"

11. Page 7, lines 1 and 2. Strike out lines 1 and 2 and substitute the following therefor:

"any person who has been designated as an inspector pursuant to the Motor Vehicle Safety Act."

12. Page 7, line 14. Strike out line 14 and substitute the following therefor:

"tion 4 or 7 that is to be offered for sale and that is owned by or situated on"

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move that these amendments be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CITIZENSHIP BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-20, respecting citizenship.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

FREE TRADE

AN ECONOMIC CONSIDERATION FOR CANADA—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux calling the attention of the Senate to the question of total free trade as an economic consideration for Canada.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I was told by Senator Grosart that he did not intend to speak in this debate. If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, perhaps this inquiry may be considered as having been debated.

The Hon. the Speaker: Debate concluded.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

REPORT OF MINISTRY OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux rose pursuant to notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (Part I, Corporations) for the fiscal periods ended in 1973, tabled in the Senate on 9th March, 1976.

He said: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and pursuant to rule 23, I ask that the inquiry standing in my name be modified by striking out the period after "1976" and adding the following:

and the Report of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (Part II, Labour Unions) for the fiscal periods ended in 1973, tabled in the Senate on 2nd December, 1975.

I ask this so that I am able to explain both matters in relation to the points I have in mind.

• (2020)

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Desruisseaux: This is not an important amendment, but it will enable me to make some observations which I hope will serve a constructive purpose. These reports are compiled pursuant to section 18 (1) of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, passed in April 1962 and amended in 1965. They were prepared by the Dominion Statistician for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister presented the Part I report to His Excellency the Governor General in January 1976. It was then printed and published in February 1976, and tabled in the Senate on March 9, 1976. The Part II report, respecting labour unions, had followed the same route a few months earlier.

The purpose of these reports is to assemble financial and other information concerning the affairs of certain corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada. Such information is necessary to evaluate the extent and effects of the association of Canadians with international labour unions. This information is hardly traceable in the Part I report because of the confidential status given a good part of the filed returns, and the absence of requests for such information under the act from the corporations to which it is applicable. All who fall under this act are required to file the applicable information within a limited time—at most a few months after the end of the year. My question is: Why must the people of Canada wait some three years for these two annual reports to reach them?

In reviewing the production of these reports, we find that the Part I report was submitted by the Dominion Statistician to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in January 1976, and was presented in accordance with the act to His Excellency the Governor General in January 1976. The report was promptly printed and published in February 1976, and was tabled in the Senate on March 9, 1976. The Part II report followed the general pattern as to time, shortly before the Part I report.

It must be recognized that the content of the Part I report had been regularly expanded and improved over the years. It now gives us financial ratios and production statistics, an analysis of industrial research and development, information on charitable donations, and certain new information on federal and provincial income tax, as well as an extended analysis on tax positions of foreign- and Canadian-controlled corporations. All this information would have been so much more helpful had it been updated, as it could well have been.

There have been only insignificant changes in the last decade in the Part II report, respecting labour unions. The Part I report now includes publication of income balance sheets and retained income statements of corporations. It is a constructive initiative which must be recognized, and the Dominion Statistician and his staff should be commended for these helpful improvements.

But what is the real value of three-year-old statistical information in Parts I and II in making an appraisal of corporations and labour unions? There is a three-year vacuum in the information. It would appear to me that in this computer age a three-year time lag in gathering and arranging statistics and preparing observations for these reports hardly demonstrates the high level of efficiency of which Statistics Canada is capable. In my opinion, there is ground for improvement there.

In its foreword, the Part I report points out that it is intended to collect and make available information on the affairs of certain corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada. We see too little of the latter in the non-confidential Part I report. It is not even traceable in the Part II report that is available to us. The Part II report does not provide the important information to which the people of Canada are entitled. In any circumstances, statistical information that is three years old is not really helpful. It has become obsolete, and is unusable in any discussion of the effects of the association of Canadians with international labour unions.

In my view the 1962 act requiring information, as amended in 1965, should now be reviewed, revamped and streamlined, because the status of confidentiality given the returns of international unions is, in my view, over-protection against the interest of Canadians, and is too restrictive in respect of much of the information to which the Canadian people are entitled.

● (2030)

In the light of current problems, answers to a whole new set of questions are necessary, especially in this particular field. It is my belief that the necessary information can be compiled and made available much more quickly than is currently the case, thereby allowing us to make better and more efficient use of it. The people of Canada are entitled to know much more than is revealed in the two reports to which I have referred. Information regarding the financial activities in Canada of international labour unions should be provided in the same way as it is provided in respect of the financial activities of multinational corporations. Some areas need to be aired.

For example, we should know the amounts collected by way of levies, union dues, fees, and assessments of all types on the wages of union members, and whether such deductions from wages are with or without the approval of the workers. We should know what portion of such assessments is spent in Canada, and what portion is transferred and used at will outside of Canada. We should know how the amounts received are earmarked—for whom and for what purpose, and with what authorization by the members of such international unions—and how such amounts are accounted for in the financial statements and returns of the international labour unions. The Canadian public needs answers to these and many other important questions with which we are now faced.

I raise these points in discussing the usefulness of 1973 information being made available in March 1976 to show, first of all, that the 1962 act, as amended in 1965, is presently in need of a general overhaul. It should now be reviewed with the aim of making it more useful and more informative to the public of Canada; secondly, in the hope that we can, in the future, have this information more promptly; thirdly, to alert all here to the rather restricted access we now have to important information concerning international labour unions operating in Canada, which unions are transferring funds obtained from Canadians out of the country; and, finally, to point to the need for revealing more quickly and more generally such information to interested Canadian workers who are members of international unions, the Canadian general public and various governmental officials.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

I have brought this matter to the attention of the Senate purely and simply as a constructive move, because I believe that this act should now be reviewed and amended.

I may be incorrect in some of my assessments. In any event, I believe that when 1973 information is not available until March of 1976, it is, by that time, quite obsolete.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Honourable Maurice Bourget, P.C., Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Parliamentary Librarian for the fiscal year 1974-75.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Directorate for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1975, pursuant to section 13 of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, Chapter F-25, R.S.C. 1970.

Report of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency for the year ended December 31, 1975, including its financial statements and the auditors' report thereon, pursuant to section 31 of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, Chapter 65, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of document entitled "An Energy Strategy for Canada—Policies for Self-Reliance" and summary of the strategy paper, together with notes for a statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the House of Commons on April 27, 1976, and a press release thereon.

AIR TRANSPORT

FLIGHT DELAYS DUE TO LABOUR DISPUTE—QUESTION

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Presently, a number of personnel in the Ministry of Transport are negotiating wage settlements with the Treasury Board. I refer, in particular, to inspectors who are responsible for aircraft maintenance and renewal of pilots' licences. Can the leader tell us how many flights, both national and international, have been delayed or cancelled because of invalidated pilots' licences?

Secondly, it has been the normal custom of airlines to protect scheduled passengers who have had their flights either delayed or cancelled, by giving them priority on the next flight two or three hours later. Are the airlines following this practice during this labour dispute?

Senator Perrault: Senator, I can verify the fact that at least one flight has been affected by actions of the inspectors. At the same time I am able to provide some information about what may be termed a tactic being employed by certain personnel who are employed by the Ministry of Transport to undertake inspection duties. I will make a more complete statement at a later date, if it is the wish of the honourable senator to have further particulars about some of the more detailed aspects of his question.

● (1410)

But may I say by way of personal testimony that this is the first opportunity I have had to explain the circumstances surrounding the interception of one Air Canada flight to the west coast, following the departure of senators from Ottawa for the Easter break. The aircraft in which I found myself a passenger was stopped at Winnipeg airport by a Ministry of Transport inspector who alleged that the co-pilot's medical certificate was not in order. The co-pilot in question, I learned subsequently, had met all the requirements for renewal and had recently passed a flight safety check and medical examination. There was a good reason for the renewal not having gone through: a refusal by flight inspectors in Montreal and Toronto to process it because of the labour dispute which has existed for some time between the inspectors working for the Ministry of Transport and the Treasury Board.

I was notified early in the conversation with this particular inspector that he and his associates were very unhappy with the Anti-Inflation Board. I said that as a passenger on this aircraft travelling with 196 other people I felt I had a public responsibility to act on their behalf. I said I was making no special plea for myself but that I felt that to intercept an aircraft in this fashion—especially with many elderly people going to the west coast for their Easter holiday to visit with their sons and daughters, and with many mothers travelling with their youngsters—created a situation which should be resolved, if possible. I told the inspector that I felt that his point about a labour dispute had been made in a rather definite and dramatic manner, but that I hoped that we could get together and find a way to get the aircraft moving again.

I said I was at the airport and would like to work with him as a fellow public servant to try to get the aircraft going. The inspector said, however, that he had felt unwell that evening and had gone home early and was not inclined to come back to the airport to assist in the resolution of the problem. I said, "Do you have any other associates who may be able to assist?" He said that he was not inclined to offer any solutions to the problem. I asked, "Could you arrange for a temporary permit to allow this aircraft to move out to the west coast?" He said he was not able to do that either. He said that he felt there were no other DC-8 qualified pilots in the Winnipeg area, and he did not see much point to my efforts. But he said he felt he must report our conversation to the leaders of his trade union. I suggested that he had that right and I spelled my name so that he would know exactly to whom he was speaking. Our conversation concluded on what I considered to be a civil and non-acrimonious note.

I then contacted an MOT medical officer in the Winnipeg area in an attempt to persuade him to come to the Winnipeg airport to give the pilot a health check. The medical authority was most cooperative. However, he said he was unable to do the examination because the pilot's medical records were in Montreal. I then called the Deputy Minister of Transport in Ottawa. He was unable to help. Earlier I had contacted an assistant deputy as well as other departmental officials, but they were unable to be of assistance.

I do not wish to be tedious or repetitious, but the long and short of it is that I believe the action to stop the flight represented a rather unfair tactic for this particular group to apply against a group of innocent people unable to help themselves in difficult circumstances. As I have said, this was a time when the aircraft was loaded with Easter travellers.

The basis of the inspectors' action is a labour problem which has continued for some time, one aspect of which is the fact that the flight inspectors want a wage settlement which exceeds the anti-inflation guidelines. Certainly, as members of organized labour, these people have a right to bargain as vigorously as they are able to do in order to achieve their settlement; but I must say that I question the tactic of stopping an aircraft under the circumstances which existed on the evening of Thursday, April 15, especially the inconvenience caused to 196 passengers, many of whom were very old or very young, and who obviously felt the effects of such a lengthy delay.

I want to add this, that at no point in the news coverage of this particular incident was I contacted by any member of the news media, with the exception of the Vancouver Sun. The CBC, I understand, carried a report on its news services comparing my attempt to get this aircraft flying again with the so-called judges affair. I feel that this kind of comparison—if it was made—represents an extreme example of communications irresponsibility. I think that had any senator or any member of Parliament found himself or herself in a similar position he or she would have had a public responsibility to assist the passengers of the grounded aircraft.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Perrault: I can only say that I would adopt similar procedures should I find myself in similar circumstances.

If the news media are interested, I would like them to know that I made extensive notes of all my conversations, having learned over a rather long political career that one is wise to do so in view of questions that may be asked subsequently.

Senator Phillips: This does not reply fully, in any sense, to your excellent question but I do welcome the opportunity to explain my personal position.

Senator Argue: I would point out to the Leader of the Government that there is no representative of the press in the gallery at the moment, and in my view they are not fulfilling their public function and responsibility.

Senator Flynn: May I ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government? Did he feel that he was some kind of a hostage in the hands of the mediators?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. He referred to the judges affair. It is my understanding that the Prime Minister laid down certain directives to cabinet ministers following those events. Has the Prime Minister laid down certain directives on strikebreaking?

Senator Perrault: Well, honourable senators, I really do not know what the purport of the question is. Certainly any activities I engaged in at Winnipeg airport did not constitute strikebreaking in any way, but were rather an attempt to assist a long suffering public.

The guidelines laid down by the Prime Minister with respect to contacts with judges, of course, are very well known. It is not the practice of any member of the government, and not, I think, of any member of this chamber, wherever he or she may sit, to engage in strikebreaking; but often where clearly the public interest is involved we do have a responsibility to attempt to be helpful.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSSIBLE RCMP INVESTIGATION—QUESTION

Senator Greene: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Honourable the Leader of Her Majesty's Government in the Senate. Could the leader tell us whether the RCMP is inquiring into the question of whether any illegal or improper inducements, rewards, payments or pay-offs are being offered to members of the Parti Cr ditiste to join the Progressive Conservative Party in the province of Quebec?

Senator Perrault: It may be that the Leader of the Opposition may wish to take this question as notice.

Senator Flynn: The question cannot be put to me, as honourable senators know, but I think Senator Greene should put a supplementary question. I think he should ask whether anything has been done in this respect by the Liberal Party over the years, in view of the actions taken by the Social Credit Party in supporting the government, and even reversing its position in the House of Commons in order to save the government.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, April 8, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Bonnell calling the attention of the Senate to the British North America Act as it pertains to transportation.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like first of all to thank and to congratulate Senator Bonnell for raising this matter as an inquiry in the Senate. His remarks were informative and helpful, and, indeed, they contained a great deal of food for thought. There were two main aspects to the inquiry: there was first the CNR-operated car ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and, secondly, the CNR in relation to the threatened withdrawal of services in the Maritimes.

As Senator Bonnell pointed out, the act of 1873 requires that the federal government shall defray and assume all the expenses of operating a continuous car ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. At the present time the federal government assumes a deficit in the car ferry operation. The right of the federal government to charge for this service has been a subject of debate ever since the inception of that service. Senator Bonnell was very emphatic in stating that the federal government did not have the right to charge for the car ferry service, and that the car ferries should be considered as being part of the trans-Canada highway. In this he has the unanimous support of all provincial governments in the Atlantic provinces.

I support Senator Bonnell in his viewpoint, and I would point out that the schedule to the act states that the federal government shall assume and defray all expenses concerning the car ferry operation. The word "expenses" includes a great deal more than just assuming the deficit. I further submit that the deficit should not be a matter of consideration in times of restraint. In the past the deficit has been allowed to increase as traffic increased, and has not been affected in previous periods of restraint.

When the restraint program was announced, the Treasury Board began considering the estimates of various departments. It looked at the Ministry of Transport and noticed the section dealing with the Maritime subsidies. This aspect of the matter attracted their attention, and I do not need to tell you the result. The subsidy under the Maritime Freight Rates Act was reduced, and the subsidy granted to the East Coast Marine Services of the CNR was also reduced, the total reductions amounting to $25 million. If one looks at the estimates of the Ministry of Transport, one finds contained therein a large element of subsidies for airports and national harbours boards. There are also various bridge subsidies. But none of these was reduced.

Senator Bonnell has referred to the deficit on the St. Lawrence Seaway. I should also like to refer to this. I do not think that either one of us objects to the deficit of the Seaway, but it is the most logical one to compare with the East Coast Marine Services. The St. Lawrence Seaway has a deficit of approximately $30 million, yet there has been no increase in tolls on the seaway. I find it rather interesting that the estimates for the seaway include an item allowing for an increase to the St. Lawrence Seaway Pilotage Authority. The increase, for some strange reason, almost equals the amount removed from the subsidy to the Newfoundland car ferry service and the Prince Edward Island car ferry service.

Senator Bonnell objected to a proposed increase in fares on the car ferries to P.E.I. and Newfoundland. His remarks, apparently, fell on deaf ears; indeed, those listening must have been wearing ear muffs because on Monday of this week the Minister of Transport announced fare increases. One-way fares for automobiles increased from $2.50 to $4.00 and passenger fares increased from 65 cents to $1.00. Fares for trailers doubled. Thus we have a 100 per cent increase—

Senator Rowe: Would the honourable senator permit a question at this point for the purpose of clarification? I am asking this in all sincerity.

Senator Phillips: Certainly.

[Senator Phillips.]

Senator Rowe: I understood the honourable senator to say that the Minister of Transport on Monday of this week announced an increase in fares. I did not hear the announcement, but I was told today that the announcement had not been made by the Minister of Transport but by the Canadian National Railways. Can the honourable senator confirm that the announcement was not made by the Minister of Transport but by the CNR? In my opinion, this is very important.

Senator Phillips: I realize the importance of the question of the Honourable Senator Rowe. I did not receive a copy of the announcement. I asked the Canadian Transport Commission for a copy, and the commission directed me to the Minister of Transport, stating that he had made the announcement. I hope that answer is helpful to the honourable senator.

Senator Flynn: One way or the other.

Senator Phillips: Yes, I agree, Senator Flynn, that it really does not matter who made the announcement; the increases are effective, nevertheless.

I was pointing out that the fares for trailers have increased 100 per cent, automobiles 60 per cent and passengers 50 per cent. Honourable senators, this would be an appropriate time to ask what happened to the Anti-Inflation Board? Employees of the CNR and the CNR ferries are subject to the regulations of the Anti-Inflation Board. Is it not reasonable to expect that the CNR ferries themselves should come under the control of the Anti-Inflation Board? Apparently, an effort was made to soften the blow of the increases by making them applicable only from mid-June to mid-September in the case of the Prince Edward Island car ferries. Following the middle of September the rates will revert to those presently in effect. The CNR is making hay while the sun shines, as the rates apply during the busy tourist traffic season.

Many of our tourists start out from Connecticut or Toronto and will make a tour down along the St. Lawrence through New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and then over to P.E.I. Midway through the tour the head of the household is not only counting the days that have elapsed, but is also looking at his wallet; and when he foresees that a $20 bill will be demolished on a trip over to P.E.I., he begins to have second thoughts. This is causing the government of P.E.I. and the P.E.I. tourist association a good deal of concern.

• (1430)

I understand that the rates have also been increased on the ferries to Newfoundland, and for some strange reason it costs more to run the Newfoundland car ferries on Saturday and Sunday than it does on Tuesday and Wednesday. The pay-as-you-go principle does not apply anywhere else in the CNR.

During the Easter recess the CNR made announcements concerning passenger train service in the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal area. As honourable senators know, passenger service has fallen off in this triangle, and a $30 million deficit has occurred. How does the CNR propose to meet this deficit? It is increasing the number of trains. If we had a deficit of this size in Atlantic Canada, the solution would be to simply eliminate the service. Yet in central Canada a deficit requires an increased service. Surely, if pay as you go works on the east coast it should also work in central Canada.

The number of trans-Canada trains is being reduced in order to avoid a subsidy to the railways. Surely, if it works within that narrow little triangle—Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto—it should also work from Winnipeg to Vancouver.

Many objections have been raised about the fact that the federal government utilizes the CNR to operate car ferries rather than set up a separate crown corporation for this purpose. In 1951 the Turgeon Royal Commission stated that the operation of car ferries was too closely related to CNR schedules; in other words, the CNR operated the car ferry when it was convenient to them. The Turgeon Commission further stated that there was little doubt that the car ferry service was unsatisfactory. It recommended the construction of a special car ferry for automobile traffic only. We have received a number of those and they are most helpful, but we still need additional automobile car ferries.

As Senator Bonnell pointed out, we urgently need a new icebreaking car ferry. The Abegweit went into service in 1947, and anything that takes the beating that the Abegweit has taken in nearly 30 years is reaching the end of its service.

On Monday of this week we received a brochure from the transportation council. The rather interesting brochure contained a number of items, one of which dealt with icebreaking techniques. There was a report on a new technique being used involving the blowing of air under the ice in advance of the icebreaker. That report is very optimistic and states that we can look forward to having the St. Lawrence Seaway open all winter. I find it rather strange that this technique was not instituted on the east coast in light of the fact that the federal government has an obligation under the British North America Act and the terms of union to provide year round service—and year round service does not mean a 15- to 20-hour delay, as often happens, particularly in the spring of the year. I am left wondering whether a single member of the transportation council realizes that the federal government has a constitutional obligation for icebreaking on the east coast.

Senator Bonnell raised the general question of CNR service in the Atlantic provinces. In the past, the Senate has heard a good many speeches—perhaps they are best described as lectures—on the necessity of rapid and economic transportation between the Maritimes and central Canada. We are always ready to point out that our natural trade pattern was along the seacoast to Boston, New York, and the West Indies. I do not intend to repeat those arguments. They were not successful in the past, and I do not expect a repetition would have any beneficial effect. However, I should like to refer to the various royal commissions that have investigated transportation problems. The royal commission of 1931 emphasized such problems as the operating efficiency of the railways and the problem of excess mileage. Competition and rates were treated from the national aspect rather than the regional aspect, as we preferred. The numerous commissions, however, were very much aware of the fact that their most urgent problem was one of reducing the deficit of the CNR and, as a consequence, our transportation problems continued. In 1951 we had the Turgeon Royal Commission, which summarized our position as follows:

In view of the deterioration in foreign trade, particularly because of monetary and commercial restrictions, access to the central Canadian market has become more important than ever. Isolation of the Maritimes from Central Canada areas as a result of distance and of increased freight charges is one of the central themes put forward in their case.

In 1961 another royal commission submitted its report. It was essentially the same; that is, that the federal government should alleviate freight inequities. However, that report went on to say that the previous subsidies had not achieved their objective, that competition to the CNR was forming and that the competition should receive consideration. The CNR interpreted that report as a ready means to withdraw its services and hope that its competition—that is, truck-trailers—would fulfil the needs of the Atlantic provinces, thereby making the failure of the CNR in that respect more acceptable.

• (1440)

Today there is within the Atlantic provinces a growing concern, which is echoed by the provincial governments, that the CNR is attempting to withdraw from some of their obligations. There have been a number of references to this fact in the Senate recently. Senator Rowe has referred to the Newfoundland situation; Senator Macdonald has referred to the service between Cape Breton and Halifax.

I find it interesting to observe the modus operandi of the CNR. Their objective seems to be to drive customers away. The CNR achieves this in two ways. First, they refuse to supply railway cars, especially if the railway car is of a specialized nature. The shipment of potatoes requires a reefer or heated car in the wintertime. Usually in November, the Prince Edward Island potato producers start reminding the CNR that a certain number of reefer cars will be required in February and March. In about March the CNR usually runs out of reefer cars and offers a substitute car. Sometimes they even have to take cattle cars from Western Canada into the Atlantic provinces. This serves two purposes: the cattle producer in Western Canada does not have a railway car, but has to turn to a truck-trailer; the potato producer cannot get a heated car for potatoes, so he has to turn to a truck-trailer. CNR have thus lost two customers. Normally, in private business the individual manager who lost customers would be fired, but in the CNR they promote the guy and give him a wage increase for losing customers.

Following the loss of the markets, the CNR then approaches the Canadian Transport Commission and says, "In 1970 we shipped so many cars over this line. In 1975 the number of cars had greatly reduced; the customers have gone somewhere else. Therefore, we would like to abandon the line." In the meantime they have let the railbed deteriorate, and they point to the huge expenditures involved in restoring the railbed. Meanwhile, the trucker moving goods by truck-trailer has turned to the provincial governments for the provision of a railbed in the form of a highway. The CNR does not object to this, but is indeed helpful in pointing out to the Canadian Transport Commission that truck traffic is available and they are quite willing to let the truck traffic deal with the situation.

I believe that on May 17 the provinces will be presenting the federal government with a brief dealing with transportation problems. I anticipate they will raise the question of compensation for the former rail traffic now moving over provincial highways. We can also anticipate that the federal government will say, "We cannot afford to keep up a highway and a railroad bed. Take your choice. You can have one or the other." The provinces will naturally be most interested in having compensation for maintaining the highways.

Honourable senators, this is all very well, but let us look to the future. What will happen five or ten years hence if all traffic moves over provincial highways? Will we have sufficient trucks to handle the situation? Senator Bonnell pointed out that to handle the Prince Edward Island potato harvest 21,000 trucks would be required compared with 8,000 rail cars. Ten years from now will we have the fuel to supply all these trucks? Yesterday the federal government announced a new energy conservation program. We are expected to cut back on our fuel consumption. Can we do this by eliminating the railroads? I very much doubt it, and I ask honourable senators to give serious consideration to this fact.

At the close of his remarks Senator Bonnell suggested that a Senate committee study the subject matter of this inquiry. I consider this to be a worthwhile subject for a committee study, and I would like to suggest that we bring down some of the CNR officials from Montreal and the Atlantic provinces to let them answer our detailed questions. It may be rather difficult to persuade these officials to come down, because they know the situation of the railroad and do not enjoy travelling on it.

Senator McDonald: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Phillips: Certainly.

Senator McDonald: A moment ago the honourable senator was referring to what appeared to be a pattern, not only of the CNR but, I would say, other railroads in Canada, to attempt to discourage traffic. He said that in many cases when the railroad discontinued a service he found that a new service was provided by the trucking industry. Could the honourable senator tell me if on some occasions the trucks that replace the railroad service are owned, directly or indirectly, by those same railroads?

Senator Phillips: I believe both the CNR and the CPR have subsidiary companies involved exclusively with trucking, and these very conveniently move in to pick up the traffic when a railway line has been abandoned.

On motion of Senator Rowe, debate adjourned.

MOTOR VEHICLE TIRE SAFETY BILL

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-8, respecting the use of national safety marks in relation to motor vehicle tires and to provide for safety standards for certain motor vehicle tires imported into or exported from Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another.

[Senator Phillips.]

Hon. Léopold Langlois moved that the amendments be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, before proceeding with the discussion of the proposed amendments, I would refresh your memories as to the history and original objectives of this bill, which was introduced in the Senate in its original form some two years ago as Bill S-3. After examination by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, and subsequent approval by the Senate, Bill S-3 was sent to the other place where it died on the Order Paper.

• (1450)

The measure was reintroduced in the Senate as Bill S-8 in October 1974, and passed. It received first reading in the other place in the course of the same month, and it received second reading on March 4 of this year.

Bill S-8 then went to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of the House of Commons, where a number of amendments were approved. However, the original objectives of the Motor Vehicle Tire Safety Bill have not been changed in the course of these last two years of work, and this legislation, when passed, will lead to increased safety for Canadian motorists and the prevention of unfair competition for the Canadian tire manufacturing industry. It will establish authority for the Governor in Council to prescribe standards for minimum tire safety requirements. These standards will be established for new tires manufactured in Canada, and also for all tires imported into this country.

Furthermore, the bill establishes a national tire safety mark. By use of this safety mark, tire manufacturers will be certifying that they have complied with the prescribed safety standards. Manufacturers and distributors will be prohibited from exporting, or sending or transporting from one province to another, motor vehicle tires to which the national safety mark has not been affixed. Manufacturers and importers will be required to give notice of any safety related tire defects of which they are aware. Bill S-8 prescribes the method by which this notice must be given.

The amendments made by the House of Commons to this bill number twelve in all. Although there was some criticism voiced in the other place of the work done in this chamber in relation to this bill, the amendments presently before us are not as important as has been claimed. Honourable senators will soon realize this on examination of each of them.

The first amendment is to line 8, on page 1, of the bill, which line is struck out and the following substituted therefor:

business of selling in more than one province or country to other persons, for

The only words added here are the words, "in more than one province or country". To my mind, this is merely an improvement on the original wording, with no substantial change.

The second amendment is to be found on page 3, where lines 1 and 2 are struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

national tire safety mark and, without restricting

This is another amendment which brings about some improvement to the wording only, with no substantial change. The only words struck out of the original text are "in relation to motor vehicle tires".

The third amendment is also to page 3, and it strikes out line 33, and substitutes "prescribe;". This is the only word which will remain on that line. The word which is removed is "and", but this is an insignificant improvement in the wording.

The fourth amendment again is to page 3, and by it lines 36 to 42 are struck out and the following substituted therefor:

factorer, that he establish a registration system by which any person who has purchased a motor vehicle tire manufactured by him and who wishes to be identified may be identified; and

(f) prescribe the kind of registration system to be established for the purpose of paragraph (e) and the manner in which it shall be maintained.

This amendment brings additional substance to that clause in that it substitutes for the words "record system" in the original text, the words "registration system". It is rather difficult to evaluate the importance of this amendment at this time since we are dealing, in this section of the bill, with the power of the Governor in Council to make regulations. Unless one has taken cognizance of the proposed regulations, one cannot distinguish between the importance of having a "registration system" instead of a "record system". This will depend, to a great extent, on the actual regulations which will be passed under this section of the bill. As I said previously, this amendment gives slightly more substance to the clause.

The fifth amendment is to page 4, and it strikes out line 4 and substitutes the following:

5. No manufacturer shall

If you look at page 4 of the bill, you will note that the only change is that the words "or distributor", which appear after "manufacturer", are removed, with the result that these prohibitions will only apply to the manufacturer, rather than the manufacturer or distributor as heretofore. This is the only change. I assume that if the amendment is concurred in, the marginal note will have to be amended, when the bill is put in its final form, by removing the words "or distributor".

Senator Flynn: They have forgotten about that.

Senator Langlois: It does not have to be done at this stage. It will be done when the measure is printed in the statutes. This requires no action by either chamber.

The sixth amendment is to page 5, and it strikes out line 3 and substitutes "into Canada;". The only change there is the removal of the word "and" after "into Canada;". This is an unimportant amendment. It is merely a question of wording, as the word "and" was obviously superfluous in that text.

● (1500)

Amendment number 7 is to page 5. It strikes out lines 25 to 31, and substitutes therefor the following:

(ii) the importer establishes a registration system by which any person who has purchased a motor vehicle tire imported by him and who wishes to be identified may be identified; and

(c) prescribing the kind of registration system to be established for the purpose of subparagraph (b) (ii) and the manner in which it shall be maintained.

This amendment is consequential upon amendment number 4, in which the "registration system" is substituted for the "record system" established in the original bill.

Amendment number 8 is also to page 5, where line 36 is struck out and replaced by "factorer or importer of a motor". Again, it is a question of a slight improvement in the wording of the clause which prescribes for notice of defects, and which gives the list of persons to which these notices should be given. The word "distributor" is removed, and that is the only change this amendment makes.

By amendment number 9, lines 1 to 5 on page 6 are struck out, and replaced by the following:

(a) any person who has obtained, for the purpose of sale or resale, a tire manufactured or imported by him.

(b) any purchaser of that tire of whom the manufacturer or importer of that tire has a record,

Again, this is merely an improvement in wording with no material change being involved.

Amendment number 10 strikes out line 11 on page 6, and substitutes therefor the following:

(a) be given by certified mail

This amendment is of no importance whatsoever as it merely alters the mailing method of the notice of defects.

I now pass on to amendment number 11, by which lines 1 and 2 on page 7 are struck out and replaced by the following:

any person who has been designated as an inspector pursuant to the Motor Vehicle Safety Act.

This amendment adds nothing at all and does not even improve the wording, because it merely refers to section 10 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, which says exactly the same thing as the original clause 10 of this bill. I see no purpose at all in this amendment, because it changes nothing. It seems to me to be an exercise in futility, but I suppose this is no reason for turning it down.

Amendment number 12, the last amendment, is also to page 7 of the bill, and by it line 14 is struck out and replaced by the following:

tion 4 or 7 that is to be offered for sale and that is owned by or situated on

The only words added are "to be offered for sale and". In my opinion, they do not add much to the meaning of the clause, but do improve the wording slightly.

That concludes my remarks on these amendments, honourable senators. I am at your disposal to supply further explanations if you feel I have not been clear enough in what I have said this afternoon. I am in the hands of the Senate, but I feel it is hardly worthwhile referring these amendments to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications for consideration. However, should any senator desire a more detailed discussion of these amendments, I suggest it might be appropriate to deal with them in Committee of the Whole. I would be in agreement with such a suggestion.

Senator Flynn: May I ask the Honourable Senator Langlois a question? I believe he pointed out that the only amendment of substance proposed by the committee of the other place was amendment number 4 to page 3 of the bill, which would have the effect of striking out lines 36 to 42 and substituting certain other lines. My memory fails me at the moment, and I do not have the bill before me, but what is it that the registration system would replace? It seems to me that it would be up to the purchaser to ask to be registered as the owner of a tire that he purchases, whereas before it would have been the manufacturer, or retailer, who would have been bound to keep records of all his sales. Is that the difference?

Senator Langlois: Yes. But, as I said in the course of my remarks, it is difficult to appreciate what the difference between the two systems will be since we are dealing with the power to make regulations only. Obviously, unless we have the regulations before us we cannot make that determination. It may well be that a record system could be just as good and as workable as a registration system. It might enlighten my honourable friend if I were to say that the original subclause 4 (1)(e) read as follows:

(e) require, as a condition of the use of the national tire safety mark by a manufacturer, that he establish and maintain, or cause to be established and maintained, a record system by which any person who has purchased a motor vehicle tire manufactured by him from him, from a distributor or from any subsequent vendor may be identified.

The only change is the substitution of the words "registration system" for "record system", and the real meaning of this change will come out only in the regulations. I do not know what is in the regulations, or indeed whether the regulations have yet been drafted, so it is pretty hard to appreciate why this change is made. It may be a better way of doing it, but we shall have to wait until we see the regulations.

● (1510)

Senator Flynn: I thank the deputy leader for his explanation. It seems to clarify matters in my mind, and I now see that it would be up to the purchaser, under the regulations, to register the tire he purchased if he wished to be identified; whereas under the original text the manufacturer had to keep the record as to whether the purchaser wanted to be identified or not.

Senator Langlois: But as I understand the legislation, if the manufacturer or importer does not so identify himself, he will not be able to use the national safety tire mark.

Senator Flynn: It is a protection given to the consumer eventually, but only if he wishes to be protected. In any event, we in the Senate have always been of the opinion that there is room for improvement with regard to what they do in the other place, and it is obvious they feel the same way. They have made a commendable effort, and I do not think we should criticize it too much, even though, on the whole, their effort may not be as important as they seem to think it is.

Senator Langlois: If I may hazard a last remark, I am in full accord with what my learned friend has just said. It is probable that this criticism from the other place stems from the stiff competition they have to meet from the Senate. It is recognized now all over Canada that the Senate is doing a splendid job, especially in its committee work. It is a good thing that this competition exists, and I hope it will increase. We have nothing to fear, as we are far from the position of being nose to nose with the other place in this respect.

Motion agreed to and amendments concurred in.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, April 29, 1976

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Recommendations, dated April 14, 1976, of the Anti-Inflation Board regarding suppliers of commodities or services who bargain collectively, together with Schedule.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 4, 1976, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put I should like to give the customary forecast of the work for the coming week, but let me say, first, that when we commenced Monday evening sittings some time before the Easter adjournment, the proposal was to test the new schedule until the Easter break. I think we can say that it worked very well, and enabled us to get through a heavy workload in committees, and it may well be that we shall find it necessary to resume Monday night sittings shortly.

I shall deal first with the committee meetings for next week. On Tuesday the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will meet at 9.30 a.m. to consider Senator McGrand's motion on crime and violence. The National Finance Committee will meet at 2 p.m. to consider its report on manpower. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has called a meeting for 2.30 p.m. to continue its study of the subject matter of Bill C-83, and the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has arranged to meet at 8.30 p.m.

On Wednesday the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will commence its examination of Bill C-58 at 9.30 a.m., and the Special Committee on Science Policy will meet at 3.30 p.m. or when the Senate rises. It is also possible that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will have to have an additional meeting on Wednesday afternoon. I shall refer to that proposed meeting later on.

On Thursday at 9.30 a.m. the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will hold another meeting to hear witnesses on Bill C-58, and the National Finance Committee will meet at the same hour for further consideration of its report on manpower.

In the Senate we shall continue with the second reading debate on Bill C-20, an act respecting citizenship, and other items on the Order Paper. In addition, we can expect to receive Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, as well as two other bills from the other place. It is also expected that two bills may be introduced in the Senate next week.

● (1410)

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Wednesday next, 5th May, 1976, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Senator Flynn: I did not hear. Is it only for next Wednesday?

Senator Langlois: It is for Wednesday afternoon. This is the proposed meeting that I referred to in my remarks.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF ARCTIC GAS PIPELINE—SUPPLY OF ARCTIC GAS TO SOUTHERN CANADA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a reply to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Austin on April 7 last regarding the construction of an Arctic gas pipeline. Honourable senators will recall that Senator Austin asked this question relating, as he said, to one aspect of government policy on the construction of an Arctic gas pipeline, namely, that of the time available to the government and to the country in which to make a decision as to whether to supply Arctic gas to southern Canada.

He asked the government because, as he said, he believed there was considerable public misunderstanding about the Canadian supply-demand situation as it affects the need to build an Arctic gas pipeline and, if there is such a need, the timing of introducing Arctic gas supplies to the rest of Canada.

I can say by way of reply that it is the government's intention to await the recommendations of both the Berger commission and the National Energy Board, and completion of other government studies, before further consideration is given to the construction of an Arctic pipeline.

On the question of natural gas supply, there are presently shortages only in respect of supply from fields in British Columbia and the Yukon Territories. As a result of these shortfalls, exports to the United States are periodically curtailed. There are presently no shortages in respect of supply from fields elsewhere in Canada to domestic or export markets.

OIL AND NATURAL GAS RESERVES—NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND GOVERNMENTS OF PRODUCING PROVINCES—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer, which I think makes very clear on the record the government's position with respect to the timing for a decision concerning construction of an Arctic gas pipeline.

The document tabled by the leader yesterday, entitled, "An Energy Strategy for Canada—Policies for Self-Reliance," is an excellent conceptual outline of that strategy, and I should like to ask a question with respect to it. Can the Leader of the Government give some assurance to this chamber, and to those in Canada who are responsible for activities in the energy industry, that there will be aggressive negotiations between the federal government and the producing provinces so as to allow a cash flow of the kind required by the private sector to explore for and discover the oil and gas reserves that are indicated as being required by the report?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can inform the members of this chamber that there have been active discussions in cabinet about this matter. As honourable senators may be aware, there will be meetings and conversations with provincial representatives later this week, and there is a possibility that the government's position will be articulated at that time. At present I am unable to provide details.

Senator Flynn: It is just a possibility.

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I would like to add this, by way of a supplementary question. I believe the Government of Ontario has a legitimate concern in terms of the addition of cash flows to exploration so that the private sector can find the reserves that are so badly needed in eastern Canada. I wonder whether the federal government will give attention to that particular concern in its dealings with the Province of Alberta and its claims regarding provincial royalties and otherwise with respect to the cash flow arising from oil and gas in Alberta.

Senator Perrault: I can assure the members of this chamber that the government is acutely aware of the need to provide sufficient incentives for continued exploration of oil and natural gas resources in this country. At the same time the critical matter of the public interest has to be taken into consideration, and that is the question faced by the government at this time.

Senator Austin: I certainly want to see that the federal government makes sure that the Conservative government of Ontario and the Conservative government of Alberta do not squabble too much over the public interest.

OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS RESOURCES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—QUESTION

Senator Greene: Could the Leader of the Government inform the house as to the progress being made between the federal government and the governments of the Atlantic provinces with respect to the development of offshore oil and gas resources in those provinces?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take this question as notice. I have no recent progress report on the developments in this area. However, I should like to repeat that the government is actively concerned with the development of domestic oil resources in every way.

Senator Flynn: That is good. That is a very good answer.

DEVELOPMENT OF TIDAL POWER IN BAY OF FUNDY—QUESTION

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government, in view of the increasing importance of energy supplies, what the present status is of studies with reference to the development of tidal power in the Bay of Fundy.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice as well. I am sure the reply will be of interest to all of us when it comes. As honourable senators are aware, there is a concerted effort by the government to diversify development in this country of alternative energy sources of all types, including solar energy, tidal power, coal-fired thermal power, atomic-fired thermal units, and so on; but I must take that question as notice in order to provide a more detailed reply.

TRANSPORTATION

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Bonnell calling the attention of the Senate to the British North America Act as it pertains to transportation.—(Honourable Senator Rowe).

Senator Rowe: If I may, I should like to ask that this order stand.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. On Wednesday, April 7, I asked that this inquiry should be set down as the first item on the Orders of the Day for that day and for each succeeding day thereafter. I should like to thank honourable senators for allowing this and for their support of my motion. I should also like to thank the Clerk of the Senate for having it placed properly in the Minutes of the Proceedings.
